The Late Rev. C. H. SPURGEON wrote in The Sword and Trowel:—"There is great wealth of information in this well-condensed, well-written book. Think of 587 miles of passages of CATACOMBS! The CATACOMBS have been a hiding-place for truths as well as for martyrs, and the sermons in stones which have been there preserved preach very forcibly against certain errors of the apostate church. Half-a-crown will bring a large return if spent upon this book."

"Here is a slashing book, which leaves no need for a second stroke. These sermons in stones (the monumental inscriptions in the Catacombs) are then used to prove in a relentless and unchallengeable fashion the wholesale departures from primitive Christianity by the modern Church of Rome. ROMANISM is baptized PAGANISM. And we entirely endorse the judgment. In these days, when Romanism is being stealthily spread among us, this book ought to be scattered in thousands all over the land."—Presbyterian Messenger.

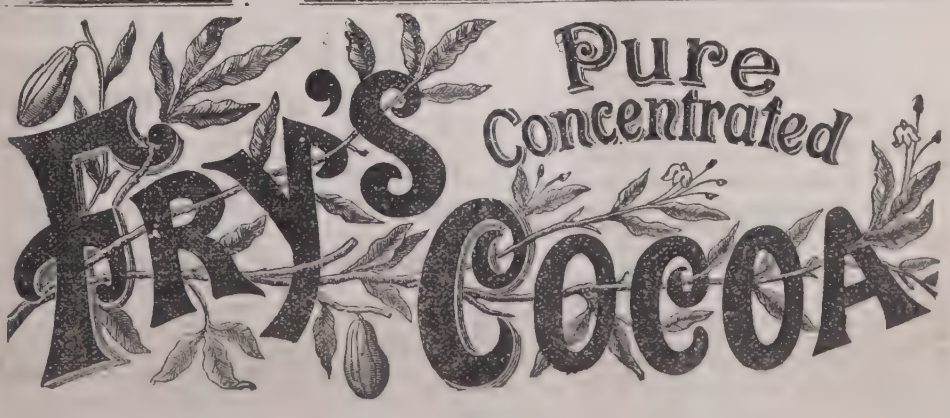
After Influenza.



The resultant weakness of this depressing complaint will surely disappear if a short course of Guy's Tonic be resorted to. Guy's Tonic increases the appetite, strengthens the stomach, regulates the liver, gives tone to the nervous organization, and by imparting vitality, strength, and energy to the entire muscular and mental systems, makes the feeble and delicate vigorous, robust and strong. The weary brain, the languid nerve, and the prostrate muscular frame receive support and capacity for renewed exertion.

The Rev. E. CORNEILLE, writing from the Manse, Donegal, Ireland, says:—"I have derived wonderful benefit from the Guy's Tonic you sent me. After taking a first bottle I ordered a second, and since I have finished that bottle I have been free from indigestion. I have recommended it to several members of my congregation, and they have experienced great good from its use."

Mr. W. H. GLEDHILL writes from Leeds:—"I beg to inform you that being a sufferer from what is generally termed Indigestion, have found great relief after taking a course of Guy's Tonic. I suffered severely from dizziness, headache, and a general feeling of weariness and uneasiness. I am pleased and very grateful to say these symptoms seem to have completely gone."

TO ANY ONE DESIRING to test our remedies, we will send, securely packed in a special box, a bottle of Guy's Tonic, together with a free sample box of Guy's Fruit Pills and complete "Guide to Digestion," containing simple instructions as to the Guy's Tonic Treatment, post paid, for 2s. 9d. Address all letters to Guy's Tonic Company, 4, Ludgate-circus, London, E.C. Guy's Tonic is sold retail of all Chemists, at 2s. 9d. per bottle, and Guy's Fruit Pills at 1s. 1½d. per box.

"I speak to those of you who are engaged in the Master's work. We live in an age when the errors we have to counteract are real, doubtless real. I believe errors do usually spring from the land of unreality. You find a man unsound in doctrine is usually some literary man, who is doing nothing for Christ. Send him into the New Cut, among the costermongers; give him a class to teach in the Sunday-school, gathered from the arabs of the street; and he will have to fall back on the old-fashioned gospel, that foolishness of preaching by which it pleases God to save them that believe. When we get into the real world around us, we want to have a real gospel and a real Christ; and oh, we who dwell in London, in times so practical, when sin is so intensely sinful, when 'life is real, life is earnest,' are we not compelled to fall back on the real truth, the real doctrines, and, above all, on the real person of the real Christ, and the real presence of that Christ in the midst of the Church, if we are to have anything like power to deal with the souls of men?"—Extract.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-rd., London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become Mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions—

1. For the General Fund; the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund; a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For law expenses; in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

Bankers:

London and Westminster, Bloomsbury Branch, 218, Holborn.

CONTRIBUTIONS will be received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, at the office of The Christian, or by Henry Thompson, Esq., Treasurer, 38, Mincing Lane, E.C.; Wm. Hornibrook, Secretary, 17, Bloomsbury Street, New Oxford Street, W.C.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Canon Brooke, r nearly half a century Protestant rector of rishes in county Down, Ireland.

The "February Simultaneous Meetings," e being held this week and next (Feb. 8-19) the Southern and Midland Counties, for vakening and deepening interest on behalf Foreign Missions. Though inaugurated d worked by the Church Missionary ciety, these meetings are not, as ordinary eetings, for the support of any one society; t the special aim is to press home on the urches, and upon individual Christians, the rd's claim on the sympathy and active par-ipation of each in the great work of angelising the heathen. It is hoped that all 10 look for His appearing, and would hasten will, according to their ability, attend ese meetings in a spirit of believing prayer, at so a rich blessing may fall on the Church home and the workers abroad.

It is stated in the Romanist organs that rangements are being completed at the atican for the foundation of a new mission Africa. Exception is taken to the arrange-ents under which, up to the present time, e Protestant missionaries have been left in disputed possession of the field in the Re-blic of Liberia, and nearly four years have en spent in negotiations with the autho-ies of the country for the authorisation of Romish mission. It is asserted that they have length been successfully terminated, and at four priests will soon take up the work. here is, therefore, now another strong reason r renewed zeal in mission-work in the strict in question.

It is remarkable that so many of the mem-rs of the Anglican sisterhoods should go er to Rome. At least two communities ve gone ever bodily, and it is now announced at a sisterhood, known as "The Sisters of e Faith," has been dissolved formally, the ason not being given. It is to be hoped, erefore, that its members have not followed e example of the community who now form e Roman society at East Grinstead.

We are glad to observe that the Oxford ty Council has decided against the Broad-reet site for the Newman statue. No stone s been left unturned to set up the offensive onument in the midst of an unwilling people. he purpose of the Romanist and Ritualist omoters is obvious; and those members of e Council who belong to neither section of e community, but who, through want of prin-ple or through religious weakness, supported e obnoxious proposal, should be reckoned th in due course by the citizens. If the Pro-stants of the city bestir themselves, they ay yet advance sound political and religious ews among the people, even although the welcome statue may be raised in some oroughfare less objectionable than the one first suggested.

The British Weekly, in its leading article on r. Spurgeon, thus records its adherence to s Scriptural teaching on the Fatherhood of od:—

> There is a very prevalent notion that the doctrine a universal Fatherhood, as often preached, springs om a truer charity and is more comforting than the old way of teaching that God is the Father of his children through faith. A man says: "God is the Father of the East-end of London," and thinks he has uttered a consoling truth. What Mr. Spurgeon felt was that the Fatherhood of God must mean a great deal more than that. In a sense God is the Father of the most degraded, but what does that come to? Before we know the Fatherly nature the Son must reveal it, and, if we dare to say it, there is something beyond that. The going out of the Divine Heart to poor, lost, guilty creatures, is an expression of the lower deep of love in God's own being, and means something—means everything for as many as receive it. It is not the cold comfort, the unsheltering shadow of an empty phrase.

We thank our contemporary for so clear a condemnation of the leading current fallacy, and for its testimony that the Fatherhood of God, to those who are his children in Christ Jesus, is "not the cold comfort, the unsheltering shadow of an empty phrase," such as "the Universal Fatherhood of God."

The appearance of a book called "The Imitation of Buddha" may possibly please those who are apparently ever more ready to appreciate the beauties and the wisdom of some non-Christian religion and religious books than of Christianity and the Bible. In Buddhistic literature there may be great truths gracefully expressed, and bearing a superficial resemblance to Scripture. But are they anything more than mere pious sentiments? Have they had a purifying and elevating influence upon the life? No amount of medicine such as this book prescribes—however skilfully the ingredients may be blended, or however carefully the doses may be regulated—will ever restore fallen humanity to spiritual health and strength. The all-powerful tonic of Divine motive-power has no place in the Buddhistic pharmacopœia.

It is with pain that we observe the degree of contempt shown by many Europeans in India, not only for Christianity, but also for its beneficent institutions. An esteemed correspondent calls our attention to announcements in a newspaper circulating in the North-west Provinces, giving details of horse-racing fixtures on the Lord's Day, in Calcutta and Lahore. He writes:—

> As Britons, we are supposed to believe in God, and gratefully to own his unmerited favour to Britain, which has been so highly favoured these many centuries. All labour on the Lord's Day, in connection with the public works and other departments, was long since prohibited in India; but if educated men in any grade of society are allowed with a high hand to dishonour God's holy command before the heathen, and irreverently refuse to "remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy," can any one doubt that the crime will be punished in God's own way and time?
> This impropriety should not be permitted in British territory—it is even contrary to the Articles of War; and it is, indeed, a sad reflection that any of our countrymen in India are able to throw off all restraint and can act in a way they would not venture to do in the Fatherland! Often have the heathen asserted that Britain's sons and daughters in Hindostan have no religion; and it is painful to think that in December, 1891, such a dishonour has been brought on the holy name and cause of God.

We sincerely trust that this protest will be seconded by many others, which shall be duly regarded in influential quarters; so that those who go to India with the Gospel may not have to endure the taunt that irreligious practices are winked at, and even patronised, by Europeans who, in early life, enjoyed Christian training and Sabbath blessings.

While thankfully rejoicing in the spread of elementary education, in the introduction of a national system, which goes far to secure to every child a fair acquaintance with the "three R.'s," earnest and thoughtful men have ever received with wise reserve the sanguine anticipations, somewhat freely and loudly expressed, that vice must vanish with ignorance, and that general education would usher in the decadence of crime. All who know something of the human heart, as it is by nature, are well aware that only "an inward and spiritual change" can supply power for newness of life; that, in fact, no amount of mental cultivation will regenerate the moral nature. The education which is radically to reform a people must find its basis in the moral law and in the Gospel of God.

Our contemporary goes on to show that offences against morals "have increased to an alarming extent." We fully and heartily agree with a recent writer in The Times when he adds:

> It is not easy to calculate the benefit which comes from the mere fact that for a few years, at the most impressionable time of life, the children of the poorest get their education, not solely at the street corners, or in the sordid surroundings of their homes, but partly in an airy schoolroom. What a measureless advantage it is that habits of personal cleanliness, conducing to self-respect, are enforced! We are not supporting a paradox, but, on the contrary, combating one, in drawing attention to facts, part of the very alphabet of moral statistics, which show that the spread of education, as school boards understand it, has but little to do with the direct repression of crime.

The lesson surely repeats itself with growing urgency, that the well-being of our nation as well as that of individuals demands the earnest and faithful dissemination of that Word which alone "maketh wise unto salvation," for now as ever it is "righteousness that exalteth a people."

While commenting on these facts we do not forget there is another side to the question. The latest report of "H.M. Commissioners of Prisons," now lying on our table, shows by figures that there has been a "remarkable decrease in the prison population since 1877," while the report of the "Directors of Convict Prisons" enlarges on this diminution of crime, and shows that in consequence thereof "no less than eight convict prisons, containing accommodation for upwards of six thousand prisoners, have, since 1882, been assigned to other public purposes." Thus education and Christian effort are evidently producing real result; but, on the other hand, offences committed by educated persons have in certain districts, at least, increased in number. Facts like these ought to be noted and pondered by all who seek the good of the nation, so that wherever that teaching based on the Word of God fails to penetrate, more active measures may be taken to introduce its wondrous message in all its power and potency.

Amongst devout believers these facts are fairly well understood, but the glowing predictions with which many welcomed the Education Act revealed that this force was by no means generally grasped. The Times has commended to "people of an optimist temperament" a report issued by the Chief Constable of Manchester on the relation of crime and education. Summarised tersely, this report shows that crime "has apparently decreased," and that the decrease is "largely attributable to the operation of the Education Acts." This seems satisfactory, but as The Times says:—

> The Chief Constable of that city states some facts which put a very different colour upon the matter. Never in Manchester, he remarks, was there a time when crimes were so frequently committed by persons of good education as now. "Hardly a day passes that letters are not received complaining of 'long firm' frauds, which are rampant in all parts of the country, and all of which require the ingenuity and dexterity which are alone given by good education." The majority of such cases are hushed up, but the Chief Constable offers to produce instances of persons in good position having committed such crimes, and then absconded, or made restitution or otherwise obtained condonation for their offences. The Recorder of Liverpool has also been speaking to much the same effect as his brother Recorder.

The proprietors of a number of theatres and music-halls, which were closed on the night of the funeral of the Duke of Clarence, were not slow to take credit for the arrangement; but it now appears that at most of them the wages of the employes were stopped for the day. One of these places is owned by a company, and the dividend for some time back has been at the rate of twenty-six per cent., yet the same practice obtained there, the already low wages of a large number of girls and others being reduced by a few shillings, in consequence of the directors resolving to pay what was announced as "a mark of respect to the late Duke." This needs no comment.

"The Religious Condition of the People."

BY Rev. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

No. III.

If your readers are not already sated of this subject, the writer may be allowed in another paper to make some explanatory statements, not in a controversial tone, as to some remarks on the previous papers, to which his attention has been called. He is one of the many sufferers from the prevailing disease, and writes in a somewhat unfit condition, hoping that your readers will bear with him, rather than wait longer. The subject is a very large as well as a very important one, and it is not easy, when writing for those who are strangers, to avoid the use of language that may be misleading to them. May I notice separatim some of the many queries addressed to me, either in public or private, most of them very kindly in tone, and some accompanied by the gift of pamphlet or book, which I may, perhaps, be permitted to acknowledge here?

I. One query appears so frequently in the letters as to lead me to fear I must have been vague in what I said about the subject. While holding as strongly as any of my correspondents the distinction between the world and the Church of Christ, I hold that all who are born again belong to the one and all who have not been born again belong to the other. Now, knowing where we are, No. 1, the Church of Christ is one thing; No. 2, the churches of Christ are quite another, embracing all professed believers; and No. 3, the world. No. 3, may be used in two senses, (a) as opposed to the first, because unregenerate, and (b) as opposed to the second as making no profession of Christianity. "The people," again (I began by complaining of the title given to the articles, for this reason, but not for this only), may be understood as embracing 2 and 3, or embracing 1, 2, and 3; or possibly by some as 3 only. Only the context can decide in each case what is meant; and I probably should have been more careful in observing the distinctions referred to. May I say that the correspondent who signs himself A Lapsed-Masser would not be put into that category by me.

II. I also quite agree with one of your correspondents in the low view of the Church (No. 2) that he entertains; with another, who has for thirty-four years been preaching that the Church (I don't know what he means, but I mean both Nos. 1 and 2) is largely responsible for the state of things; with another, still, that the people or the nation (Nos. 2 and 3) have never been at the feet of Christ; and I should like to add that one of the greatest works laid on believers to-day is to preach to the Church itself (No. 1) a new life of much deeper holiness, much fuller faith, and much more earnest work. When I have written, then, about bringing back the nation to the feet of Christ, what was meant was only that, comparatively speaking, there have been times, in this or other countries, when they were much more at the feet of Christ than they are now. It is not that there has ever been, or shall ever be, a time when absolutely all in a nation shall be converted souls; for even in Millennial times, as I read the passage in Isaiah, there shall be one in a hundred who shall deserve to be called a sinner (I don't mean that this percentage is to be universal, by any means!). But there have been small societies, in the Valleys, in the Scotch glens, in Huguenot villages, where the people were practically all born again; and it is where, in a country like Scotland, or a district near Bristol, or in some of Fox's haunts, the people (No. 3, a and b) are now so godless, immoral, and intemperate, that we write of them as fallen away from God and from the churches of Christ.

III. Some friends, again, who write appear to have made so much of their own specialities, as to give to these undue importance as causes of the evil of the times. Questions as to Sabbath keeping, and as to which day of the week ought to be kept, are no doubt important, especially in the mode of treatment they are susceptible of receiving; but I do not think the church at large (No. 2) will see the importance of that application to the present matter.

IV. Others, again, remind me that I have touched on both cause and effect in discussing the present state of things, and have not clearly distinguished, which of the two I was writing of at the moment. I confess to the haziness to some extent, and can only plead the rapidity with which my work was originally done, and the small leisure that I can generally command to revise it. But the fact is, that after a state of things has gone on for a time within a nation, action and reaction work so together, and cause and effect become so intermingled, that they cannot be separated. Does a dead church (No. 2) make a covetous and intemperate village; or does the village drag down the church? Or do they both interlace and go back from God together? In most cases we must be content to state the facts to be observed, wisely and fairly, and then take much time to observe their mutual bearing.

V. Let me raise a warning voice against the well-meant confidence with which one of the correspondents urges, that there can be no danger of the candlestick of Great Britain being removed. Are we very far from a time when the candlestick of a pure Protestant Church may be virtually removed from Ireland? Will any man who knows what Alexandria and what Carthage once were, deny that the cases are largely parallel; and will any Christian man assert that the conduct of our people for many years has not deserved it? Happily, God's dealings with us are not on the ground of desert; but to act on such a thought is surely a presumptuous sin!

VI. With the appeal made by correspondents to make earnest effort against the flood of Intemperance and Popery I most thoroughly agree. I hope friends will not forget the faithful and God-fearing men who have led the van—sometimes, I fear, on lines that have been too political, but something can be said for that, too; and another part of the movement under the admirable management of my friend, Dr. Guinness, and his able wife, who have made, and (thank God!) are still making, an attack on both these evils. And I hope, as these past efforts should not be forgotten, men will not be too confident that new recruits will do so much more than the veterans have done. But let all buckle to the important work. I am willing to confess that the chief defect of my earlier papers is that I ought to have insisted more strongly on the doing of work; the buckling on of armour; and the striking in at the side of those who are in the thick of the battle. God prosper them! and give them many more at their side!

VII. But do not let us begin with the idea which (surely by a slip) one correspondent suggests, that a Revival by the Spirit of God is something which we have no part in bringing, while we have it in our power to labour. Have prayer and have faith nothing to do with bringing the full outpouring of the Spirit of God? Without Him, remember—nothing! Without prayer and faith, He does not work! It may be said that without Him there is no faith and no prayer! Here again we meet one of those mysteries of God which are only solved in experience. Go to your knees; keep on your knees; trust God; tell Him you trust Him; keep on trusting; and the result is that you, at all events, are revived in soul!

VIII. Another correspondent has put into words what I had been inwardly revolving, that I might be supposed at least to have leaned to pessimism when the remedial part of my subject was dealt with. I certainly did not so mean it. Beyond the three alternatives in the future, I do not know any other. Work on the present lines, by the same people and a few more, with the same spirit—we have seen what they have done; and we see, I think, which way the tide in this country is flowing. The alternatives are still three.

Are they "very disappointing," as one of your correspondents writes? Is it disappointing to look for a great revival from the Spirit of God? Does not that depend on the faith with which it is asked and expected? I should say it is not a disappointing remedy, and it is within our power to obtain, if the sustained, entreating, persistent cry of the Church (No. 1) go up to the Father.

Is it in vain to warn, to threaten the disappearance of the great Protestant light, which has long been here in Britain, on the candlestick which has given light to the ends of the earth? Is it so unlikely that the Church of Rome should yet come to rule over King, Lords, and Commons? Read the laments over the two able men who have but lately put aside the robes of a prince to appear in the presence of God! Read that remarkable book (say of it what men will, and make from it what deductions men may, on the score of wisdom or even on the ground of veracity—for it must come to that), Lord Robert Montagu's "Recent Events, and a Clue to their Solution." Think over the proposal to have a statue of Newman in the same street in Oxford as holds the statues of the martyrs put to death by the Church of Rome! Take into account that Bill, defunct for the time, but ready to appear again, backed by the venerable leader of the Liberal party, to allow the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland to be held by a Papist; for what purpose is that done? Read the most recent of all the magazines, and almost the most popular, The Review of Reviews; and read, as I was able to do when the Review began, the little book of Mr. Stead's visit to Rome; watch for the next number of the said Review, and what it says about the Cardinal just departed; and even a blind man will be able to see for himself. There is danger nearer and greater than most of us suppose!

IX. As for the coming of Christ—the Promise of God and the Hope of his people. It may not have been always used rightly, or always spoken of reverently; we may have been often too confident and too clamant on the one side! But what of the other side—formerly and now? And what saith the Word?

"Comfort one another with these words."

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

New Year among the young in Bethnal Green has been shaded with much solemnity. There has been sickness and death in many homes. We entertained a thousand young people in seven different parties. Each guest received either a warm garment, book, or gift suited to age and sex.

Among the company were sixty-six cripples, who live around our Mission House—little sorrowful lives, half starved, but much loved by their poor relatives, many of whom were carried to the Home to enjoy a meal, and see the pictures. Most of the thousand carried back a portion of the fare for either mother or baby. Most evenings the popular story of "Poor Joe" was recited, and as the varied scenes in this history of a drunkard's son were depicted on the screen, many a young heart shed tears, proving to us that to them it was an "ow're true tale."

To us the month has been full of privileged service, and now the strain is to help hundreds of poor starvelings through the next two months with soup, bread, coals, clothing, and blankets. Workers at the Canadian Home describe a happy time, some 130 grown-ups bringing independently their Christmas gifts, as they come for a three days' visit. The opportunity was used for their spiritual welfare. It is the cheering side of the work to observe the changes in the young men and women growing up industrious and intelligent citizens of the Dominion. As the means warrant us, we give similar chances to hopeless orphans in this struggling mass for food and life.

HAMBURG.—The annual meeting of the English Reformed Church in this city was held on Wednesday evening last week, Rev. J. D. Kilburn, the pastor, in the chair. Revs. C. F. Weidemann, M.A., J. C. Aston, and Arnold Frank, also Baron von Oertzen, Messrs. Renton, Ogilvy Jones, Cargill and Harvey, took part in the meeting, which was the first held in the new church, and was of a helpful and interesting character.

THE GOD-WARD ASPECT.

EXODUS XVIII.

When the Israelite host had left Rephidim, they began to climb up from the coast of the Red Sea into the heart of the mountain range of Sinai. Their route has been compared to a stair of rock. Before them, through the pure air, floated the majestic cloud, leading them they knew not whither. They only knew that they had no option but to follow, their supply of manna and water depended on absolute obedience to its movement. And on either side rose the cliffs of red sandstone, like the walls of some mighty temple, to the Holy of Holies of which they were ever approaching. It was apparently on the route that the incident reported in this chapter took place. For the words, "at the mount of God," will probably refer to the entire region. Tidings in the desert fly fast, and the aged priest, in the fastnesses of Midian, had been kept fully informed of the wonderful series of events of which his relative had been the centre. When, therefore, tidings came of the arrival of the vast host in the vicinity of Sinai, he took Zipporah, his wife, and his two sons, who had been entrusted to his care, and brought them unto Moses. After the customary profuse Oriental salutations, they spoke long and admiringly of the way in which the Lord had led his people. And the day closed with a solemn feast and sacrifice. The morrow seems to have been a rest day. The cloud did not move forward, but remained stationary, as if moored by an invisible cable, and spreading itself out as a refreshing canopy from the burning heat of the sun. And on that day an incident took place which was destined to have important issues on the history of the great leader as well as of the people whom he led. "It came to pass on the morrow that Moses sat to judge the people, and the people stood about Moses from the morning unto the evening."

Moses' Habitual Practice.—We get a sudden glimpse here into the kind of life which Moses at this time was leading. When the host encamped, and there was a day at liberty from the weariness of the march, he seems to have sat on a judgment seat to which all the people came who had any disputes, or grievances, or matter about which they desired to obtain advice and Divine counsel. Despite all their murmurings they looked upon him as the organ for the voice of God, and sought from his lips an authoritative declaration of the Divine will. To use his own words, when the people had a matter, they came unto him to inquire of God, and he made them know the statutes of God and his laws.

It was a Divine work, sufficient to engross his noblest powers, and to tax resources which had been stored up within him through long years of waiting; for what is higher in all this world than to serve as the interpreter of whom Job speaks, "One among a thousand, who can show unto man what is right for him"? To hear the difficulties, perplexities, and hard questions of the anxious and troubled, to inquire for them to God, to bring their causes to his bar for judgment, and to his mercy-seat for help, to come back to them to teach them, to show them the way in which they should walk, and the work they should do—this is employment which were worthy of the delicacy and strength of an angel's love, and most nearly approaches the ministry of the Redeemer. This blessed work of mediatorship was not borne by Moses as a Priest, for as yet the Priesthood was not constituted, but as a large-hearted, noble man, who was at leisure from himself, and had the ear of God. "He was for the people to God-ward." And it opens up a very interesting vista of service for us all, especially for those who are intimate with the king, and habituated to the royal court. Why should not we enter more largely into participation with Moses in this delightful service, which is open to those who are slow of speech equally as to those who are golden-mouthed; and affords opportunities for the very powers which most shrink from the glare of publicity and the gaze of men?

We can imagine him going to God each day with long lists of questions for one and another of the mighty host. This and the other cause he laid before Him for counsel, quoting names and circumstances, arguments and reasons on either side, and waiting for the message which he was to carry back. What variety! What directness! What reality must have pervaded his prayers! How vividly must he have realised that he was, indeed, in partnership with the Most High, a fellow-worker and yoke-fellow, and that they had a common interest in the people whom they loved. Why should not we also begin to live such a life? The voice that spake to him speaks to us, "Be thou for the people to God-ward, and bring thou their causes unto God." And the gates through which he passed and repassed stand open day and night.

We often wonder at Luther, who spent three hours each day in prayer and meditation; at Bishop Andrewes spending the greater part of five hours every day in fellowship with God; at John Welsh, who thought that day ill spent which did not witness eight or ten hours of closet communion. It seems to us as if such prolonged praying must involve an endless monotony of vain repetitions. We forget that when men are sent to market with a host of commissions from their neighbours and friends, they must needs tarry longer than when they go only for themselves. It would be a very wholesome thing if the causes of others were to detain us more constantly before the Lord.

This being for the people to God-ward became more and more characteristic of the life of Moses. Whenever the people cried unto him, he prayed unto the Lord. When the spirit of revolt spread through the camp, he fell upon his face. When it seemed likely that the whole nation must perish for their sin, he stood in the breach, and besought the Lord, and turned away the destruction that hung over them like a lurid cloud. For twice forty days their interests detained him in the holy mount. And in long after years he is classed with Samuel as one who had stood before God for his people.

What a striking type is this of our Lord Jesus, though at the best there is a marvellous gulf between the two. For Moses was faithful over God's household as a servant, but Christ as a Son, whose house are we. All that Moses did He will do, and more. When we have a matter let us go to Him. He is for us to God-ward, and will bring our causes to God. Through Him we may inquire of God; and he will make us know (for the responsibility of making us know is on him, and if one way will not suffice we may trust Him to adopt another) the statutes of God and his laws; and will show us the way in which we should walk and the work that we must do.

Moses' Expenditure.—Work like this cannot be done without severe expenditure of all that is most vital to man. It drains the sympathies, taxes the brain, wearies the heart, charged with the anxieties and sorrows, the burdens and needs of a throng of perplexed and troubled souls. You cannot save others and save yourself as well. Virtue cannot go forth to heal without your becoming conscious of the drain. You can only comfort others when you understand them, and you cannot understand them till you have given yourself away to them. But the effort to do this costs you all that you are worth to some other soul. And it therefore became apparent to the keen eye of Jethro's loving solicitude that both Moses and the people were being worn away in his attempt to meet all their demands.

In after years Moses himself seems to have broken down under the burden. "And Moses said unto the Lord, Wherefore hast Thou afflicted thy servant? And wherefore have I not found favour in thy sight, that Thou layest the burden of all this people upon me? Have I conceived all this people? Have I begotten them that Thou shouldst say unto me, Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing father beareth the sucking child, unto the land which thou swarest unto their fathers?" Moses did not feel that strain now when Jethro spoke, for it was as yet fresh on him, but it was, nevertheless, sapping his strength, and Jethro remarked it.

We do not always see the cost at which we are doing our work. We are sustained by the excitement and interest of our work. The stir, the rush, the cry of the combatants, the chances and opportunities of the battle, the alluring form of victory, to be won at the price of just one more effort—all these things conceal from us the expenditure of our reserves, which is patent enough to others. Some men get weary of forbearing; they cannot live slowly; they must expend themselves, pouring their lives out as a libation from a bowl. And it is an act of benevolence when some Jethro is prompted to interpose and suggest a mitigation of the fever, a slackening of the eager rush. The Jethros seldom prevail with us. They get scant thanks for their pains. We have to learn by some terrible collapse. But they have, at least, deserved well by us.

From man, breaking down under the weight of human care imposed on his heart by his fellows, let us turn to the true Priest and Brother of Man, into whose ear is being poured one incessant stream of complaint and sorrow, of care, and need, and sin. It is as if all the letters, deposited in all the receiving boxes of England year by year, were directed to one man, who must open and answer them all himself. But even that illustration gives an utterly inadequate idea of all that devolves on our dear Master Christ, whose heart is the receptacle of all the anguish, sorrow, and soul-travail of mankind.

Thank God, there is no fear of his breaking down under the strain. He faints not, neither is weary, because He combines with a woman's sympathy and delicacy of touch and insight, all the patience and strength of the Divine. But do we sufficiently realise the cost at which, through the ages, He is exercising his ministry on our behalf? Think ye not that the festal processions of the glorified often halt upon their way, like that which stayed on the shoulder of Olivet, because the king is in tears! He is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities."

Moses' Assent to Jethro's Proposal.—It cannot be God's will that any of his servants should wear away. He knows our frame too well to overtax its frail machinery. No hard taskmaster is He, driving his slaves beyond the limit of human endurance. The burden of responsibility which He lays upon their shoulders may be heavy, but it is not too heavy. The engagements which He assigns for each day may be many, but not too many for its working hours. The souls committed to their charge may be numbered by thousands, but they are not more than can be overlooked and shepherded.

Whenever the demand on heart or brain or hand becomes excessive, and loving eyes anxiously scan the probability of the workman being able to sustain it, they may be sure that, if the work is really part of God's plan, there are reserves of strength, which the worker himself had not realised, and which will answer to his call, in that the God of all strength and grace is prepared to reinforce his failing energies out of the plenitude of his resources. The bell never summons a servant to a duty concerning which God does not say to him, My grace is sufficient for thee; as thy day so shall thy strength be.

Sometimes God's workers make the mistake of burdening themselves with work which others could do as well as themselves, and, indeed, would be the better for doing. This seems to have been the case with Moses. He appeared to think that he alone could judge, manage, and administer the affairs of Israel. And this monopoly of the administration was working adversely. It was overtaxing himself; it was wearing out the people; it was delaying the course of justice, and it was allowing a large amount of talent to lie unused. Jethro's advice was therefore most timely, that he should provide out of all the people able men, with the three important qualifications, that they should fear God, love truth, and hate unjust gain. These were to deal with the small matters, whilst the greater ones were still brought to himself.

Moses has been blamed for doing this. It has been said that if he had trusted God, the power which was now to be divided among many might have been concentrated on himself, so that he might have continued to bear the responsibility and honour of judgment alone. God could have enabled him to do all the work which these others were now to divide with him.

But, surely, even if that had been the case, and we would not for a moment dispute that it could have been so, yet, it would not have been so well as the division of interest and labour which now took place. It was much better to set all these men to work than to do all their work. It evoked talent; it ennobled them by placing them in positions of responsibility before their fellows; it drove them to personal dealings with God; it inspired them with a fellow-feeling with Moses; it turned critics into sympathisers and companions; it educated them for positions for which they might be required in the emergencies of the future. It is a great matter to be a good workman, one not needing to be ashamed; but it is a greater to be able to call out other workmen, and to set them at work.

This policy was that which the apostles adopted when the business of the Church had so grown upon their hands as to engross too much of their time and energy. They could no longer combine the serving of tables with the ministry of the Word, and as they could not hesitate which side of their double office to abandon, they called in the help of Stephen and his colleagues "to serve tables," whilst they gave themselves to prayer and to the ministry of the Word.

Is there not a thought here for many of the Lord's workers who may read these words? Are we not dissipating our energies over too wide an area? Do we not attempt to embrace in our life many things which others could do as well as ourselves? Ought not those specially, who are gifted with the power of prayer and spiritual insight, to cultivate those special sides of their nature, leaving details of management and direction of finance to others? We should live on the greatest side of our nature, reserving ourselves for that; not careless of minor details, if there is no one else to manage them; but glad to hand them over to "able men," even though they may have to learn their duties at a cost in the beginning of some mistakes and failures.

Let us lighten our lives of all that conflicts with ultimate fellowship with God. Everything should make way for this. The important duties of the magistrate and judge may yield to those of prayer and fellowship with Heaven. It might seem that to do so would be a mistake, that the practical is the most real, that the man who is always mixing with his fellows is exerting the widest influence for good. But within due limits, there is another side to all this. The mountain brow, with its fellowship, affords a leverage from which we may best move earth. We touch men most when we most touch God. The prophet and priest, the man of God, the teacher, these are among the choicest gifts of God to men. And if you are gifted specially in these directions, cultivate these endowments to the uttermost—they are rare enough—leaving other details to be cared for by others who may be cast in a more practical mould.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—At last week's muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew, Miss Child referred to the departure of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, and dwelt on the text for the month, "They shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads" (Rev. xxii. 4). Many present testified to the Lord's goodness and power. Amongst other interesting items, extracts from letters from men at sea were read. Praise was offered for God's blessing on the numerous visits of detachments from the crew to various mission-halls in and around London, and the meetings in connection with the free suppers at the Welcome Home.

Mr. Charrington's Missions.

Soon after Mr. Charrington's conversion, when his soul was beginning to feel the burden of the perishing multitudes around, he heard of a little work which had been started in a hay loft over a stable, and by the feeble light of one or two paraffin lamps. In conjunction with the late Rev. Joseph Bardesley, he took up this work in 1869, secured more suitable rooms, which by and by developed into the Boys' Mission and Home, out of which has grown the remarkable network of evangelistic and mission operations grouped under the title Tower Hamlets Mission. God being pleased very greatly to bless the work in the conversion of souls, it became necessary to form a church, because those who had been won to newness of life in the Hall preferred to remain there and refused to go elsewhere. The church so formed held its anniversary last Thursday evening, when the honorary superintendent invited all the members of the church—over two thousand—to tea in celebration of the church anniversary and of his own birthday.

Tea being over, the doors were opened, and in rushed the great crowds who had thronged the pavement, filling both the upper galleries, and that not "for a feed," as tea was finished, but merely to enjoy the meeting. This of itself is illustrative of one point about the mission. It is often said, both with regard to churches and chapels and mission-halls, that it is a pity they cannot be utilised more frequently—being shut up usually a large part of the week. No such plea, however, can be urged against the Great Assembly Hall, for since its opening in 1877 it has been used for some purpose every evening, weekday and Sunday, and in the course of three months will complete open to the people, who flock in, attracted not by sensationalism, but simply by faithful Gospel preaching and temperance teaching. Thus the great Hall may be said to represent a permanent evangelistic effort among the East-end poor, and one which has been largely blessed of God.

At the anniversary meeting just mentioned, Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and after praise and prayer called on

Mr. F. N. Charrington, L.C.C., to make a statement. Patiently, indeed, had he to wait a hearing, for again and again the cheering broke out, as some enthusiastic individual or another here and there in the dense throng called for

THREE CHEERS MORE FOR CHARRINGTON.

When at length he did gain a hearing, he began with a touching and telling tribute of affection and esteem to Mr. Spurgeon, whose death had inflicted a well-nigh incalculable loss on the Church at large. In him the greatest preacher of our own or of any land has been taken away, and of him can truly be said, "I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day."

After a glance backward at the origin of the Mission—just described—Mr. Charrington spoke of present needs. The year had closed with a deficiency of £800, and fully resolved to clear this off, if possible, he had set to work in every way he could, with the happy result that, owing to the kindness of Messrs. John Cory, F. A. Bevan, G. Williams, and many others, £650 had already been raised, leaving but £150 to clear off the deficiency. This, he hoped, would be accomplished that evening (as we may note it was).

He would have his friends remember that this was the seating as it did five thousand; and that it was open every evening all the year round. The Gospel is constantly preached, and God is pleased to give blessing. But in view of the curse of strong drink, Gospel Temperance was also kept well to the front, and besides temperance meetings, the "Crusaders" (a band of aggressive Gospel temperance workers) were earnestly at work. The result during the past year has been the taking of 2370 pledges; and those who sign are not left to the mercy of the tempter, but are looked after by Christian men and women. The church, formed only of those, who give satisfactory evidence of genuine conversion, numbers over two thousand. Some reference followed to the helpers and workers, who have rendered such good service; to Mr. Kerwin's illness, the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. (branches which are regarded as the backbone of the whole), the Bible-classes, the Sunday-schools, the trained nurses, and the Bible women. The hall has also a number of philanthropic agencies for the relief of the poor and destitute, and a most successful Emigration Society; so that the temporal, as well as the spiritual, necessities of the people are provided for.

The Mission is, however, inadequately supported, and much rests upon the shoulders of its Superintendent, who has given up his whole life to the work. An idea appears to be existing that because he has a sufficiency to live upon, he ought wholly to sustain the work, without appealing for extraneous aid. But he is not a rich man, and does not possess sufficient to defray the cost of this work, and meet the incidentals of the necessary working expenses. He contributes largely to it, and the people in connection with it certainly do their utmost.

It is a quiet work for God; and because it is quiet and consequently has not received the support it deserves.

Some explanation followed of the reasons which had led Mr. Charrington to enter the London County Council, believing he could do good service for the poor and tempted of Whitechapel. The result had confirmed his belief, and he had since been the means of closing some houses of ill-repute and low public-houses, and also of stopping the supply of drink to the insane, who through drink had to be placed in the asylums. He thought that they would agree that he had been of some use, without at all interfering with the work of the mission. As to present needs, the speaker wanted funds for a Convalescent Home at the seaside, as well as for cleaning the Hall interior, and for the ordinary mission work.

Mr. T. A. Denny very warmly commended the work of the Mission, giving a practical proof by tendering £100, on condition that £1,000 be raised to clear off the deficiency and leave a balance to go on with.

Amongst the speakers who followed were Mr. Henry Varley, Mr. George Nokes, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., who referred to the fact that his brother (now of New York) had been the means of the conversion of Mr. Charrington, the Superintendent of the Mission, and he had known and appreciated the work for many years past.

Mr. Thomas Richardson, in seconding, took the opportunity of presenting a testimonial to Mr. Charrington on behalf of the Gospel Temperance "Crusaders," the present being a handsome flower vase, Mr. Charrington saying, in reply, that as long as God spared his life he would do all that lay in his power to continue to fight the hydra-headed monster of strong drink.

The meeting was not closed till eleven o'clock at night, when the choir sang with fine effect the "Hallelujah Chorus," most of the great audience remaining to the end. Altogether twenty pounds more than the sum asked for (namely £800) was raised, the Chairman promising £100 on condition that the amount was made up to a £1000 before the end of February, as he thought there ought to be a fund to go on with, considering the great distress existing through the prevailing epidemic.

THE RIVIERA.—The Evangelical Mission, carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Newbery, has besides the extensive circulation of Scripture, tracts and Gospel books, established services for Italians at San Remo, Monte Carlo, Ventimiglia, Camporosso, and Borghetto; also occasional services at Oneglia and Eze. On all hands there appear to be openings for the Gospel, and the people seem ready to hear. Will friends pray that much blessing may be granted?

RESCUE WORK IN SHEFFIELD.—The Lord specially laid this work upon our hearts about three months ago, and in a wonderful way we were led to rescue a girl from Doncaster who had been three months in a low part. Before this she had been through the gambling places of Paris, although not quite fifteen years of age. Three others have passed through our Home. Help in provisions, cast-off clothing, or money, may be sent to 250, Duke-st., Sheffield. William Corbridge.

GOVERNESSES AND YOUNG WOMEN IN BUSINESS.—Mrs. Shaw, who has lately been led to take an interest in the trials and difficulties of young people employed in business or tuition, some years ago opened a Blyth Blink House, 21, College-street, Islington, as a home where lonely women may enjoy real home comforts. We observe that Miss Tait, of Addington Park, warmly commends the home and its founder. It may be that some of our readers know of governesses or young women to whom such a Christian home would be a true blessing.

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.

Pastor and Mrs. Rodriguez give in their latest "Letter from Spain" some capital incidents as the evangelisation in progress.

Through the Lord's goodness the pastor's health was so improved after a few weeks in this beautiful climate that he was able to renew the work of evangelisation. In the south of the province is the town of Santa Colomba, where no Protestant had ever been known to set foot. As usual, he and his helpers began by distributing Gospels, and gave away 825 copies, and hundreds of texts to the children. No sooner did the priests hear of what was going on than they hurried out into the streets and shouted in tones of indignant command,

"BURN THE BOOKS! BURN THE BOOKS!"

"Read before you burn them!" urged the pastor, carrying on the distribution with the utmost calmness and rapidity, to the great satisfaction of the people, who eagerly accepted the Scripture portions. Finding their efforts fruitless to stop the work, the priests afterwards offered five centimes (one halfpenny) for every Gospel they could induce the people to sell to them, proving that Rome's hatred and fear of God's Word is unchanged.

The next place evangelised by the pastor was the village of Llansá, only a short distance from Figueras by train. On asking permission from the Mayor to show the magic-lantern in the largest café, he not only granted it, but volunteered to give any further help in his power. That was, indeed, an answer to prayer to cheer us at the outset. He was himself present on the occasion, and was so pleased and interested on seeing the first Bible pictures shown, that he begged the pastor to do him the favour to stop for a few minutes whilst he went home to fetch his wife and daughters, that they also might share the pleasure and profit. At the close twenty men stayed behind and begged that the pastor would preach to them again. He there and then announced his willingness to do so on the following Sunday evening, stating there would be the preaching of the Gospel without pictures. The meeting was also duly advertised by the crier to take place at 7 p.m., and at 5 p.m. the place was packed, also the staircase, all standing, and numbers in the street unable to gain admittance. The Gospel address ended, two men came forward and decided for Christ, one of whom said that for five years he had read, and almost learnt by heart, the Gospel of John given to him by the pastor when on a visit to the place five years ago. How strengthening to our faith thus to see the actual fulfilment of that ancient promise, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days." At the close the people went up to the platform and received Gospels, and before leaving the whole village en masse begged him to preach soon again, which he gladly promised to do.

NEW YEAR'S DAY

was spent by all of us in the beautiful little village of Llansá, we ladies being anxious to see the work there for ourselves, and become personally acquainted with the converts—fourteen in number—who are now candidates for the Lord's Supper. As two balls were going on, we sent out the town-crier to announce that the Gospel will be preached at four o'clock by the Gospel pastor. In half-an-hour the place was crowded, numbers outside not being able to get in. The people were delighted with the hymns we sang. One of our evangelists told the story of the Philippian gaolor, taking for his text, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Just the simple, comprehensive truth which they need. It was such a happy time. Among those who stayed behind for conversion was a poor woman, who said to the pastor with tears, "Will you speak to my husband as you did to that man?" naming a convert who used to treat his wife so badly. "Now he is quite a different man—gives her all his love and his money. So she and the children are so comfortable and happy. Do speak to my husband, and perhaps he will change also."

The first Sunday in the New Year was brightened by our receiving at the Lord's table six new converts, amongst them Major M——, who boldly faced the whole congregation, which probably needed more courage than to have faced the foe in many a battlefield. That a retired officer in the Spanish Army should thus confess Christ, and publicly show his colours, is no ordinary event—it is probably unparalleled in Spain.

In closing, reference is made to the pecuniary necessities of the Mission. God appears to be opening wide the door, but the question is, Will these faithful workers be enabled to enter, and extend their testimony for Christ in a dark district? Communication may be made through Rev. J. C. Stewart Matthias, Consington Rectory, Leicester, or direct to Pastor Lopez Rodriguez, Calle Pedro, 3, Figueras, Spain.

A PLEA FOR CHINESE TURKESTAN.

Dr. Thomas Van Norden has just returned from a seven months' journey through Chinese Turkestan and Western Mongolia, which he describes as the most inaccessible, desolate, and poverty-stricken portion of Asia. The region is inhabited by Mohammedans, Chinese, and Mongols, uncared for by any missionary society. In the course of an interview with the Committee of the Missionary Bureau, he gave an interesting account of the country and the people, and it is hoped that a band of evangelists will take the field towards the end of March.

In Eastern Mongolia the late Rev. James Gilmour and others have been witnessing for Christ, but in the whole region for which Dr. Van Norden pleads, there is not to be found a single missionary. In the city of Karashar and its vicinity, there are about fourteen thousand souls, ten thousand being Mongols, one thousand Chinese, and the rest Mohammedans. To the westward from Karashar, in an oasis skirting the Tian Shan and the Karakorum Mountains, are the cities of Bugyur, Kuchar, Bai, Ak-su, Kashgar Yarkand, Khotan, and many smaller towns and villages, inhabited mostly by Turkish Mohammedans. South of Karashar is the country of the Mongols, whose chief trading centre is Karashar.

Neither here nor throughout the whole region of Chinese Turkestan and Western Mongolia have the glad tidings of salvation yet been preached, other than by the quickly passing traveller, or from the silent page of the Holy Scriptures, from the hands of Colporteurs. This latter agency, however, has not yet reached the Karashar country. Throughout Chinese Turkestan there is but little needed for the supply of material wants, money having five times the value of money in England. There are three routes by which this country can be reached, either from Russia, through the district of Ferghana, over the Terek Pass; or across the Himalayas by Leh; or by way of China—which is probably the best, though most expensive—from the port of Tientsin, by Pekin, across Mongolia to Gucheng, and thence to Karashar.

The committee of the Missionary Bureau will be glad to receive offers from unmarried artisans who would be willing to accompany Dr. Van Norden to this spiritually destitute portion of the vast Chinese Empire. Applications should be made to the Missionary Bureau, 1, Gresham-street, E.C.

FRIENDS' RUSSIAN FAMINE FUND.

On behalf of the Central Committee in charge of the Friends' Russian Famine Fund, I beg the favour of publicity to the following facts:—Up to this date more than £17,000 has been received, some of which has already been transmitted to trustworthy unofficial agents, chosen under the advice of our commissioners, who since their return from Russia have been addressing meetings in various parts of the country, with eminently successful results. E. W. Brooks is now returning to Russia accompanied by Herbert Jones, who has resided in that country and is well acquainted with its language. As already stated, their travelling expenses will be defrayed by the Society of Friends, and will not form a charge upon the fund.

Whilst thanking the public generally for the response made thus far to our appeal, we would impress upon your readers that the need of funds is great, that the short time that will elapse before the break up of the frost, makes the matter one of extreme urgency, and that if they desire to take part in the alleviation of the distress that prevails, they cannot do better than forward liberal subscriptions to the Treasurer, J. Gurney Barclay, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.—Yours faithfully,

Isaac Sharp,
Secretary of the Society of Friends,
Devonshire House, 12, Bishopsgate-st. Without. E.C.

MRS. RICKETTS ON THE CONGO.

The many friends who helped to send out this dear little "coloured" woman to join her husband at Lukunga, and whose safe arrival was announced in The Christian, will be interested to know that she has sent home several bright reports of what she and Mr. Ricketts are doing. Thus:

"We are greatly encouraged in our work; many have been baptized at this station, and more at one of our out-stations, Banzandanda. My school at Ngoyo is progressing; the people are regular in attendance. In other towns, where my husband often visits, they are listening to the Gospel.

"There are bright hopes for the future because they are listening to his word, and not only so, but they are calling for me now to come and open a school, . . . but I am so much employed at Ngoyo, we have not seen how I shall manage to keep another school. The people at N. are building their school-house; my husband goes to direct them; men, women, and children are very cheerful in the work; nails and other materials are given them.

"I cannot help telling you how very useful the many things are which you have sent out. The men bring their work, as well as the women. When they ask, 'Where is the needle and thread to sew my coat?' they look as if it would be impossible for me to say there are no more needles or thread."

To-day my object is to say that on the 17th a box is going from Liverpool, with a few things that have come in. Will Mrs. Ricketts' friends send, by parcel post, on 15th, to reach Liverpool on 16th, any contributions of garments, pins, needles, and thread they may like to contribute, or money to buy in Liverpool what will be useful—addressed to Mrs. Thomas Jameson, care of Young Men's Christian Association, Mountpleasant, Liverpool? The time is short, but parcel post and money orders are expeditious!

Rebekah S. Hind Smith.

February 5.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

These well-known servants of Christ have lately conducted a very successful series of Gospel meetings in Dover. The time was one of great blessing to believers and to many seekers. All the services were held in the spacious and commodious new Town Hall. At the first meeting the hall was filled, and, as the interest in the services increased, the hall was not large enough for the numbers which came. At the last service, after using all available space, hundreds of persons had to be refused admission.

The names were taken of 150 persons who during the mission had professed faith in Christ. It is believed that many more also have trusted him. Much prayer was offered before the mission commenced, and there was harmonious co-operation on the part of believers connected with almost every evangelical church in the town.

PROTESTANT CONFERENCE.—Sir S. Arthur Blackwood is to preside at the meeting for humiliation and prayer, to be held on Friday evening in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly. The purpose is to promote a spirit of humiliation in view of prevailing error and superstition, and to pray God for forgiveness and for grace and power in testifying for the truth in its purity.

THE BIBLE IN LIFU.—Lifu is the central and largest island of the Loyalty group, lying east of New Caledonia. The Christian islanders, and those who speak the language elsewhere, have had for some time portions of the Bible translated for their use by the late Bishop Patteson and others, but it is only recently that the completed and revised Scriptures have been put into their hands by the British and Foreign Bible Society. In 1890 Rev. James Sleigh sent to press the last revised sheet, and in February of 1891 the first consignment of two thousand copies arrived in the island. They were received with universal thanksgiving and prayer, and by September 750 copies were sold. A recent letter from Lifu says, "the people are poring over their Bibles for hours with evident interest." A forthcoming article in the Society's Monthly Reporter concludes thus:—"In view of the present position, the uncertain future prospects of Lifu and of the entire Loyalty group, we may derive comfort and hope from the fact that the complete Lifu Bible is now being distributed among the people; and at Lifu, as elsewhere, God will bless his word and his children."

The Late C. H. Spurgeon.

TRIBUTE BY PASTOR WHITE.

I am bowed with grief for my unspeakable loss in the death of Mr. Spurgeon. I fear it must seem most small and selfish of me to be referring to the removal of such a man as my loss, when it is shared, at least in measure, by myriads throughout the world. But I may, I trust, be forgiven, since to the many he will be remembered as the great preacher, the large-hearted philanthropist, the fearless defender of "the faith delivered once for all to the saints," or as the diligent and faithful under-shepherd of the flock of Christ. I knew him well as all these, and more—much more. I knew him with a near heart-intimacy, as one knoweth his peculiar friend. How precious his memory is to me in this light I dare not attempt to say, lest I offend some who may feel they have a prior claim to myself; so I forbear.

I cannot, like many, cry, "My father, my father." I do not owe to him my conversion, but under the blessed Spirit of God I do owe to him my consecration to the ministry of Christ's Gospel, and, to a very large extent, my equipment for its exercise.

About the year 1856, soon after I had tasted the sweets of redeeming love, I read an early sermon of his on 2 Samuel v. 24, entitled, I think, "A going in the tops of the mulberry trees." In this sermon I believe I heard the Lord calling me to yield myself fully to the work of preaching his Word. Not immediately, however, was this grace given me, as I did not enter the Pastors' College till early in 1862. It seems but as yesterday I sat amidst the wondering thousands (myself wondering more than any one) when Mr. Spurgeon preached the first sermon in the Metropolitan Tabernacle from Acts v. 42: "And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." One part of my wonderings was whether the privilege would ever be given me to stand where he stood and preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to such an audience. Surely "our times" are in God's hands.

He moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform.

For now full thirty years our friendship has held, and never have I felt it holding so strong as in the last few years of his great life. There is no love so binding as "love in the truth." Nothing above or below, in time or in eternity, can loosen its fastenings.

Only a few weeks ago, in writing to me of our annual Pastors' College Conference, he said: "The disease is a little less, but it is a terrible drain on me. It will all go, and leave a blessing behind. God works a perfect work, and I believe it will be so in my case;" and then he added in his own loving, unaffected way, "I pray that He may restore you also, my dear and precious brother. My heart is with you. May the Lord Jesus feed you on Himself."

Truly, God has wrought "a perfect work" in his case. Although not as he and we had hoped, yet perfect, most perfect, notwithstanding, as perfect as perfect love and perfect wisdom could fashion it. Instead of taking away the disease from his suffering servant, He has taken his suffering servant for ever away from the disease, to where there shall be "no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." "Oh! what joy to the invalid," once exclaimed our beloved friend, "to know that he shall leave his bed, on which he has suffered so much, and go where the inhabitant shall no more say, 'I am sick.'" Then he added, "How glad I am that this shall be in so short a time. Some here present may be in heaven before this year is out. Ah! perhaps he who speaks to you now may have gone very soon away to his own country. Shall it cost us any regret? It does for others, but not for ourselves. The contemplation is one of unmingled delight. The change has no loss about it; it is unspeakable gain. We lose nothing by departing to be with Christ, for it is not only better, but 'far better.'"

Truly, we can dry our tears over such precious words as these. Still, we may weep without despairing or doubting. We weep not on his account, but our own, our families, our fellow-believers, the poor, thoughtless, Christless worldlings who to-day are deliberately rejecting the claims of that Saviour whose dying love was the main theme of our departed friend's preaching. We may weep also for that gentle widowed wife and the two sons, for the bereaved members of his own flock. One of these wrote me a few days since: "Thanks for your words of sympathy and encouragement at this hour of deep distress and terrible bereavement. Time would fail to utter all our beloved pastor has been to me in the last thirty-six years of my life. Eternity alone will reveal it, and thousands of other Christian souls can say the same." We may weep, too, for the five hundred girls and boys of the Stockwell Orphanage; for the eight hundred and more of the dear brethren connected with the Pastors' College. No one but one of themselves can estimate their loss. One of the earliest and most honoured amongst them, my old college companion, Mr. A. G. Brown, writing to me since our bereavement, says,

"LIKE YOU I FEEL HEART-BROKEN.

I cannot bear to think of his being gone from us. It makes me weep like a child."

I doubt if so many tears have been shed over the death of any one man, and he a servant of the living God, since Stephen "fell asleep, and devout men carried him to his burial and made great lamentation for him," or when the Ephesian elders wept sore as they hung on Paul's neck and kissed him, "sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake that they should see his face no more."

Yes, we may, we must weep; we should lack both the human and the Divine if we did not weep. We must take heed, however, we give no place to the adversary of our souls. It is a time to weep; but it is a time also to wait humbly on God, to bow low under this the stroke of his hand, listening the while, to hear as the learner. Without doubt his voice is abroad just now. Let us hearken and obey. Bishop Burnet used to say he regarded his acquaintance with Archbishop Leighton as a talent for which he would have to give an account. Must we not say the same of our acquaintance with Pastor C. H. Spurgeon? "Whose faith follow," runs the apostolic exhortation to the Hebrew saints, in the face of the withering winds of "divers and strange doctrines" which were blowing around them, "whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation, Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." Let the fact that this day a prince in Israel has fallen with his face to the foe be no subject of discouragement to the rank and file of Christ's army. Rather let it reveal to each one of us our individual responsibility to "put on the WHOLE armour of God," that we may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. "The good soldier fleeth from nothing so much as the mention of flying." "I likewise do exhort you to stand to the defence of the truth," wrote Barnham to the martyr Latimer, "for you that shall be left behind have need of strength also, the world being so dangerous as it is." Surely, as Bunyan's pilgrims said to the shepherds, we "who are left behind" have "need cry to the strong for strength." (How significant the shepherd's answer, "Ah, and you will need to use it, too, when you have it.") But let me not multiply words. For my own part, I find myself continually thinking of those almost last utterances of our brave-hearted brother. They seem as if given us for this hour that we may adopt them for our very own. "With my whole soul," said he, "I praise delivering grace. To the Lord God, the God of Israel, I consecrate myself anew. In the covenant of grace, for the revelation of infallible truth in the Bible, for the atonement by blood, and the immutable love of the ever-blessed Three-in-One, I am a witness, and more and more would I abide faithful to the Gospel of the grace of God. I see each day more reasons for faith and fewer excuses for doubt Those who will may ship their anchors, and be drifted by the current of the age; but I would sing, 'My heart is fixed, O, God, my heart is fixed; I will sing, and give praise.'" Amen, amen.

HIS EARLY LIFE AND MINISTRY.

In continuation of his sketch given in our last issue, Rev. JAMES DOUGLAS, of Brixton, writes:—

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON was born at Kelvedon, in Essex, on June 19, 1834. At school he excelled particularly in the branches of arithmetic and mathematics. He was fond of speaking of his boyish days. His power of speechifying attracted the notice of his playmates, and on occasions when debates were extemporised he was not unfrequently called upon to speak on both sides, it being found that there was no other way of matching him than that of making himself his own opponent.

It does not follow because one is converted in early life, after having had all the advantages of pious home training, that he escapes the black shadow of doubt or is a stranger to the law's convicting power. Speaking of his experience as a lad he says:—

"There was an evil hour in which I dipped the anchor of my faith; I cut the cable of my belief; I no longer moored myself by the coast of Revelation; I allowed my vessel to drift before the wind, and thus started on the voyage of infidelity. I said to Reason, 'Be thou my captain;' I said to my brain, 'Be thou my rudder;' and I started on my mad voyage!"

But Divine grace soon stopped him in his course. Conviction set in, and deeply did the iron enter his soul. Deliverance came at a little Primitive Methodist service in Colchester, one Robert Eaglen being the preacher. Mr. Spurgeon thus describes the occasion:—

"At last a very thin-looking man came into the pulpit, and opened the Bible and read these words, 'Look unto Me and be ye saved, all ye ends of the earth.' Just setting his eyes upon me, as if he knew all my heart, he said, 'Young man, you are in trouble.' Well, I was, sure enough. Says he, 'You will never get out of it unless you look to Christ.' And then, lifting up his hand, he cried out, as only I think a Primitive Methodist could do, 'Look! look! look! It is only look,' said he. I saw at once the way of salvation. Oh, how I did leap for joy at that moment. I know not what else he said. I did not take much notice of it, I was so possessed with that one thought. Like as when the brazen serpent was lifted up, they only looked and were healed. I had been waiting to do fifty things, but when I heard this word 'Look!' what a charming word it seemed to me! Oh, I looked until I could almost have looked my eyes away, and in heaven I will look on still in my joy unutterable."

This notable event was speedily followed by his adhesion to the Baptists and public profession of faith, May 3, 1851, his mother's birthday. Constrained by redeeming love, he could not but do what in him lay to make known the glorious evangel to others. We have often heard him speak of those early days and the signs following that marked his juvenile efforts. As a lay preacher the success became still more marked, crowds flocking to hear the boy preacher, and in a short time he was installed as a Baptist pastor at Waterbeach.

Providentially, all things considered, this vessel unto honour escaped the somewhat stereotyping influences of a collegiate course, and took his place as a God-sent man to fulfil the ministry which he had received of the Lord. Though not academically trained, however, he was well up educationally for all practical purposes, and to the last was an omnivorous reader and busy gatherer from all sides. Especially was he a devoted student of the queen of the sciences—theology—and an ardent lover of the Word of God. Probably no living man knows so much as he did of the Puritan divines. While almost execrating the style of John Owen, which, in his judgment, was no style at all, but a mere putting of things together anyhow in the required sequence, he yet admired him above all the Puritans, and acknowledged that he owed more to him than to any of the others. "I never," he said, "read a page of John Owen without distinct benefit. His style I think nothing of, but his matter is ever weighty."

The particulars of his London career are well known, we infer, to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN. He rose to eminence with a rapidity and to a degree that was phenomenal, and ere he had reached his majority his popularity was at the zenith. There were many croakers about who foretold a speedy collapse. Yet it was not the flash of a meteor in this case, but the glare of an inextinguishable star. He lived on, and witnessed on, with no waning of power or diminution of results. The hand of the Lord was with him, and great numbers believed and turned to the Lord.

Great as has been his success in pulpit ministration, and in the conduct of the Stockwell Orphanage, the Pastors' College, the Colportage Society, and kindred institutions, this honoured servant of the Lord has been for many years great as regards his experience of suffering. He was often brought low down; he had often to pray out of great deeps. Some of these times, however, were specially endeared to him because of the rich delivering power shown, and the special mercies from on High that were vouchsafed. On one occasion, he said, the torture was so excruciating that he challenged God to remove it instantly, saying, "How could He lay upon a child of his more than he was able to bear." No sooner was the word gone from his lips than instantly there was a great calm, and a heavenly peace succeeded the tempest of pain.

We saw him for a few minutes alone a few days before his departure to Mentone. Though sanguine of recovery, his talk was of readiness for the better land. Some medicine, he told us, that he had been urged to take was so nauseous as to lead him to say, "Doctor, shall I die if I do not take this?" and on being told that might be the consequence, his ready answer was, 'Well, then, I will." Commenting further on this he said, "How blessed not to be afraid to die! You are not, are you?" On assuring him that I was not at all afraid to die, his face brightened responsively; and on parting with him he said, "It is grand to know where our destination is. Good-bye; if we meet not on earth we shall above." Thus we parted, but not for ever.

May the God of comfort, comfort those that mourn, and set his bow in the cloud.

Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

The Times of Monday last, in a sympathetic article, said: "Mr. Spurgeon's real strength lay in his grasp, at once homely and profound, of vital religious truth, and in his power of delivering that truth straight into the hearts of those who heard him. When he left the pulpit, said Lord Houghton, 'he was an inspired apostle.' He has left the pulpit for ever, but his apostleship lives on in the quickened hearts and heightened lives of his innumerable hearers, and his inspiration is acknowledged of all men."

Mr. Henry Varley, preaching on Sunday in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, said it was his great privilege, on December 20 and 21, to visit Mr. Spurgeon at Mentone. The great preacher was then fairly hopeful, and talked freely of recovery. Though sharing that hope, Mr. Varley could not but observe that the eye, which was once so bright and cheering, was dim; and misgivings, which he promptly tried to stifle, troubled him. Mr. Varley pressed home on his large audience the lessons to be learned from Mr. Spurgeon's life, dwelling in particular upon his unswerving fidelity to the truth of God.

Mr. Spurgeon's life was noble all round, and some of his most casual remarks were eloquent in meaning. There is but one adequate explanation of his life and service, and it was expressed by himself at a Pastors' Conference a few years ago. As recalled by Rev. G. T. Ennals, at the service on Sunday evening last in Cann Hall Baptist Chapel, Leytonstone, this significant utterance was to the effect that his habit of prayer was such that he was not conscious of passing a quarter of an hour without it, except when taking rest in sleep. Here we have the true secret of Mr. Spurgeon's greatness, and, moreover, a fact which accounts for the signal success which attended his manifold and long-continued labours. There was vast natural ability and mental application; but there was also heavenly anointing and abounding grace for labours without parallel in variety and extent. Mr. Spurgeon's life was made up of prayer and work; communion with God and a joyous discharge of the Gospel ministry absorbed his affections and occupied his powers. All who magnify the grace of God as shown in this distinguished servant should be inspired to go to the same Source for ever-increasing supplies; and "every quarter of an hour" is not too frequent to hold communion with Him who "giveth more grace."

LAMBETH RAGGED-SCHOOLS.—The Committee have undertaken work of a more directly educational character than hitherto, the results of which are recorded in the new report. The total number of the persons attending the different branches of the society every week is three thousand, and no small amount of good must necessarily follow. As evidencing this, the Temperance section points to many who have been saved from the slavery of drink; while the religious work generally has been productive of manifest fruits in "more consistent and godly lives than formerly." The success of the Ambulance class is suggested by the fact that one of the members having met with an accident, himself gave all the instructions to his companions how to treat him until medical aid arrived. The hon. secretary is Mr. J. M. Brash, 3, Fenchurch-street, E.C.

IN MEMORIAM.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON.

ENTERED INTO REST, JANUARY 31, 1892.

Spurgeon, the man of God;
A household word his name,
Raised from the zenith of renown,
To wear the amaranthine crown,
With stainless, deathless fame.

On earth his brethren mourn;
In heaven a glorious throng,
From every clime and kindred, meet
Their father in the faith to greet,
With shouts of holy song.

And still that happy band,
And still that joyous lay—
While saints by death's dark river weep,
And souls ascend the starry steep—
Are swelling day by day.

Not dead, we say, but sleeps;
His life is but begun
In Paradise—beyond the reach
Of brightest thought and grandest speech,
Where Jesus is the sun.

Yet Spurgeon lives on earth;
His mighty heart and mind,
Great with the love and thoughts of God,
And grace that saves through Jesus' blood,
In myriad souls are shrined.

The preacher of the age,
To God alone would bow,
Clear to his light he preached the Word,
Far-flashed and keen, his two-edged sword,
Oh! who shall wield it now?

His highest meed of praise
Has sounded from the Throne,
Yet let us tread our Pastor's track,
And to his memory echo back
His Master's words, "Well done!"

Donemana, Ireland. J. K.

O glorious brother, how Heaven's victor song
Burst from thy trembling lips, whence oft sublime
Borne on that grand voice calm mid surging throng,
Eternity come singing into time!
Though foremost flashed thy helm mid hottest strife,
And sin and wrong unmasked were dragged to doom, [life,
Though death disguised rode by thee half through
Thou diedst the martyr's death in thine own room.

Ah, slowly did reluctant Love unfold
That wondrous veiled world known so long by fame;
Thou grand soul-archer, ranging free and bold
With bow bent and thine eagle eye aflame,
Lettered, unlettered, struck down by Truth's blaze,
Peasant and prince fell pierced!—To God the praise.

Charles A. Fox.

Ah, not before the journey
Of life was fully run,
And not before life's warfare
Triumphantly was won,
The message of the Master
Came lovingly to thee,
That thou should'st rest from labour
And welcomed home should'st be.

'Twas no uncertain conflict
In which thou didst engage,
Sublime, momentous, sacred,
The warfare thou didst wage;
With armour gleaming ever,
With sword and buckler bright,
To heaven with eyes uplifted,
Thou stoodest in the fight.

Who shall recount the victories,
Or who shall tell the gain,
The spoil by thee well gathered
On many a well-fought plain;
Who tell what souls enkindled
With energy divine,
Pressed boldly on, beholding
The dauntless soul of thine!

But now the warfare's over,
The warrior sinks to rest;
The morn was bright and beauteous,
The eventide is blest;
The Lord for whom thou labourest,
By whom the fight was won,
Has crowned the grace with glory,
Has spoke the meed, "Well done!"

POOR CHILDREN IN FLORENCE.—Mme. De Satur, of Villino Lazzeri, 11, Viale dei Colli, has for years had chief care of a school for the children of poor women who work for their living, and therefore cannot attend to their little ones during the day. The school has at present eighty-five children, who have to be partially fed as well as instructed. The work is in two divisions, one for infants under four, and the other for children as old as eight; these are in the charge of good mistresses. The work costs about £280 a year to keep going; and in a Roman Catholic country it is hard to get funds for its maintenance.

NOTES FROM INDIA.

Miss Ellen Dawe, of the C.E.Z.M.S., describing a journey in the north of the Nuddea District, where no lady had before been with the Gospel message, says:—"Over and over again the women said how glad they were to have a Mem to speak to them; that the Sahib came to talk to the men, but, of course, they could not go to listen to him, and now they had a Mem all to themselves! As the news spread through the villages round, messages were sent to us, begging us to go to them. Riding through one village, the women came out and called to me as I passed, 'Are you not going to stop? Are we not to hear?'" Miss Dawe hopes many will hear the loud cry of the women of India for the Gospel. She says: "Here are heathen women ready to be taught, longing for more light, and there is no one to go to them. There are many villages, very many, all through this district, where no lady has ever been. It is most touching to leave them, begging for more visits and teaching, and to have to tell them I am going, and cannot say when I shall see them again. 'A thousand missionaries'! If only the Church were awake to her responsibility, ten thousand would be thought little to ask for."

Mr. A. Le Feuvre, Associated Lay Evangelist, C.M.S., Santirajpur, Shikarpur, Nuddea, recently sent a substantial sum towards succouring Jewish fugitives in Palestine. He wrote:—"In this Nuddea Zillah there are, amidst awful darkness and sin, over seven thousand who are called by the name of Him who, to effect man's salvation, became a man and a Jew. The majority of these seven thousand are poor cultivators, who have just struggled through three very bad years. Of the rest there are a few missionaries of both sexes, and fewer planters and civilians. It struck me that it would help us to think of, and pray more for, the Jews, whose future is so inseparably interwoven with all the zeal and hope-inspiring promises in the Bible which still remain unfulfilled, if we sent them a practical sign of our sympathy and love."

After mentioning that the offering represents the compassion of planters and civilians, as well as missionaries, and includes the free-will offerings of native Christians and the mites of school children, Mr. Le Feuvre says:—"The great want all round is 'conviction of sin.' There seems none of it. In the greater part of these villages the Bengali woman has never seen a Christian woman's face, while in the villages where we have preached the barest sprinkling of women will venture near enough to hear. There is, on all sides, much room for ladies, and also for more evangelists."

GOSPEL WORK IN HOLLAND.

The committee of the Dutch Baptist Union have set forth two itinerant missionaries, who daily carry the glad tidings from village to village and from house to house. Mr. Bolman reports having found (in and around Muntendam) much indifference, also many open doors, hearts willing to receive Christ. An alarming state of spiritual destitution prevails, and much opposition to the doctrines of the Cross.

Mr. Katuin has visited several places in Friesland, holding meetings where possible, and mixing freely among the people. The results were often cheering. But at Wieverd, Akkrum, and three other villages, the people were so permeated with Unitarianism, and a socialistic, democratic spirit, that the message of salvation through Christ met with much scorn. Yet many tracts are distributed.

The committee regret their inability, through lack of funds, to send out more than two brethren this winter. They have at times sent three and four, and in view of so much spiritual want and prevalent unbelief, they long to send out a much larger number.

BOLEYN MISSION AND SCHOOL, Boleyn-road, East Ham, E.—The report for the past year says: "There has been an improvement in the Sunday attendances; great attention has been paid to the exposition of the Word; decided cases of change of heart and altered life have been seen, and a number of converts have joined the church." Sixty members attend the Band of Hope, carrying away good influences to their homes; thousands of children have been supplied with dinners, prizes have been awarded for good behaviour, and the building debt reduced. Mr. J. C. Page, Queen's-square, Upton-park, E., is the Superintendent.

The Revival in Scotland.

THE STIRLING MISSION.

Stirling, Alloa, and Falkirk—the field of operation during the past week—are three busy, thriving towns, rich in the sacred memories of the past, associated closely with many a stirring episode of endurance unto death in Covenanting days, and known in later times as the spheres in which godly and faithful ministers of the Gospel have laboured. Last week the evangelists devoted two days to each of these places—Sunday and Monday to Stirling, Tuesday and Wednesday to Alloa, and Thursday and Friday to Falkirk; and in each case those who have thrown themselves into the work have been thankful to find many indications of God's blessing in bringing men and women, long familiar with the truths of the Gospel, to personal decision and the acceptance of the Saviour.

On Monday, the meetings in the Public Hall, Stirling, were densely crowded, and amongst the audience, as well as on the platform, were many ministers. The death of Mr. Spurgeon was made the subject of a few touching remarks by Mr. Moody. They were living in solemn days, he said, and it befitted them to consider well their latter end. God was speaking loudly at the present time, and no one knew who might be the next to receive the call to go hence. The greatest preacher of the century had gone;

A PRINCE IN ISRAEL HAD FALLEN.

Might his departure be a blessing to many souls, though they lamented his death, and sympathised with his family in their sore affliction.

Mr. Moody told of a gentleman who that afternoon had been blessed to the salvation of his soul through the death of the great preacher. He had often heard Mr. Spurgeon preach, but with no benefit to himself, and on his way to Mr. Moody's meeting he was very much struck with the fatal intelligence that was conveyed to him by the newspaper bills. He went home from the meeting, said Mr. Moody, rejoicing in having found Christ.

THE ALLOA MEETINGS.

Tuesday afternoon saw the opening in Alloa, the services being held in the fine Town-hall. Notwithstanding that heavy sleet had been falling all the morning, the building was packed long before the time announced for the afternoon meeting. Most of the ministers of the town were present, and several took part.

Mr. Sankey sang, "Throw out the Life-Line" with much vigour, and the old favourite, "The Ninety and Nine."

Mr. Moody called attention to twenty-one things the Shepherd does for his sheep, and based his address on the 34th chapter of Ezekiel. Time did not permit him to speak on all of the twenty-one things in the chapter, but he urged his hearers to study them up for themselves. The whole chapter would well repay careful study.

In the evening the hall was again crowded in every corner, many being unable to gain admission, and a large overflow, addressed by Mr. Wm. Robertson, being held in the Townhead Church.

Mr. Moody is not a man to

to please men, and Alloa being a great brewing centre, he "let go" at the trade in the most merciless style. Taking his favourite verse, "Whatsoever a man soweth," he showed that men reap (a) the same kind of fruit; (b) they reap more than they sow; and (c) ignorance of the kind of seed sown makes no difference.

It is seldom an audience breaks into applause during one of Mr. Moody's discourses; but this happened when he urged those whose consciences were aroused on the liquor question not to sell it; but to pour it down the gutter. The evangelist immediately silenced the stamping, remarking that he wanted the truth to get into their heads, not into their feet.

INTERVIEW WITH MR. SANKEY.

At Alloa the representative of The Scottish Leader secured an interview with this sweet singer. After touching on Mr. Sankey's introduction to the work, and his experiences during the past twenty-two years with Mr. Moody, the conversation turned on supposed prejudices against solo singing; and the interviewer asks:—

"Have you written many of the hymns and tunes that are found in your various collections?"

"No; I have written but a small proportion of them. I believe my forte has been more in the selection of pieces that would become popular and useful than in composing, although I am singing on this mission a number of pieces the music of which I have written; as, for instance, the 'Ninety and Nine' and 'The Mists have Rolled Away.' These two are being asked for at almost every place we go to. They are special and they are therefore more frequently used than some others. 'The Life-Line,' which you have heard nearly every day, is a new song, written by a friend in America. It is much of the character of 'Hold the Fort,' and will probably wear out about as soon."

"Do you believe these songs that you sing have been blessed to the conversion of people?"

"I do, as I have during this trip met scores of people who have said it was the singing of some particular hymn that led them to take the step to decision and to come out on the Lord's side. Mr. Moody, too, bears constant testimony to the power of the hymns to lead men to decision for Christ. We have also abundant evidence from Christian workers all over the country to the same fact, and therefore I am encouraged to go on and use these songs which are blessed by God to the conversion of men."

"How does the singing of to-day compare with that of eighteen years ago, when you first came to this country?"

"I am exceedingly gratified with the singing of the choirs that have helped us during this campaign. They have been very strong in number, and the singing has been excellent. On our first mission it was hard to secure choirs to lead the congregational singing, but at this time in every one of the fifty towns and villages which we have been in up till now we have been supported with splendid choirs."

"I suppose your hymns were by no means familiar here at your first visit?"

"I believe they were not known much on this side of the water prior to our advent in 1873. To-day we find they are universally used wherever any spiritual work is being carried on."

"Let me ask, last of all, how your voice is standing out amid this long and incessant campaign?"

"I would rather that other people would judge as to that. But I can tell you that I am singing more frequently than I ever did, and with greater ease; and I believe that my voice is better than it was on my former visits to this country."

Mr. Sankey's last remark is confirmed by many competent judges, but not in depreciation of his remarkable powers when he visited our country before. Mr. Sankey, it may be added to what he has already remarked, is impressed with the great hush and stillness that prevails in every audience while he sings. It is all the better that this should be, for he cannot get on where there is noise and confusion.

On Wednesday, as the interest increased, special trains brought many into Alloa. With a view of reaching the careless and indifferent, tickets were issued for the evening meeting, and Mr. Moody, with his insatiable appetite for work, volunteered to speak in the Townhead United Presbyterian Church at seven o'clock, before proceeding to the Town-hall at eight o'clock. The latter spacious building was crowded soon after seven, and the audience sat quietly for more than an hour, waiting the arrival of the evangelists.

Mr. Sankey appeared first and commenced the meeting. In the meantime, Mr. Moody preached to a large audience in the church, on the "Dying Thief," with the most intense earnestness. We have seldom heard anything more thrilling than the picture he drew of a drunkard's home, and then the change that comes over it when the prayer, "Lord, remember me," has gone up to heaven.

After preaching nearly an hour, and leaving the inquirers to be dealt with by the ministers and friends, Mr. Moody proceeded to the Town Hall, and spoke again for a full hour.

It seemed as though two-thirds of the audience remained behind, in answer to the invitation that Christians would remain to pray whilst the anxious were being dealt with.

We had a most interesting case. A fine young fellow, who had been longing for power to overcome sin, being beaten again and again, he was anxious to know Christ as his Saviour and Deliverer. He came into the light on John v. 24: "He that heareth and believeth hath" . . . And no sooner had the truth taken hold of him but he expressed anxiety to get home before his brother went to bed, to tell him, and try to lead him to Jesus, for, said he, "He is in just the same condition as I was—wanting to be a Christian." It is worth coming to Scotland for this, if one gets nothing else.

THE FALKIRK MEETINGS.

On Thursday morning the evangelists left Alloa for Falkirk, reaching this great Iron centre in time for a dinner-hour service. A second meeting followed in the afternoon in Graham-road Church, when Mr. Moody spoke on the "True Elements of Prayer," dwelling principally on restitution and forgiveness, hoping that any Christians who were not on speaking terms with some fellow-Christian would get the matter "straightened out" before the sun went down, and not be an hindrance to the work of God, as was often the case. A goodly company of ministers seemed to enjoy the good things brought out. In the evening the Town Hall was soon filled uncomfortably full, and then overflowed into West United Presbyterian Church, where Mr. Sankey sang twice. Mr. J. Campbell White gave an earnest address on Isaiah xlv. 22: "Look unto Me and be ye saved," not without signs of blessing.

On Friday the arrangements had all to be altered, as it was found the Graham-road U.P. Church and the Free Church were much too small to accommodate the people. It was decided to split up the evening meeting, Mr. Moody preaching three times: at four, in the parish church, a capacious building, standing in the centre of the town; at seven, in the Free Church, to women only, which was crowded; and at eight, to men only, when the parish church was again completely packed. Mr. W. M. Oatts and Mr. J. Campbell White took charge of the women's inquiry meeting. Mr. Sankey was unsparing of himself, as he sang at each of these services.

Brief as the missions of the past week may have been, there are many indications that the results have been most cheering. Everywhere God's Spirit appears to have been at work convicting and converting, and leading the halting and irresolute to decision for God.

During the present week Hamilton, Paisley, Renfrew, and Barrhead are amongst the places to be visited.

A correspondent writes to us:—"It is known that Rev. John McNeill has promised to give a year to evangelistic work in his native land. He has just finished his first month, and as far as overflowing congregations and deep impressions are concerned, that month of arduous toil has been remarkably successful. Surely every one that believes in the power of prayer should plead earnestly with God that his health may be sustained, and that his ministry may become increasingly mighty. Mr. McNeill has the ear of the people, students and professors, ministers and laymen, infidels and agnostics flock to hear him, and, as tens of thousands of his countrymen can testify, he preaches with no uncertain sound. "Ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence and give Him no rest," &c. (Isaiah lxii. 6 and 7), and in your prayers remember Rev J. McNeill, who is just now 'in labours more abundant.'"

YOUNG CITY WORKWOMEN.

Mrs. Fisher's work, which centres in "The Old Welcome" Young Women's Christian Institute, held on Wednesday week its annual gathering in Y.M.C.A. Hall, Aldersgate-street. Many of the ladies who hold Gospel services in warehouses gave delightful testimony to the blessing received. Some encouraging letters were read from young women, who testified to the real helpfulness of the short services weekly held in the midst of many trying and difficult surroundings. One friend, who takes a weekly service for young women in the hall, has prevailed upon many to join "The Young People's Scripture Union," and letters had been sent to her recording blessing and strength received through the daily study of the Word.

For several months there had been difficulty in the general work of the Institute, funds having been very low; but at the end of the year all the difficulties had vanished, the Lord had abundantly answered prayer.

Some time ago hindrances were in the way for carrying on special services when a Christian employer, and a band of Christian men and women from his firm, came forward and offered to put forth efforts to win their fellow men and women in other firms if we would lend "The Welcome Room," and co-operate; this we most gladly did, believing it to be a call from God. In fact, one of the most encouraging fruits of Gospel services held in the workrooms is that witnessed every Tuesday night from seven till eight o'clock in "The Old Welcome," when some of the Christian men and women from Mr. Garstin's warehouse, hold an evangelistic service with bright singing and short Gospel addresses, special efforts being put forth to bring in the men and women employed. The report of the work will soon be ready, and may be had of Mrs. Eleanor Fisher, care of Hallkeeper, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. More devoted ladies are greatly needed for dinner-hour services, and one or two who could help with secretarial work. We trust all our friends will continue their practical help and earnest prayers. For the Young.

BUILDING ON THE ROCK.

My Dear Young Friends,—I wonder if you have noticed the words in John ii. where it says, "This beginning of miracles." The Lord Jesus was to do many others, but the one recorded here was the first. Have you ever asked which was the first parable He spoke? We do not know that exactly, but the thought I want to give you is, that the parables are going on still, and that you may look out for them everywhere in your daily life and your daily walks.

Do you remember, but of course you do, the last verses in Matthew vii.? I will only write a line of it, as I know you can repeat it by heart. A foolish man built his house on the sand, "it fell, and great was the fall of it." Now, I am going to tell you what really happened not very far from us; it will make you, perhaps, realise the danger of "building a house on the sand." On the other side of Roche Courbe, on the slope of Cuspo, there was forty years ago a hamlet called Besaudun; one long street of houses going straight up the hill. There was a temple a little aside from the village, but on the same slope. One evening all was quiet and peaceful as usual; it had rained long and heavily for days, but that day the men had been out to their work and came back in the evening. Some of them noticed that the doors did not open easily, some found the clock had stopped, but no one paid great attention, and the soup was preparing for the evening meal, when a poor sick girl in bed in the uppermost house, lying helpless and with nothing to occupy her attention, noticed the walls of her room giving way. She gave the alarm, and not a moment too soon; she was carried out of the danger, as they thought, to the house below; but this was no safe refuge—it also was giving way! And the next, and the next!

All was confusion and haste; cattle, sheep, and fowls were hastily turned out, a few household treasures secured, and then came a sound that struck terror into all who heard it—the temple bell rang of itself as if it tolled the knell of the village. In headlong flight the poor inhabitants fled to the houses in the valley below to tell their sad story, literally not having where to lay their heads. Next morning, when the dawn rose on the Valley of the Rontion, all looked eagerly for Besaudun, but it was gone. Only a fragment of the temple wall remained, where the bell had caught in falling. Not a trace remained of the village street; a black, treacherous quagmire covered what had been houses.

So quietly had all happened that for days one could hear a clock striking from underground, and a poor cock which had been left behind was heard crowing as if he was calling for the day which he was never to see. This happened, as I told you, forty years ago. Schoolboys and schoolgirls who looked into that black abyss are fathers and mothers of families now, and it is from one of them that I heard the story. Of course I had many questions to ask. What become of the people? "Oh, the pastor collected money in England, Switzerland, and Holland to build houses, but no one dared build on the old spot." What is it now? For years it was left desolate, but of late years it has been ploughed over and cultivated.

But, added my informant, if you want to hear more you should ask the mayor of the commune, he even wrote a "Complainte" about it. Was he in the village? "No, but he saw it all." How did he escape? Why, his house was just above the village. He had built on a rock, and so, when all the other houses were destroyed, his was left standing. Is not Besaudun a parable for us, whether we are French or English? "And the temple?" I asked. It was rebuilt in a safer place, but the old bell was hung in it, and some one had saved the old pulpit Bible; and the young pastor, who preaches there once a month, uses it still.—Your sincere friend,

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Lecture Hall, Union Chapel, York-place, Oxford-road, Manchester, Feb. 6 to 23; Blundel Sands, Feb. 24; Southport, Feb. 26 to 28; Mr. H. Hutchinson, Finsbury-park Congregational Church, Feb. 7 to 12; Finchley, Feb. 20 and 21; Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, St. Mary's Hall, Merton, Feb. 7 to 17; Mr. Josiah Spiers is spending February in visiting Orphanages in and near London; Dewsbury, March 18 to April 1; Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, All Souls' Church, Nottingham, Feb. 14 to 21; Mr. Livesey Carrott, Athenæum, Camden-road, every Sunday at 3 p.m.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

A large and varied effort was put forth by Mr. Arrowsmith among the Bedford school boys and girls during the Christmas holidays. Mr. Arrowsmith was assisted by Mr. W. Harry Roberts, B.A. (who has lately joined the staff of the Children's Special Service Mission), and a large number of men from Oxford and Cambridge.

Bedford swarms with schoolboys, and naturally the efforts of the missionary were bent to reach these. All sorts of special gatherings were arranged for them, and the missioners showed themselves their friends by arranging games, such as hockey, football, snow-fights, &c.; and many a fellow came to the meetings drawn by the interest excited by the games.

The special meetings for the boys were capitally attended by an average of 150. Mr. Roberts was especially acceptable, and his earnest words went to many a heart which will never forget the message of life spoken.

Dr. Barnardo came on January 20 and addressed a crowded meeting in the Town Hall; Mrs. Poole on January 21. Rev. F. B. Meyer and Mr. Hutchison, editor of The Boy's Own Paper, also gave addresses.

Messrs. E. M. Dennes and J. M. Wigner, B.A., of the London Committee, also came down to Bedford and addressed the young people.

A large number of drawing-room meetings were also held, and attended with blessed results.

Much prayer had gone up to the Throne from Christian parents in the town, and also from the Bible-classes already in operation. These latter will reap a blessing in answer by reason of their largely increased numbers.

At the preparatory meeting on December 18 Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken gave an interesting address, and spoke of the way in which he met everywhere those who had received blessing through the Children's Mission, and also that the bulk of those reached by evangelistic missions were young people.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Feb. 14, Matthew v. 33-48; Mon., Feb. 15, vi. 1-18; Tues., Feb. 16, vi. 19-34; Wed., Feb. 17, vii. 1-14; Thurs., Feb. 18, vii. 15-29; Fri., Feb. 19, viii. 1-17; Sat., Feb. 20, viii. 18-34.

Miss Mittendorff's Home.

All friends of the above Home will be glad to know that Miss Mittendorff, "the honoured foundress, has returned to England with restored health, and, though quite incapable of taking any active part in management, would gladly speak at drawing-room meetings in the neighbourhood respecting the work." Meanwhile, her place is occupied by Miss Macgrath, who speaks of the past year as having been one of inexpressible trial joined with remarkable interpositions. Readers of the report before us will discover instances of both these phases of experience. Miss Macgrath adheres to the plan followed by the founder, as she does not ask for assistance from anyone, looking to the Lord alone for aid. Though she has had seasons of painful waiting, yet all her needs have been supplied, and she has had the joy of closing the financial year without debt. In response to prayer and faith no less than £750 has been sent in, beside garments, provisions, medicine, &c., one friend always supplying the meat for Sundays throughout the year.

In this way provision has been made during the past year for the sixty-three children who have formed the inmates. These are all being trained in the fear of God, provided with a plain English education, instructed daily in God's Word, and fitted for situations as domestic servants and housekeepers. Clayton House, Epsom, is very near to either of the railway-stations; and it is much wished that kind friends and helpers would take the opportunity of paying a visit any afternoon and thus "see for themselves." Definite information may also be obtained of Deputy-Surgeon General Partridge, M.D., of Beckenham, who is a member of the council and a constant visitor to the Home. The report is written by Mr. Joseph Weatherley (51, Gordon-square, W.C.), one of the trustees, who speaks in the highest terms of the present manageress, and much regrets "the wear and tear" which her dependent life and course involves, though thankful for its successes and achievements.

MR. THOMAS MARTIN, who is receiving donations in aid of the fund for the relief of starving peasants in Russia, should be addressed "White Hill, Crowborough, Sussex." Protestant Dissenters receive no help from funds that are officially administered, and the present effort will be in connection with Mr. Hohenberg's Mission.

DR. STEPHENSON'S HOME.

Special effort is being made, says the new report issued by the President of the Wesleyan Conference, at the present time on behalf of "those lads who are about our streets from morning till night doing odd jobs, having half their time unoccupied, are becoming more vicious and demoralised every day, have graduated as casuals, never learnt a trade, and who ultimately form the largest constituent in the submerged tenth." For these Dr. Stephenson suggests the purchase of a farm, where they can be industriously employed and religiously trained; towards this, £500 has been given by a friend, and the project is fairly on its way toward realisation.

During the past year the existing work has been steadily and successfully prosecuted. The finances show a larger income than ever before, amounting to nearly £17,000. More than one thousand children were under our care, says the Doctor, and the moral and spiritual tone of the Homes has been encouraging. The London Branch of the institution (Bonner-road, N.E.) admitted 126 children last year, one of whom was picked up in the streets of a northern town with a label on his back, "Whoever finds, keep," and was handed over to the Home by the S.P.C.C. In another case, replying to a request to let the poor neglected child come into the Home, the so-called drunken mother exclaimed: "Oh, yes; anywhere to get rid of him."

The several branches at Edgworth (near Bolton), Gravesend, Ramsey (Isle of Man), Birmingham, Alverstoke, and the Emigration Depôt at Hamilton (Ontario), are also progressing. The one at Edgworth, near Bolton, tells of "an awful boy, dangerous, a police pest, a nuisance to everybody, damages property, runs the streets, sleeps anywhere, and does nothing," but who was changed marvellously. Almost a compliment is paid by the Government Inspector to the manager of the Gravesend branch, where ninety-four per cent. of the boys "passed"; also "that the school is managed with much special knowledge and experience." A letter, received from Canada, written by one of the old boys, says: "You will be pleased to hear that I have taken my stand for the Saviour and am about to confess Him before men. I see that Christ died for the ungodly, and that I come under that head, and could see myself a lost, helpless sinner, but Jesus found me and now I am his." Concerning the children sent out, it is observed, with marked impartiality, that the majority of them do not attain to extraordinary success, but that they do attain to a degree of success which is frequently greater than could have been possible to them in England. One of these is about to enter on a course of theological training for the ministry of the gospel. Another, who was formerly "one of the most hopeless cases," is now engaged in Mission work in China.

Communications may be made to Dr. T. B. Stephenson, The Children's Home, Bonner-road, Victoria-park, N.E. The report closes with devout gratitude to God "for young hearts that have given themselves to the Saviour," also for increased faith in his word and in the power of his grace "among us all."

Dr. Stephenson writes well and to the point when he says, "Much thought and attention are required by our children who have gone out into the world. It should be remembered that we have not done with our children when we place them in a first situation. We feel that they are ours still, and we have to keep in touch with them by visitation, by correspondence, and in other ways. This should be remembered by those who criticise the cost of our work. Nothing can be more unjust than that which is often done, viz., to take the total number of inmates, and divide by that the gross expenditure. Hundreds of pounds need to be spent in caring in various ways for our children who have gone forth from us, but who have not yet reached years of independence. If we are not to lose the advantage of work already done, and money already spent, we must watch wisely and tenderly over our youths and maidens. It should be remembered, therefore, that our work is much wider than the care and maintenance of those children who at any one moment are resident under our roofs.

"It should also be remembered that our work includes much effort for the protection and rescue of young girls. This department, though very valuable, might be greatly increased in value if we had the means to extend it, and to open branches in various towns."

Our National Guilt.

HUMILIATION, PRAYER, FASTING.

There is hope for the lands whose sons suffer so terribly through our national greed, because the spirit of prayer, as well as that of honest, individual and united activity, is manifestly and widely abroad among God's people of every denomination. Monday last, the eve of the legislative re-assembly at Westminster, was observed as the first of three days devoted to confession, supplication, and thanksgiving, in connection with the growing agitation for the immediate abolition of the devastating Anglo-Asiatic opium traffic. Doubtless, besides those who gathered three times a day in Exeter Hall, London, the Lord's remembrancers throughout the kingdom and the world largely swelled the volume of petition by congregational and family gatherings, and in the quiet of individual privacy.

Monday morning's meeting was occupied with "The Godward Aspect of the Question," and was very fairly attended. Mr. Donald Matheson expressed from the chair his sense of the need for the presence of God's Spirit and for unwavering faith. He said that as prayer on this matter is undoubtedly in the line of God's will, this must eventually be cast into the sea of abolition, and the answer may come as quickly as that which surprised the little band who prayed for Peter's deliverance from prison.

After the chairman's address, there came from one and another thanksgiving for the spirit of true concern now obtaining in godly hearts, followed by prayer for Divine compassion in the humiliation which avarice in high places and the neglect of Christians have brought upon God's Church.

Rev. C. A. Baskerville, vicar of Walthamstow, instanced Daniel as an example of abundant confession while burdened with the sins of the people, and the speaker further lifted up his voice to God in acknowledgment of the Church's to deal with the drink blight at home or the opium curse abroad. While the language of God's own is, "We know not how to go out against this great foe," their spirit should be "Our eyes are up unto Thee."

Others present offered thanksgiving that the richly-deserved judgments of God for England's fostering of the opium appetite and ministration to debauchery have been so far delayed, and that so long time has been given for repentance; with supplication that God's people may see the matter in his light. One petitioner fairly broke down and wept at the dishonour done to the Saviour's name, in the fact that the poison is beginning to be called "Jesus opium."

There was a decidedly increased attendance for the AFTERNOON MEETING.

Mr. J. Bevan Braithwaite presided, and reminded the meeting of Christ's assurance concerning heavenly ratification of his Church's binding and loosing on earth. The several and many friends who promptly led in prayer plainly recognised the grave responsibility of the Church of God for the traffic; and repeated supplication was made that, in the spirit of Him who gave his Son for the salvation of the world, Christian men and women may deem no sacrifice too great in seeking the deliverance of the helpless millions who groan in opium slavery.

Mrs. Michael Baxter drew an instructive parallel between the oppression of the Israelites under Pharaoh and that of our Asiatic dependents. It is sad to find a Christian people acting like the Egyptians of old, but our abused power is without precedent in history, and, unless we humble ourselves before God, there is nothing before England but his curse. Mrs. Baxter narrated some striking deliverances from the morphia habit, and thought such instances might encourage to prayer not only for the stoppage of the opium trade, but for the healing of those whom it has enslaved.

The address was followed by some stirring appeals that God would lay his mighty hand upon the satanic power behind officials and rulers whose eyes are blinded of the devil by misleading reports. Another fervent supplicator besought God, while pardoning the idolatry of Asia, to forgive that of England in worshipping

THE IDOL OF REVENUE.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson said he would be glad to see more of the people of God coming out from the position which Jude describes as occupied by those who are "blind and cannot see afar off." English Christians have largely come to regard themselves as pre-eminently the chosen of God; but surely He has an equal regard for the millions of China, India, and Burmah. The speaker closed with an earnest prayer that God would be pleased to give ministerial watchmen to digest, for the benefit of themselves and their flocks, the appalling facts disclosed in the literature which has been so freely circulated among them of late.

EVENING MEETING.

The last gathering of the day was occupied with humiliation before God for the comparatively small results, through the opium bane, of much mission labour in Asia; and prayer that all mission boards at home may take action in a prayerful spirit, and bring the subject prominently forward in their March magazines.

Mr. George Gillett took the chair, and opened with some impressive Scriptures, showing that the true worship of God cannot be separated from righteous action. One friend among the audience went so far as to pray that the opium crops may fail! Throughout the day the voices of women were frequently lifted up in prayer to God; and some petitions, very remarkable for directness and pathos, were heard from them at this closing meeting.

Brigade-Surgeon Pringle, M.D., of the Bengal Army, gave very decided testimony concerning the extent to which Gospel work among the heathen is made of none effect through the contempt excited in the Indian native mind by drink shops and opium stores under British auspices. God may withdraw from British Christians the present opportunity, unless it be promptly used to atone in some measure for our historical reputation as the nation which has MADE ASIA TO SIN.

A lady in the audience read Ezekiel's fulfilled prophecy of Tyre's destruction, as showing how easily God may shatter both the golden idol and the merchandise which seems to bring the curse of an Indian revenue continually deficient. Another petitioner besought God to help Christians answer their own prayers by consistent action.

Mr. B. Broomhall found much encouragement to prayer through the marked progress of the last twelve months. Still, were there not a lamentable lack of knowledge, especially among the managers and supporters of mission work, concerning the way in which the eternal welfare of millions of souls is involved in the opium question, missions would be more largely represented than they are in this agitation for the just abolition of that which causes God's name to be blasphemed, hinders his work, as does nothing else, and ruins the souls of men.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson prayed God to cast out the dumb devil which, from false considerations of loyalty to an earthly government, shuts the mouths of Anglo-Indians now occupying centres of influence in England, concerning opium evils well known to them; whereas, the highest loyalty requires unflinching testimony to the truth, for God, and for the sake of an oppressed humanity. The Chairman closed by beseeching Divine intervention between those who battle for the right and the opposing forces of mere sordid official interests.

OLD KENT ROAD Y.M.C.A.—A new branch of the Young Men's Christian Association has just been formed in the Old Kent-road, S.E. Books, wall-texts, also funds for the purchase of furniture, &c., would be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Mr. H. E. Fairbairn, 17, Relf-road, Peckham, S.E.

THE PROTESTANT-REACTION PLEDGE.—Referring to the suggestion of a correspondent that there is need for an "Anti-Ritualistic League," Rev. E. A. Watkins, vicar of Ubbeston, Suffolk, writes to us calling attention to the Protestant Reaction Pledge, which is designed to induce Christian people to take active measures against the spread of the deadly errors and practices of Romanism and Ritualism. The agency has not political or sectarian bias, but is formed simply and entirely on Protestant lines. Two leaflets have been published in connection with the movement—one being a call to Protestants, and the other giving a variety of reasons for opposing Romanism and Ritualism. Copies of these and, other information may be had from Mr. Watkins at the address given.

CONGO-BALOLO MISSION.

DEATH OF MR. J. M'KITTRICK.

The Congo-Balolo Mission has sustained a grievous loss; its founder and head has been taken away, and one of his helpers has simultaneously been called to rest. The first intimation was received on Friday week, by telegram from St. Thomas, and seven days later confirmatory intelligence and sad details came to hand. Then letters were received from Dr. Harry Guinness and Mrs. McKittrick, written from Stanley Pool about the middle of December. These stated that Mr. McKittrick had suffered from an attack of hæmaturic fever while with Dr. Guinness at Bagala, but had recovered, and seemed fairly well on the way home. The day before arrival, however, he began to complain of his head, and on arrival at his own station developed anæmic symptoms which made extraordinarily rapid progress, so that in a few days he was carried off.

Mrs. Guinness writes to us: "Neither Dr. Guinness nor Mrs. McKittrick thought that he was dying. A sudden change came, however, and she sent in haste for Harry. As soon as he entered the room he recognised the state of the case, and falling on his knees prayed God to be with his beloved servant in the hour of death! This was the first intimation the poor dear young widow had of the stroke that was hanging over her, and it stunned her with horror. Dear McKittrick passed away quite quietly and peacefully, and was not, I think, conscious that he was dying. Brother John Luff's death seems to have taken place at Stanley Pool, but the letters were written before the date of the event. We think that Dr. Guinness is now on his way home, and that he will probably be in Madeira by the Portuguese mail. I suppose he will come on by the next Castle packet from the Cape, but we hardly know yet at what date we may expect him.

"The blow has been a very severe one to us, and especially to Andrew McKittrick, dear John's brother, who was a student here, and to Edith, whom you know is with us. The loss to the Mission is very great indeed; but, thank God, not irreparable now, since Harry is himself acquainted with the country, and with the practical working of the Mission. This makes all the difference. Had McKittrick been removed before, it would almost have shipwrecked the Mission. Now I trust it will not do any very serious damage. It is sweet to think that he knew before he died that spiritual blessing was breaking out all around them. Both at Bonginda, Ikau, and Lulanga, as well as at several of the stations of the Baptist Missionary Society on the Upper Congo, baptisms are taking place. He has not laboured in vain, or spent his strength for naught!

"Sooner than I ever remember in the history of missions the Gospel labours of the brethren on the Congo have been crowned with spiritual success. In the Telegu country the missionaries had to live and die and labour for forty years without seeing a convert. In the Karen country it was over twenty years. In the Sandwich Islands I think it was seventeen, and in our own original Mission on the Congo it was seven years before we saw a convert. The Balolo Mission is scarcely three years old yet, and at three of its four stations there are now native Christians! While much tried and discouraged on the one hand, we are thus encouraged and rejoiced on the other.

"Harry writes that we must look to sending out two large parties soon after his return. He seems to be well himself, but exceedingly thin, and I have no doubt we shall see him very much worn and altered. Dora (Mrs. McKittrick) will come home at once, if possible. She is mercifully sustained, but heartbroken. She means to return soon. Where he is buried, and her only little one, her heart is, and there her life will be spent."

THE SABBATH IN CANADA.—A great victory on behalf of the observance of the Sabbath has just been gained at Toronto, Canada. An attempt was made to run street-cars on the Lord's Day. The ladies of the Women's Christian Temperance Union organised a band to visit in every district of the city, and stir up the people to think rightly on the subject. Prayer-meetings were also held. On January 4 a poll was taken, when 10,351 voted for Sunday cars, and 14,287 against, a majority of 3936 on the right side. The example of Toronto might well be followed by towns and cities elsewhere.

PASTOR JACOB AND HIS WIFE,

OF OROOMIAH, PERSIA.

The portraits we give this week recall glorious memories of the work of Fidelia Fiske in Persia, well-nigh half a century ago. The marvels that were then wrought by Divine grace come within the category which Dr. Pierson has appropriately termed "Miracles of Missions." If the narrative tells of Christian devotion, it still more evidently exhibits the power of God put forth to establish Gospel light in the midst of spiritual darkness.

Pastor Jacob and his wife, Moressa, who are at present on a visit to this country in connection with their work among Mohammedans in Persia, are natives of the city of Oroomiah. Their story is very interesting. They were originally members of the old and corrupt Nestorian Church. Both were, however, early in life brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, through the instrumentality of the first American missionaries who settled in the country. Pastor Jacob was educated under the superintendence of Dr. Perkins and others, while Moressa was trained under the care of Miss Fiske, whose life and labours have been long known to many Christians through her memoirs, in which frequent mention is made of Moressa, then a young girl.

The conversion of both took place about the same time, during a period of religious revival in 1846 and 1847, the Pastor being then nineteen and Moressa twelve years of age. The work was manifestly of the Lord. In the schools that had been established for boys and girls, instruction in Gospel truth was faithfully given, and prayer was unceasingly offered for the Divine blessing to own the endeavour. Miss Fiske thus describes what took place:—

Monday, Jan. 19, 1846.—There were such marked indications of interest in my school, that I asked those who felt that they must now care for their souls to come to my room at five o'clock. I had been out of my school but a few minutes, when I found that a number of the girls had sought places of prayer. While asking for wisdom to guide the dear children, Mr. Stoddard came to the door, and said, "I cannot stop, but I want you to know that four or five of my boys are much distressed on account of their sins." How our hearts went up to heaven in thanksgiving at that hour; and how were they filled with trembling and anxiety!...For three weeks after the revival commenced we had but little company. The time seemed to be given us to labour expressly for our pupils, and it was to us like one continued Sabbath. Every place in our house was consecrated by prayer, and all our work was for souls.*

Moressa was among the first to cheer the heart of Miss Fiske by testifying for Christ; and her betrothal to Pastor Jacob was a touching incident, which Miss Fiske described as follows, in her diary, under date Dec. 1, 1847:—

Moressa, one of our older pupils, was to-day betrothed. When the time came for placing the ring, which is the seal of the engagement, upon her finger, she was not to be found. The house was searched, and in its remotest closet her plaintive voice was heard pleading for the blessing of the Holy One on what she was about to do. The company who had assembled were long detained, but were deeply interested in thinking that a child of prayer was to be added to their family. It was a day, not of customary mirth, but of deep and holy feeling.

Pastor Jacob was for many years an ordained minister of the "Reformed Nestorian Church." The condition of the benighted followers of the False Prophet had, however, long pressed heavily on his heart, although various circumstances had prevented his taking any steps towards the carrying out of a long-cherished desire to evangelise among them. But the way seemed to open during a visit to this country in 1880. In London and in other parts of England he and his wife made many friends, and it was during a stay in Manchester that their course became clear. In that city they resided for nearly four months, with a friend to whom they had been recommended and introduced. This friend bears the following testimony regarding them:—

Having during four months, in 1880, had daily, almost hourly, opportunities of becoming acquainted with and observing the characters and objects of Pastor Jacob and Moressa, his wife, and having also, after their return to Oroomiah, kept up a constant correspondence with them, I have never lost nor had occasion to modify the high opinion which I had at the first formed of them both. I think Pastor Jacob eminently fitted for the work he has undertaken—and dangerous work it is—courageous, sensible, straightforward, full of earnestness and love to God and men, and "sound in the faith."

Moressa endeared herself to all who knew her in Manchester, and her value as a helper in the Pastor's work—especially in having to deal with the unfortunate females who suffer from the worst evils of a polygamous system—cannot be over-estimated. A small number of Christian friends united in promising support to the Pastor, and in providing an income for him—a very moderate income, indeed, but sufficient if it had been maintained. But the lapse of years, the loss of interest on the part of some, and the difficulty of keeping up and disseminating a knowledge of what was going on, caused a serious falling off even in this very moderate provision—so much so that about one-half of it came at last to be furnished by two or three Christian friends, who had the means as well as the faith and love to continue the indispensable aid.

Thus, after much consideration and much prayer, the Pastor resolved once more to visit England, with his wife, and a son who is, we believe, desirous, if possible, of obtaining a medical qualification, in order that he may assist his father in a department which would be highly appreciated in Oroomiah. So it comes about that Pastor Jacob and Moressa are among us once more. The journey was a serious undertaking at his age (sixty-four), but the choice lay between such a step and allowing the work to die out for want of sustained interest on the part of those who must needs supply the means of its support.

As for the results of the Pastor's labours, these have been very pronounced and decided. We believe, however, that it is necessary to be exceedingly cautious in what is said as to this. God seems to have stopped the mouth of the lion, but any unwise or rash statement made in print might arouse opposition and persecution. Those who listen to the Pastor in any of his meetings—speaking in Syriac, interpreted by Moressa—will hear enough to fill them with intense interest, and evoke their active sympathy.

These very interesting visitors have three principal objects in view at present—to start as evangelists to their own people some of the Mohammedan converts whom they have trained in Scripture knowledge; to provide for the establishment of a medical mission in connection with the specific Gospel work; and to arrange for an extension of the Pastor's own operations, so that he may be able to take the Scriptures and their message into parts of Persia where the Word has never yet been preached. To make known the needs of his country, and set forth his plans, the Pastor has been addressing drawing-room and other meetings in various towns and cities of England; and he remains a short time longer to avail himself of further opportunities.

The Pastor's work is difficult and dangerous, but full of importance, and it calls for the earnest prayers of the Lord's people, as well as for their material help.

ON THE BLACKDOWN HILLS.

A very fruitful evangelistic Mission has been held at the Baptist Chapel, Hemyock, on the Blackdown Hills, by Mr. J. Burnham, the well-known singing evangelist of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. He was assisted by Pastors W. L. Smith (of Hemyock and Sainthill), W. Gillard (Uffculme), I. Showell, and W. H. Brealey (of the Blackdown Hills Mission). A week of special and united prayer had previously been held, and great expectancy was raised. The Lord did not disappoint us.

Notwithstanding inclement weather, dark nights, and rough roads, most encouraging numbers attended night after night. It was most refreshing to hear the many public testimonies of definite blessing received, and especially to observe the goodly number of young men who boldly declared themselves on the Lord's side. The Lord's people have been greatly stirred, and we fully believe the blessing will spread and deepen till many a hillside and valley shall re-echo the story of "Jesus and his love."

In connection with the Mission work in our hands, we are now rejoicing over many and many a family who are unbroken in their union with Christ, though some of them number a goodly company. Our day and Sunday-schools are seed-beds of Gospel truth; where the Word of God is daily read and expounded, and the matters of the soul and eternity are earnestly and lovingly impressed on heart and conscience. The seed lies buried, but not forgotten, and the incorruptible Word bears fruit to the glory of God and our hearts' joy and rejoicing. We have been made glad indeed by seeing many young men and others who were former scholars in our schools and Bible-classes, led to Christ during our Brother Burnham's visit.

WAIFS AND STRAYS SOCIETY.—At a meeting of the Committee, held recently at Church House, Dean's-yard, it was reported that five offers of £100 each had now been received to meet the donation of £100 conditionally promised towards the deficit on the General Fund. Four more are now required. It was reported that the Children's Union in connection with the Society was rapidly extending, a large number of branches having already been established.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

For the encouragement of God's children, it is often necessary to remember that the Lord's kingdom does not come with observation, but that it works secretly, as the leaven through the lump. Of this kind is the work which the Société Evangélique de France has pursued for the last fifty-nine years, and is pursuing still, with unabated faith.

The difficulties, however, seem enormous. We are so few; the ignorance is almost too great to be credited by those who have but a slight knowledge of the country. The indifference, sedulously fostered by the Romish clergy—the worldliness—is such that, unless sent by the Lord, a casual worker is almost sure to return home in despair, and declare labour impossible.

We have now built in Brive a mission-room, which was opened in October, and since the opening our congregation has nearly trebled. We can but wait with patience for results.

In the neighbouring town of Tulle, work was begun nine years ago, with financial help from Mr. McAll. In the beginning we had some rough work—uproarious meetings, stone throwing, sometimes the room filled with the smoke of squibs, &c. My wife accompanied me for a time, to help to maintain order, and order was at last established. But indifference took the place of hostility, and the room was emptied. I remember preaching one night before two persons—one an old man fast asleep, the other a confirmed drunkard.

The Lord has called this drunkard to Himself. Now he is a pillar of this little church, with his wife, his eldest son, and his brother-in-law. The Sunday-school has these for teachers. And is it not wonderful, indeed, to see this former drunkard, now a model husband and father, commanding influence enough, through his holy life, to gather round him every Thursday night some ten or fourteen workmen like himself, to whom he teaches what he knows of God's Word? Most of these are hopeful inquirers. The other day a backslider was restored, and after we had partaken of the Lord's Supper together, he thanked this friend for opening his eyes to his true condition.

A few days ago I received a letter from a turnkey who lived in the neighbourhood of Tulle. He writes thus:—"It is now ten years since I invited you to preach in my village. I was then prompted only by hatred against the priest, but now I have learned something better," &c. No, the seed is not sown in vain.

If France is to be brought back to the Gospel, it must be by such patient sowing. Let me say that this Société Evangélique de France, whose secretary is Pastor Mouron, 76, Rue d'Assas, Paris, is just now in financial difficulties through the death of wealthy supporters, amongst them Dr. G. Monod, its general secretary. On December 31, 1891, the debt amounted to £1100. Should such a work be crippled for want of funds, when a large extension seems to be commanded by the fact that France is everywhere open to the preaching of the Word? May those who really pray for the coming of his kingdom see to this.

TANDRAGEE, IRELAND.—An adult Bible-class probably unique in character, has been conducted here for thirty-five years by the same leader. It consists of about twenty persons of various ages, from twenty to seventy, of whom three have been members throughout the thirty-five years, one for thirty years, and five from sixteen to thirteen years, and of the first four three have attended every Lord's Day for twenty-two, twenty, and thirteen years of their membership, and the remaining five have attended one eight years, another seven, another six, and two others five years, each without being absent during any of these years. Better than all, there is good ground to hope that many, if not all, the members have been born again.

MISS PROCTOR'S DRUSE SCHOOLS.

In the new report of the Druse Schools Schwifat, Lebanon, Miss Proctor says:—"Th year that is past has been one of much anxiet on account of the cholera; nearer and nearer i seemed drawing to us, and much fervent praye went up that we might be spared. The Lor heard our prayer, the pestilence was stayed, an all our children returned to their homes in goo health for the summer holiday. The schoo reopened October 15 with increased numbers and within a week we heard of the outbreak o cholera in Damascus, and at once quarantine wa enforced; no one could come from that neigh bourhood, so some of our little ones were de tained, and have not yet been set at liberty.

"As we heard day by day of the ravages of th disease, how earnestly we prayed, and how thank ful for our continued preservation! Now we trus the danger is past. The quarantine is still con tinued, and makes all kinds of provisions muc dearer, as trade is hindered, not only with Damas cus, but all through the country. Thank God, He ha given sufficient to meet the increased demand.

"Our schools have been very prosperous throughout the year, and the children passed a most creditable examination in June. We ha many applications for admission, and have no twenty-five girls and seventeen boys boarding i the house; we expect five more early in the ne year. We have also twenty-five day scholars, s there are seventy-six children under instruction I have been obliged to increase my staff o teachers, and have now seven besides myself, a boarding in the house. The friend who came t me last year is still with me, and has taken u work among the women. She is assisted by ou head teacher, who acts a Bible-woman.

"Some of the neigh bouring villages are askin us to extend our work t them, which we woul gladly do as far as tim and means will allow. have arranged to visi three of them in turn and hold a women's meet ing. I would like t employ a good colporteu to visit and read to th people. There is a blind man here who, I think, would be very suitabl He was being trained for a teacher when h lost his sight; he is intelligent and capabl having learned to read the raised type. Ou dispensary has been open eight months, and ha been attended by 439 patients. Our Youn Women's Christian Association is flourishing we have twelve members and eighteen asso ciates."

MR. EOLL AT PORT SAID.

Writing from this busy Eastern port, Mr. Eol thanks heartily all who have co-operated b showing sympathy in his service amongst sailor of all lands, as also those who have sent clothin and blankets for use among the poor Jewis refugees. It appears that from November, 189 to October, 1891 (the latest statistics issued between eleven and twelve thousand Jews hav passed through this port on their way to th land of their fathers. Of these, 1640 were helpe in food and clothes, and some with passage t Jaffa. Since the outbreak of cholera at Damas cus, the Syrian ports have been under quaran tine, and in consequence thereof the immigratio was stopped.

At times Mr. Eoll and his helpers were sorel tried when seeking to aid the poor starvin people, and once or twice they were forced to sen them away for want of means, and some of thos died on the streets from weakness and want Not a few told me: "If we had been so kindl treated at home, in Russia, we should never hav come this way to ask for help, nor to have becom a burden upon you, dear sir." 8000 Scriptures i Hebrew, Polish-German, and Spanish-Hebre were distributed amongst them.

When the quarantine is removed, streams o refugees will begin to flow once more. Meanwhil the general work among sailors, emigrants, an others, is going on, with tokens of the goodnes and grace of the Lord.

AMERICAN NOTES.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Lady Macdonald, the wife of the late Prime Minister of Canada, has set a noble example to the higher classes of the Dominion in her life of strict adherence to the principles of total abstinence. She avows that in health she can perform her work without stimulant, while in sickness she invariably and positively refuses to touch it. Certainly, considering the practice of "society," Lady Macdonald is a brave woman.

General O. O. Howard, the present official head of the American army, is another bright example of Christian heroism. Both in his official and private life he adorns the Christian profession. Like the late General Gordon, he is a great worker among street vagrants. On the field of war he has been proved as a gallant soldier, but his dearly-loved work is in the pursuit of peaceful philanthropy. Whether searching along the Bowery after a lost lad, addressing a Sunday-school, occupying a church pulpit, or making a speech at a banquet, General Howard is loyal to Christ, and loving towards humanity. His large-hearted generosity has kept him a poor man—poor in this world, but rich in faith, and an heir of the kingdom. In the city of New York, where thousands are on the verge of starvation, and thousands more stand in need of a helping hand to place them in a position where they can earn their bread, where hospitals and other benevolent institutions call loudly for financial aid, twenty-six persons paid for one club dinner the enormous sum of 3900 dollars. Here is a text for a sermon.

The Bible continues to be the subject of sharp debate. The Higher Critics have been delivering lectures on its Errancy. Now the tables are turned, and some strong men have engaged to follow with a series of lectures on its Inerrancy. There is a loud outcry over Dr. Lyman Abbott's recent fulmination against the Holy Scriptures. The Herald and Presbyter speaks of it as "simply scandalous." This successor of Henry Ward Beecher out-Herods Herod. While some of his audience left in disgust, others who remained seemed to relish his criticism of the decalogue when he remarked "that a man might keep the whole law, and yet be unfit for decent society in the nineteenth century." The Bible, he declared, was insufficient as a rule of faith and practice.

The Young Men's Christian Association of New York has recently come into possession of its third large legacy. The first amounted to 150,000 dollars, the second reached the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, while this last legacy, from the Will of the late Mrs. Robert L. Stuart, amounts to eighty thousand dollars. This estimable lady has left a few millions for other religious institutions, besides sums of money for her pastor, Dr. John Hall, and his family not less than fifty thousand dollars. She remembered President McCosh and many other worthy persons.

I have noticed, on several occasions, how much of the blessed hope of our Lord's second Advent is found in Negro melodies. Evidently their former bondage evoked this anticipation. But they still sing with a sublime pathos while enjoying their liberty those hymns which look forward to that glad event. And such hymns are not a few. Here is a specimen :—

'Twas inch by inch I sought de Lord—
Jesus will come by-and-by;
And inch by inch He blessed my soul—
Jesus will come by-and-by.

We'll inch and inch and inch along—
Jesus will come by-and-by;
And inch and inch till we gets home—
Jesus will come by-and-by.

The servant-girl question is becoming serious. The complaint has been made that shops, factories, hotels, and office employment have drawn away from domestic service every girl who can find herself a place. Even low shop and factory wages, with greater expense and narrow quarters, will not drive girls to live as cooks, housemaids, or chambermaids in private homes. But servant girls have spoken, giving other reasons, among which are these :—That they are generally overworked and restricted in their liberty; that their rooms are generally poorly furnished, dark, unwholesome, cheerless; that they are made to feel their position as menials; that the kitchen, generally, is their only room for visiting friends; that scoldings are too frequent. It is an undoubted fact, of which I have ample proof, that many Christian ladies are most inconsiderate of their servants' comfort. As for ungodly mistresses, they are too often despots.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

English people are, doubtless, tired of hearing about Ireland, which has of late "stopped the way" to much useful legislation; and yet I venture to ask your Christian readers to weigh the following appeal. England owes such consideration to Ireland for two great reasons, if none other. First, when most of England was reduced to heathenism under the Saxon invaders, it was from Ireland that Christian men came to evangelise those Saxons, long before the pompous Roman Mission of Augustine. And again, it was by England—under Henry II. and his successors—that Romanism, the source of Ireland's troubles, was forced on our nation, depraving the purer faith implanted by St. Patrick over six hundred years before, and which Irish missionaries had borne to England and Germany. If, therefore, Ireland has been a trouble to England, it is but the reflex of English action, and it behoves English Christians, with all patience, to supply the remedy—the same pure Gospel which Irishmen bore to England in her need, and which she is largely responsible for crushing in Ireland.

Herein lies the remedy for Ireland's distress, and the present is a most propitious time for its introduction. Divisions among contending parties are making manifest to all thoughtful onlookers the false religion interwoven with the agitations which are desolating our land; and also, openings—such as have not been for many years—are made for the introduction of the pure Word of God. Irishmen are beginning to see the unreality of the Roman system and reacting against it, and in the reaction there is danger of many drifting into infidelity. Is it not England's duty in this emergency to supply the Word of God, which only can make them "Wise unto salvation"? I submit that England is our debtor in this matter. May I appeal on behalf of a society, not making high-sounding professions, but real and efficient in its action, which for over sixty years has been steadily applying this remedy? I mean the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, which takes the Gospel to the people in their homes. The Scripture readers have always found admission to the houses of the people, but now, especially, in the inquiry which is abroad among them, they are welcomed, and if, instead of the fifty agents of the Society now labouring through Ireland, five times the number could be sent out, they would find ample work.

I need not explain the merits of this noble Society. What I specially desire is that the readers of The Christian would be very earnest in prayer in our behalf, that the Word of God may indeed be quick and powerful among the Irish people, and also that they will liberally assist to maintain and multiply the Scripture readers so that the Gospel may be sent into districts hitherto unreached. Further information will be gladly supplied by Captain J. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

THE BERLIN CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Last year was to us a period of much blessing, as also of severe trials. All that we needed has come forth, even though we have been, and are still, in financial straits.

Meetings were held, with cheering results, every night during the year; our hall was crowded regularly by those who live far from God and deep in sin. We can look on quite a good number who, according to their own testimony, have been saved. We have lost our Hall, because the residents of the houses in the neighbourhood object to the great concourse of people. Till a new hall is found, which I hope will be the case in the next few weeks, we hold meetings in private dwellings. Our paper, the Vorwarts, we trust has done considerable good; our own people are very eager to buy it, and we have over one hundred subscribers for it in all parts of Germany. We distribute a good many in the streets and elsewhere, with other literature and tracts.

House-to-house visitation has also been carried on, and we enter upon another year's service with gladness, trusting to kind friends to remember us in their prayers, and sustain our feeble hands.

THE BRIGHTON Y.M.C.A.

The Brighton Y.M.C.A. held its twenty-first annual meeting on Wednesday (3rd), when its "coming of age" was celebrated by one of the largest meetings ever held in the Brighton Dome.

Mr. R. A. Bevan was in the chair, and the platform was well filled with representative men associated with the evangelical work of Brighton. The Chairman, in a brief sketch of the commencement and progress of the work in Brighton, alluded to the opening, in 1884, of Steine House, by the late Lord Shaftesbury. Now, the institution was one of which everyone in Brighton might be proud; but let them never forget the assistance they owed to friends who, when appealed to, came forward from London and other great centres, and helped them most liberally and generously on that great and important occasion. Now they had an institution carrying on a great and important work on a secure basis, practically free from debt, open to all young men. Formerly some excuse existed for its advantages not being known, but under existing circumstances there was no excuse for any young man remaining in ignorance of it.

Mr. Henry Varley gave an address on "What is Christian Manhood?" Basing his remarks on the words, "He that hath the Son of God hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life," he went on to show that Christian life is that which is Scripturally expressed by such words as "born again" and "born from above," and that out of Christ Jesus there is no true life. "Christian manhood presupposes the possession of Divine life." The speaker made a powerful appeal to the young men of Brighton to be careful that they were "overshadowed by the personality of Jesus Christ"; that without sinking each his own individuality, all should be subordinated to Him.

Mr. Marriage Wallis, J.P., said he had been at the birth of the Brighton Y.M.C.A.; he had "tried with others to nurse the bantling," and now it had attained full age, being truly, in its present position, a home for young men from home.

Mr. John T. Dorland (Canada) said that while the Y.M.C.A. was not a church, it was not a mere social club, its spiritual work being the most important.

Rev. J. S. Geale moved a resolution commending the Y.M.C.A. to sympathy and support. Messrs. W. Willett, M. Wallis, and Buchel followed, and the proceedings were brought to a happy close.

THE STRANGERS' REST.

At the monthly meeting for Christian workers, on Friday last, the chair being occupied by Mr. J. T. Primrose Peckey, an address was given by Rev. Charles A. Fox, M.A., on "Christ and his Tools," based on Luke v. 1-11.

The "tools," he pointed out, are emptied vessels, weary, disappointed workers, and the old quarters where we have worked without any blessing. He then showed the difference made when Christ entered the vessel. When Christ would thrust us out, let us go. The vessel close to shore is hampered and hindered, cannot float, while out on the waters it becomes a living, moving thing. We move when the Holy Spirit is beneath us. How did this "going down" of Peter affect Christ's estimate of the man? "Fear not, Simon, from henceforth thou shalt catch men." How does Christ being in the vessel affect our estimate of Him? "They left all and followed Him."

The secretary of the Rest, Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, in the course of the evening, made an appeal for Italian and German Scriptures; and for more bags, of which there is great need. He also stated that funds are required for the Zanzibar Rest, another worker being ready to start as soon as possible.

Communications may be addressed to Mr. Isaac, at the Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, E.

THE DEACONNESS AND MISSIONARY TRAINING INSTITUTE, 31, Mount-pleasant-square, Dublin, is in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association. Miss E. Gage-Brown, who is in charge, writes :—"I cannot stay in Palestine on account of health; seeing I myself cannot work in the foreign field, it is very good of God to give me this opportunity of helping others to prepare for going out. We are getting many inquiries about the Home, and hope soon to begin active work."

THE "YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE."

The "Young Helpers' League," which was started early in December last by Dr. Barnardo, of the Advisory Council of which I have the honour to be chairman, has now reached the large membership of six thousand. We have Companions of the League in almost every large city and town throughout the United Kingdom, as well as in smaller places, and from abroad the communications have been most encouraging. Certain of the young English residents in Constantinople, for example, are now pressing for the formation of a "habitation" in that city, where we already have several Companions.

My object in writing this is to urge upon all boys and girls under eighteen years of age, possessing happy home privileges, and who are in sympathy with such beneficent work on behalf of crippled, sick, deaf and dumb, or blind waifs and strays, to send in, with as little delay as possible, written applications for membership of our League, accompanied, of course, with their name and address, their exact age last birthday, and sixpence in stamps for their first year's subscription, to the Secretary, Miss Rachel Norton, at the head office of the League, 18 to 26, Stepney causeway, London, E.

Many have supposed that the new League is strictly local and very limited in the application of its benefits to unhappy children of the waif class; but it is the desire of the Council to make known, through your columns, that they hope, as the League grows in numbers, influence and usefulness, to be able not only to undertake the charge of all crippled and other suffering children who may be in Dr. Barnardo's institutions, but also to pass beyond these, and give help to every institution in the kingdom that undertakes the Christian care and training of such afflicted little waifs and strays. I cannot conceive a wiser or more noble thing to do in the training of our own children, so happily shielded from want and temptation, than to habituate them, while young, to entertain loving, tender thoughts towards their poorer brothers and sisters, and to accustom them also to practical deeds of usefulness, benevolence, and self-denial on behalf of the helpless and suffering. All this may be accomplished through the medium of the "Y.H.L."

May I venture to advise ministers everywhere to endeavour to establish a "habitation" of the Young Helpers' League in their neighbourhoods, and to have it well under their own eye, so that they may possess an active share in the local management, a result much desired by every member of the Council, and not least of all by the founder himself?

I may be permitted to add that the task of forming the children who have already joined into "habitations" necessarily progresses very slowly, the organisation requiring great care; but I am in a position to say that within one month from this date all those who have by that time joined the League will find themselves in direct relation with a local habitation.—I am, sir, yours faithfully.

THE RECLAMATION OF DRUNKARDS. — The methods of curing the drink craze are varied, but many people have had reason to speak highly of that followed for eleven years by Miss Pudney in dealing with female inebriates at Buxton House, Earl's Colne, Essex. Miss Pudney receives patients into her home, and has them under her immediate influence and observation. The regulations have been framed with tact and wisdom, and, excepting the restriction which is essential to the treatment, inmates can have nothing to complain of. Former patients bear grateful testimony to benefits received in this Home—of a class only too sadly necessary, owing to the hold strong drink has gained upon the community in general.

BISHOPSGATE MISSION TO THE JEWS.—The annual tea-meeting in connection with this Mission was held on Tuesday, February 2. Over three hundreds Jews and Jewesses of the poorer class were present; their pale faces spoke eloquently of the distress which many of them are passing through. Rev. Prebendary Gordon Calthrop presided. Isaiah lxii. having been read in Hebrew and German, addresses were delivered by Mr. J. P. Cohen, Rev. J. B. Barraclough, and other friends. This undenominational work has hitherto been carried on in a hall kindly lent by the minister and deacons of Bishopsgate Congregational Church. The missionary, Mr. A. Hornstein, is proposing, however, shortly to acquire a house in the locality, in which to centralise operations and develop the various agencies of the Mission.

OBITUARY.

SIR JOHN E. WILMOT, BART.

We regret to announce the death of Sir John E. Wilmot, Bart.—a good Protestant, and at one time regarded as a possible leader of the party. He it was who, in years gone by, organised a great Protestant demonstration on Greenwich-common.

REV. THOMAS PATTINSON FERGUSON.

This devoted and faithful servant of Christ, who since 1864 has been rector of Shenfield, Essex, passed to his eternal rest on January 28, deeply mourned by all who knew him as a simple, earnest, painstaking pastor loved by all. He was a firm believer in and faithful preacher of the Gospel of salvation by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

THOMAS BRAITHWAITE PALMER, OF HOUNSLOW.

Many friends will hear with deep regret of the decease of this devoted servant of Christ, who fell asleep on January 18, aged 43. For many years he had been the prime mover in the Gospel work carried on in a mission-hall adjoining his business premises in Hounslow-heath. Many have been helped through his instrumentality.

MISS ANNETTE F. CORKE.

On January 23, at 54, Kensington-park-road, Notting-hill, after a short illness, Annette Frances Corke, Hon Sec. to the Luther Memorial Home, 120, Ledbury-road, Bayswater. Her indefatigable labours on behalf of this institution, which provides, rent free, rooms to eight aged gentlewomen in reduced circumstances, will be greatly missed.

MR. RALPH BROCKLEBANK.

This well-known and highly-esteemed helper of every good work was called to his rest last week at Childwall Hall, at the age of eighty-nine years. Until about six years ago, he was a member of the firm of Messrs. T. and J. Brocklebank, who built ships which were in favour with mariners because of their practical immunity from casualty of any sort. During his connection with the dock administration he was one of the valued members of the board, and the Liverpool Seamen's Orphanage, the Home for Aged Mariners, the Royal Infirmary, and many other local charitable enterprises had the advantage of his financial liberality and personal attention. He was an earnest Churchman.

REV. GEORGE DRYSDALE.

Many, in North London especially, will mourn the loss of this earnest and faithful minister, who for five years rendered good service at New Barnet, and afterwards at Crouch-hill, where he became the first pastor of the Presbyterian Church. His teaching was always fresh and instructive, and many loved him as a most helpful preacher of the Gospel, a man of unaffected piety, a true and generous friend. He has left a widow and three children. Mrs. Drysdale met with a terrible accident in the course of an Alpine expedition a number of years ago; and the shock, and the long illness which followed, had much to do with his own ill-health in the later years of his ministry.

REV. DR. PHILLIPS.

The death is announced of Rev. George Phillips, D.D., President of Queen's College, Cambridge, aged 88. Born at Otley, in Suffolk, he had a brilliant University career, and after spending some years as tutor of Queen's, accepted, in 1846, the incumbency of Sandon, in Essex. In 1857 he became President of the College, serving the office of Vice-Chancellor in 1861-2. Besides being an excellent mathematician, he was celebrated for his attainments as a Hebrew and Syriac scholar. He took an active part in promoting the study of these languages in the University, and was instrumental in founding the Semitic Languages and Indian Languages Triposes, and by his influence Dr. Wright, the Professor of Arabic, was elected to a Fellowship at Queen's. He published "A Syriac Grammar," a commentary on the Psalms, and a series of sermons on the Old Testament Messianic texts.

REV. SAMUEL ANTLIFF, D.D.

Far beyond the limits of Primitive Methodism, Rev. Samuel Antliff, D.D., was known and valued as a faithful minister of Christ; hence his death on Tuesday week, at his residence, Braycott, Derby, and at the age of seventy, will be regretted by many. A friend writes: "In June last, the jubilee of his ministry was celebrated in Traffic-street Chapel, Derby, when a large and representative gathering gave proof of the esteem in which he was held by all sections of the Church of Christ. At that time he seemed full of energy and full of hope, and his love of work had not abated by one jot. In September he went to America, with the intention of attending the Œcumenical Conference at Washington, but was confined to his bed during the whole of the session. Having recovered from what was hoped was only a temporary illness, and relying upon his naturally vigorous constitution, we accepted the Canadian physician's prediction that there 'was yet fifteen years' work in him.' How suddenly our hopes have been cut off! Let us, however, give thanks to Almighty God that his life has been spared so long, that he has been able to render so much service as he has, that his testimony for Christ has been continuous and consistent, and that he finishes his course beloved on earth and meet for Heaven."

REV. HUGH HANNA, D.D., BELFAST.

The Protestantism of Ireland in general, and the Presbyterian Church in particular, has suffered a severe loss in the death of Rev. Dr. Hugh Hanna, senior minister of St. Enoch's Church, Belfast, who passed away with impressive suddenness on the night of Tuesday week. He had been that day at a meeting of Presbytery in which he took an active part, went home, had dinner, went out again to a temperance meeting and returned home about nine o'clock rather poorly and died in three hours. Dr. Hanna commenced life as a draper's assistant in Belfast, but while yet a mere youth became a day-school teacher. In 1852 he entered the ministry as pastor of Berry-street church, Belfast, but in five years the building could not accommodate the congregation and a larger edifice had to be erected. During the revival of 1859 this was the centre of a great work, and Dr. Hanna himself stated that at that time he passed through the important spiritual change called conversion. The second church was like the first, soon crowded to excess, and consequently in 1870 St. Enoch's Church, which holds two thousand persons, was built. Here Dr. Hanna wielded an influence for good unparalleled in Belfast. He was a born educationalist, and established a very large number of most successful day and Sabbath schools. He was an eloquent preacher and faithful pastor, yet a keen and able controversialist when need be. Altogether Dr. Hanna was a man amongst men, and his sudden death is much deplored. He was in the 69th year of his age and 40th of his ministry.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

The death of the President of Queen's College, at the age of eighty-eight, has removed from our midst a sincere and devoted follower of the Lord Jesus. He was a great admirer of the C.M.S., and upheld sound evangelical doctrines and principles.

A very good work is being carried on in connection with the Castle End Mission. Every Saturday evening a concert of a thoroughly high tone is held; a fair number of poor people attend. This effort to bring cheerfulness into the lives of our poorer brethren is a work for God.

The University sermon on Sunday, January 31, was preached by Rev. Professor Browne, B.D., Canon of St. Paul's. He took as his text Ps. cxv. 5. "Eyes have they, but they see not." He spoke of the importance of cultivating and nurturing spiritual sight in the Christian, and what a power this has upon the body.

An address full of thought and deep teaching was given to University men, on Sunday evening week, at the Alexandra Hall, by Mr. Stanley Smith, M.A. Being an "old blue" he was heartily welcomed, and especially as one of the "Missionary Band" of seven Cambridge men who, in 1885, sailed for China under the auspices of the China Inland Mission.

At the weekly meeting of the University Church Missionary Union on Monday week, Rev. T. S. Treanor, M.A., Chaplain to the Missions to Seamen in the Downs, gave us his experiences of his life in this great work. He described how, in almost any weather, he and his two boatmen, sail out and board the ships and then hold short services. The object of the work, he said, was to bring the men to a personal knowledge of the Lord Jesus as their own Saviour.

On Thursday, February 4, the Bishop of Ely dedicated the new chapel of Ridley Hall. Lunch was provided in the Hall for distinguished guests and the students. Principal Moule, in rising to thank the Bishop for the kindness of coming at some considerable personal inconvenience, alluded to the architectural beauties of the chapel, and trusted that these would be only helps to a hearty worship and a real sight of the presence of the Lord day by day. A few words were also said by Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., one of the trustees.

MISSIONARY BANDS.—The third half-yearly conference of Missionary Bands, will be held on Saturday afternoon next (3 p.m.), in the Bishop Wilson Memorial Hall, Upper-street, Islington, N., under the presidency of Rev. W. H. Barlow. Papers will be read and addresses delivered by various friends.

C. M. S. MISSIONARIES' BOOK FUND.—By this little effort, begun in 1885, helpful religious books are sent to C.M.S. missionaries abroad. The sum of twenty-five pounds was required to meet last year's expenditures, but as only about sixteen pounds came in there is a small deficit. Missionaries write home letters full of gratitude for the useful little volumes that have been sent to them. In a circular Miss Tucker, who superintends the work, says, "Think how lonely many of our missionaries are, how depressed by heathen surroundings and want of Christian fellowship. Some of those whom you may cheer this year, by sending a little volume, may be beyond the need of such help before it has run its course." Miss Tucker's address is 74, Carlton-hill, Abbey-road, N.W.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which, of course, are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 14.—1 TIMOTHY V.

Instructions for Dealing with Various Classes in the Church.—Widows (1-16).—Elders not in office but in age. Rebuke, i.e., strike hard on. 2. More than once the Apostle urges on Timothy the necessity of purity. The Lord will not put his crystal rock-water into contaminated vessels. 3. Women who had lost their husbands and were poor were to be placed on the church-roll as fit objects of charitable assistance. 4. "Nephews" would include descendants of any degree, and grandchildren. True religion always enforces the obligations of nature and morality. 5. What a beautiful pattern of the life which a woman should lead when free from other ties. She may be "desolate," so far as earthly ties are concerned, but her heart is the trysting-place of all holy thoughts and interests (Luke ii. 36, 37). 6. We get a glimpse here of what death means when employed in Holy Scripture. Under a wanton, prodigal life (and that is the real sense of the Greek) there is the sleep of death to all true life. 8. "Than an unbeliever." Too often non-professors shame those who profess most. 9. It would appear that in the early Church there was a sisterhood of the elder women who were widows for work connected with the Church, and it is to this that the Apostle refers. They were supported by the church. Thus three classes of widows are mentioned—the widow who had children to support her, the widow of whatever age who needed maintenance, and the elder widow who was entrusted with church functions. 10. A lovely apprenticeship! 12. The Apostle says nothing about re-marriage in general, but simply refers to the fact of younger women being liable to accept an offer of marriage, and so to abjure that "first faith" in which they had pledged themselves to the service of the church. 13. Unless there is great watchfulness, the practice of going from house to house, ostensibly on the business of the church, may degenerate into gossip-mongering. 14. "Therefore," i.e., because of their liability to these temptations, the younger widows should not be put on the roll for church-service, but be allowed to marry. A woman's rule should not be exerted over her husband, but over the household. 15. Let us often think what the adversary, i.e., the opponent of Christianity, may say. 16. If some young widow had dependants upon her, especially if they too were widows, she was to do her best for their maintenance. How careful the Apostle was that there should be no idling among Christian disciples. Work is one of the greatest incentives to a pure and noble life. Elders (17.25). If an elder is worthy of honour; he who does so well, is worthy of double. 18. The second quotation was from Luke's Gospel, here recognised as Scripture. 20. Public sins were to be met with public rebuke, in the presence of the assembled church. 21. "Elect" in contrast to 2 Peter ii., 4. "Without prejudice," R.V. 22. No man should be ordained to the ministry until tested and approved. 23. Evidently Timothy was a total abstainer, but the Apostle recommended him to take wine for a special weakness.

MONDAY, FEB. 15.—1 TIMOTHY VI.

Exhortations to Servants (1-2).—The yoke of slavery might be a very galling one, and yet it was to be borne sweetly and gladly, to bring credit to the name of God. Was it not this that made our holy religion spread like a prairie fire in those early centuries? 2. "Because they that partake of the benefit are believing and beloved" (R.V.). Oneness in Christ should be an additional incentive to faithful service.

General Exhortations (3-10).—"Wholesome," i.e., healthy, as opposed to "doting" (4), which means diseased. 5. "Wranglings of men corrupted in mind and bereft of truth" (R.V.) How often does a corrupt imagination rob the mind of all power to enjoy God's truth. Keep the window clean and the light will enter. These men supposed "that godliness was a way of gain" (R.V.). It is well to keep aloof from the diseased, lest we catch the contagion, unless we go to them as physician or nurse. 6. There is a sense in which godliness is great gain. It makes us content with what we now have, and it opens to us stores of blessedness which the wealth of Cræsus could not buy. 7. We are stripped as we pass out of the world of everything except character. 8. There is blessedness in having just what is necessary. More than that breeds anxiety. Oh, to be content with God's choice for us. He is pledged to give food and covering, the latter including shelter. 9. "They that have a mind to be rich," i.e., who make this the one object of life, who desire wealth for the sake of self-aggrandisement. Note the ever-descending velocity of evil from temptation to perdition. The love of money opens the door to so many evil lusts, in which men drown. 10. Not money, but the love of it. "Some reaching after have been led astray from the faith" (R.V.). Avaricious and evil-living men suffer more than we think. Thus far the Apostle has addressed those who are poor and those who want to be rich, in the concluding paragraph (17-19), he will address those who are rich.

The Concluding Charge (11-21).—A young man may be a man of God. What a high calling! Oh! to be worthy of it. 12. "Of the faith," (R.V.), see 2 Tim. iv. 7, i.e., the faith as it is presented in the Gospel of Christ. 12. The good confession, (R.V.). At his ordination Timothy doubtless confessed his allegiance to the Gospel, before he was set apart for his high calling. 13. What a thought that we are simply following in the footsteps of our Lord, who was the faithful martyr, using that word in its literal sense of witness. 15. God will one day manifest the Lord Jesus, to the revealing of his own unspeakable glory. What an ascription is here! Life in its spring, Light in its source, Power and Authority in their essence and home. Invisible and unapproachable, and yet seen and known of the soul, who, being in Christ, is also in God. Let us claim that life, and dwell in that light. 17. Not on the thing which passes, but on the God who gives, and who loves to see us enjoy. 18. We are dowered to become trustees for others. 19. What we give away we store, what we hoard we lose. The life, "which is life indeed," is acquired through death and self-giving. 20. Only such as seek God really know.

THE SECOND EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

This was probably written some time after the former one, when Paul was for a second time imprisoned in Rome, not now in his hired house, but in the Mamertine prison, from which he was to be led forth to die.

He was eager to see Timothy before his death, and that he should bring Mark with him. But lest he should not arrive in time, he gives some last warnings as to the heresies being sown so freely.

This epistle then contains the last words of this noble Apostle, true to the Gospel he taught in his First Epistle, but with a mellower experience. "It is the last testament and swan-like death-song of Paul" (Bengel).

TUESDAY, FEB. 16.—2 TIMOTHY I.

Salutation (1-2).—"My beloved child" (R.V.). Apparently the young evangelist was becoming daunted by the gathering difficulties of the time; hence the Apostle speaks of "the life" which is promised in the Gospel.

Early Reminiscences (3-7).—In his desire to get Timothy to persevere in his religious course, he quotes his own example of having served the God of his forefathers with undeviating consistency; and, by implication, urges Timothy to be specially faithful to the piety of his parents and ancestors. Obviously the Apostle looked on Christianity as the consistent outcome of Judaism; the flower of which that was the root. The tears had probably been shed at their parting. 5. There is such a thing as a family succession of piety (Isa. lix. 21). But we cannot transmit our faith, we can only inculcate the Word of God, as Eunice did (iii. 15). 6. Sometimes the grace of God seems to get low like coals that cake together; then we need to stir our hearts, that they break out into a flame. 7. God does not intend his children to be cowardly and fearful, but brave and unflinching in meeting the opposition of men. Let us claim that power, that love, which shall lift us above all fear of criticism, that discipline (R.V.) or self-restraint. They are the gift of God.

No Cause for Shame (8-14).—Timothy was naturally timid. The tense indicates that he had not yet been ashamed, but that he might be. The Apostle looked past the agents to the Lord, whose will was being done in his imprisonment. His prisoner. Ah, sick, incapacitated Christian, his dear hand has bolted that door, rivetted that chain. 8. Only the power of God can enable us to bear hardship for the Gospel. 9. Given in eternity, manifested in time. 10. To the believer, death is as though it were not. The fangs are drawn from the adder, the teeth and claws from the lion. Before Christ rose, men had reasoned of the probability of immortality. Afterwards they were assured of it because they beheld it in the glory of the risen Lord, and, indeed, became recipients of it by faith. 11. The herald of such glad tidings lost count of their weight in his estimation of the message he bore. 12. "I know Him whom I have believed" (R.V.). We begin by the venture of faith, we end by the certainty of personal knowledge. "Able to guard my deposit" (R.V.), which surely included the Apostle and all his interests (iv.8). 13. "Hold the pattern of healthful words." It is well to hold the words as a means of holding the truth they contain. 14. We commit our deposit to God, God commits to us the deposit of his holy Gospel, that we may be his trustees for men. But we can only keep it in the power of the blessed Spirit, who is in us and waits our use.

Forsaken (15-18).—His former friends and associates from Asia Minor no longer cared to identify themselves with him, when visiting Rome. There was a hint here to Timothy, which must have touched him to the quick. 16. The household of Onesiphorus were in Ephesus, where this Epistle reached Timothy, who was bidden to salute them; he was probably travelling homewards (iv. 19). As he found Paul, so might he find mercy without such a search.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 17.—2 TIMOTHY II.

A Good Soldier (1-7).—The grace is in Jesus, incorporate it into thyself by faith, and by abiding fellowship with Him. 2. "Commit," the same word as in i.14, entrust as a deposit. 3. "Suffer hardship with me." We enlist not for a parade, but for battle. 4. "No soldier on service"; the idea is that as a soldier abstains from encumbering himself with superfluous baggage, so we must not weight ourselves with too many earthly ties. The more unencumbered and light we are, the more easily shall we obey the least wish of our great Captain, going, coming, doing, as he bids. Oh, the honour of having been enrolled to be soldiers! Shall we not please Him! This the one passion of our lives! 5. No crown for us any more than the athlete, unless we are careful in obeying the needful regulations as to diet, exercise, purity, &c. (1 Cor. ix. 24-27). 7. The emphasis is on the word laboureth. Only so can we enjoy harvests.

Life Through Death (8-13).—Ask the Holy Spirit who brings all things to remembrance, to enable thee to obey this command. Fix the eye of the soul on Him as risen, but know that his resurrection was through death. It must be thus with thee also. 10. No true suffering in the world but procures blessing for others. 11. We died in his death, we rose in his resurrection. As we endure, so shall we reign. The depth to which we shall descend with Christ is the measure to which we shall ascend with Him. To deny Him is to court denial. But if we are faithless, yet that shall not frustrate his purpose of promise. This is a comfort when we fail to muster faith enough, to remember that the keeping of promise is independent of us. Three things are impossible to God—to die, to lie, to be deceived (Aug).

The Servant of God and his Work (14-16).—The one thing we need care about is whether God approves us. For "rightly dividing," the R.V. margin suggests "holding a straight course in the word of truth," like an undeviating furrow. But some think the idea is that of a steward cutting up bread (Luke xii. 42). 18. Hymenæus had been excluded from the church, but having been readmitted, again caused trouble (1 Tim. i. 20). What Paul spoke metaphorically and spiritually about our having risen in Christ, they took literally. 19. In contradistinction to the overthrown faith, "God's firm foundation standeth." Seals or inscriptions were often put on foundations. Here are two—one between God and the believer, the other between the believer and the world. What a privilege to be known by God! 20. Each of us is represented by one of these vessels. But notice! those to honour are not of the more precious metals, but clean. Cleanliness is more to God than cleverness. Do not be anxious about service; be ready and the Master will use you. Lay like a cup or silver bowl in the trough of the fountain. 24. "The Lord's bondservant" (R.V.). 25. Repentance is God's gift, but there is a peradventure in it. 26. "Recover themselves"—i.e., return to sobriety from intoxicating drugs. The devil drugs those whom he intends to ensnare. The R.V. gives a striking turn here; "taken captive by the Lord's servant unto the will of God—i.e., we may catch men for God whom the devil had entrapped.

THURSDAY, FEB. 18.—2 TIMOTHY III.

Signs of the Last Days (1-9).—"Perilous"—i.e., grievous. 3. "Truce-breakers"—i.e., implacable (R.V.). 5. It is our solemn duty to examine ourselves; men may profess the form, but lack the power, and be eaten through with these sins. 6. When women are laden with the consciousness of sins, they are more liable to be led away by men who, under the cloak of earnest religion, deny its power. 7. As men may attempt in vain to row across a stream so long as they do not heave up the anchor, so we may endeavour to learn in vain, so long as we hanker after our lusts. 8. See Exodus vii. 11-22.

Persecution (10-13).—"Thou hast traced down," as Luke i. 3. Each of these demands our reverent attention. For instance, what is the purpose of our life, and is our conduct compatible with it? 11. Our God loves to bring us into difficulty that He may educate our trust and show his ability to help. 12. "All who are minded to live godly." The world does not love Christ any better than of old; and all who follow Him come at last to a cross. To be without persecution may make one doubt if one is on the right track.

Continue (14-17).—Let the characters of those who taught thee make the truth they taught dear. 15. He is speaking here of the Old Testament. What would he not have said of the New? The study of Scripture is a preservative against error. 17. "Perfect," i.e., complete, lacking no weapon, no development on any side of character, no further qualification for service. All are in the Bible, and may be derived from its pages.

FRIDAY, FEB. 19.—2 TIMOTHY IV.

A Solemn Charge (1-5).—"By his appearing and his kingdom" (R.V.) 2. Do not only take opportunities, but make them. 3. Make haste, because such opportunities are closing in. "Sound" all through these pastoral epistles means healthy, and health-giving. 3. Note that striking phrase of the itch in the ear, turning it in any direction where it will get a moment's relief. 5. Watch with the alertness of one who is sober. "Fulfil," work out its full pattern and measure.

Life a Libation (6-8).—Words of inimitable pathos and beauty. Paul regarded his life-blood as about to be poured out as a libation. (R.V. marg.). Departure, i.e., loosing anchor. 7. Often in earlier life he had compared himself to a wrestler or combatant in the arena, and hoped that he would not fail of the prize, now there was given him the serene consciousness that he would not. His strife had been a good one, his course was a finished and fulfilled one, his trusteeship of the faith had been a faithful one, and his crown would be a sure and bright one. 8. Me, I shall not be lost among the tens of thousands, and all who love his appearance shall share with me. The crown is the reward of righteousness, it is itself righteousness, and its reception is guaranteed by the righteousness of the righteous judge. Heaven is God's free gift, but there are rewards in Heaven. Love for his appearing is a supreme test of character. Mark the three tenses. Have fought, &c., is laid up, will give.

Farewell (9-22).—Demas had been closely allied with Paul (Col. iv. 14; Phil. xxiv.). What a contrast, to love this evil world instead of his appearing. 11. Thus Paul wiped out the memory of a former lapse in Mark's adherence. Let us never despair of men. Demas, of whom we were sure, goes back; Mark, of whom we were in doubt, steps into the breach. 13. The winter was approaching (21), and a cloak would be grateful in the damp cell. He had but one, and could not afford to get another. The books may have been the Scriptures, and the parchments copies of his own epistles. 14. Acts xix. 33. "The Lord will render to him," the apostle assuredly believed in the ultimate punishment of wrong. 16. His defence in his first examination. 17. The Lord is generally most present when we are most lonely. From the bar at which he stood condemned, he fearlessly preached the Gospel. The lion probably stands for Satan (Luke xxii. 31; 1 Pet. v. 8). 18. We may die as martyrs, and yet be delivered from evil. The only evil we need dread is that which threatens the soul. 20. It would seem that the miraculous gifts of healing, like the power stored in Jesus, could not be used for any private ends. And the best of workers may have to learn some lessons which sickness alone can teach. 21. Claudia is said to have been a Briton, and to have afterwards married Pudens. So the lion-hearted apostle ceased his work on earth, promoted to loftier ministry.

THE EPISTLE TO TITUS.

Titus was a Gentile (Gal. ii. 3), converted through Paul (Tit. i. 4); and then a fellow-worker whom the Apostle highly valued (2 Cor. viii. 23). He was entrusted with various ministries (Gal. ii. 1; 2 Cor. xii. 17-21); and latterly had been left in Crete for the purpose of superintending the affairs of the Christian churches there.

It is supposed that Paul visited Crete some time after his first imprisonment at Rome, but the Gospel may have been introduced by some who were present at the Day of Pentecost (Acts ii. 11).

SATURDAY, FEB 20.—TITUS I.

The Salutation (1-4).—The election is of eternity, faith is our response in time. Paul's aim was to make men know thoroughly God's truth, which makes for godliness here and which promises eternal life hereafter. 2. He promised "before times eternal," but "in its own time manifested his word in the message." 3. Each true servant of God is entrusted with that message. Ah! what an honour.

The Qualifications of Elders (5-9).—The Apostle left Titus to follow up the work he had begun by completing the organisation of the churches. 6. A man's character is tested by his home-life. 7. The bishop or overseer or elder needed to be a blameless man, else a stigma on the holy cause of Christ, whose steward and representative he was. 9. The strict adherence to Apostolic doctrine was hardly less important than a blameless life.

False Teachers (10-16).—There were many intriguing Jews going about trying to subvert the apostle's teaching and introduce Rabbinical traditions of legalism among the adherents of Christianity. Their motives were of the basest description. 12. This was Epimenides, a priest or bard who lived 600 B.C. False, rapacious, sensual, slothful. 14. The fables referred to speculations about the origin and propagation of angels; the commandments of men to the ascetic regulations they sought to impose, as to food, &c. 15. Impurity is not in things, but in our handling of them. The defiled heart will extract evil suggestions out of the holiest services, as men distil poison from barley. The pure heart passes uncomtaminate through foul and corrupt scenes and talk. 16. Men may often avoid things because they say they are an abomination to God, without realising that they are themselves abominable. Reprobate, i.e., rejected after being tested.

THE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY OF VICTORIA, whose offices are at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Melbourne, sends out its eighth report, declaring the past year to have been one of unexampled blessing. Most of its thirty pages are occupied with details of the several missions conducted by the evangelists. "Churches revived, men and women saved, and pastors themselves stimulated and quickened," seems to represent the general results. The scene at Jeffcot is thus described:—"The power of God in the meetings has been irresistible. Strong men have bowed themselves. The last meeting was closed over and over again. The whole congregation was under the Spirit's spell, and many were broken down, men, women, and children seeking for peace and crying for mercy." Mr. C. Carter is the secretary.

International S. S. Lessons.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, FEB. 21.

JEHOIAKIM'S WICKEDNESS.—Jer. xxxvi. 19-31.

GOLDEN TEXT: Heb. iii. 15.

JEHOIAKIM has the unenviable distinction of being one of the worst men of whom the Bible speaks. His wickedness is described in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 5-8, and especially in Jer. xxii. 13-19, and xxvi. 20-23.

He was the son of Josiah, one of the best kings that sat upon the throne of Judah. This is mentioned as an aggravation of Jehoiakim's wickedness (xxii. 15-17). After such an example of the prosperity which followed true godliness, his determined opposition to God was without excuse. Sin is never so exceedingly sinful as when committed in spite of godly instruction and example. Beside the example of Josiah to lure him to what was right, he had been warned by the brief reign of his younger brother Shallum—called Jehoahaz (2 Kings xxiii. 31-34; Jer. xxii. 10-12). In Josiah he saw godliness followed by prosperity, in Jehoahaz he saw sin bringing speedy ruin, and is called to make his own choice. What blindness he manifested! Do not repeat his folly.

This lesson records the crowning sin of his life. Tell the story of the whole chapter:—the writing of the roll containing predictions of coming judgment (2-7); the Divine hope in having this message read to the people ("It may be," 3, 7); the roll being read first in the Temple on the fast day (9-10), when the people might be supposed to be in a right condition for hearing the word; then to the princes (11-15), upon whom it made a deep impression (16); and then to the king himself. The caution which the princes gave to Baruch and Jeremiah (19) indicates that nothing good is expected from the king. If he had killed Urijah (xxvi. 22-23), why should he spare Jeremiah?

THE ROLL READ (20-22).—The princes acted with considerable prudence. To have carried the roll in to the king and proposed to read it would have defeated their purpose. It was wise to excite his curiosity by telling what had so deeply interested them (20). There were other "princes which stood beside the king" (21) who were probably like-minded with himself, and hence were chosen as his companions. Among these Jehudi seems to have been prominent. He was ready to be the king's tool for evil. "The winter house" (22) was part of the king's palace (Amos iii. 15), and was built with a south aspect in a sheltered position. "Ninth month"—that is, about our November or December; hence the fire, a brazen vessel containing burning charcoal. For the king it was a more momentous occasion than either he or his companion princes knew. Would he heed the warning and turn from his sins, as God hoped? With the same anxious question does every teacher give his message.

THE ROLL DESTROYED (23-26).—The action of the king seems to have been more deliberate than at first sight appears; and hence more wicked. "All these words" (24) imply that he heard the whole of the message. He used the penknife to every few leaves, or columns, as they were read, and burned them in parts until the whole was destroyed (23). He did this in spite of the entreaties of three of the princes (25), who had heard the message and trembled at it before; and he added to this the greater crime of attempting to take Jeremiah and Baruch (26). It is possible to repeat his sin. To us, as to him, a message is sent from God. In our message, as in his, there are solemn warnings of coming judgment and earnest entreaties to return. We repeat his sin (1) when we hear, but do not heed the message. Not one of them to whom the roll was read gave any indication of repentance (24). To hear of judgment against sin without heeding it only hardens the heart the more. (2) When we refuse to believe parts of it. There are many ways of using the penknife to God's Word. Humbling doctrines, unwelcome duties, assertions of coming judgment are cut out of the Word by many. "See," said a man to his minister, "I have brought you your Bible." It was cut into shreds; and as the minister took it he said, "No, that is not mine." "Yes," said the man, "as you have told us that one part and another were not inspired, I have cut them out, and this is all I have left." There is a solemn warning pronounced against those who treat the Bible so (Rev. xxii. 19). And (3) when we refuse to hear at all. Rome, Pagan and Papal, has repeated Jehoiakim's sin literally, but we do equal dishonour to the Word by burning it, so that it may cease to speak to us, or by never reading or hearing it for ourselves.

THE MESSAGE RE-WRITTEN (27-31).—So far, Jehoiakim seems to have the best of it. The roll is destroyed, and the prophet and his scribe are concealed; may not the king go on in his own way undisturbed by these unwelcome threatenings again? These verses answer No, the word of God is indestructible (27, 28); but destruction falls inevitably upon the man who seeks to destroy it (29-31). The judgment threatened came to pass. The throne was occupied only for three months by Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim, then passed to his uncle Zedekiah (2 Kings xxiv. 8-17).

LESSONS.

1. REFUSING TO HEED GOD'S MESSAGE DOES NOT RENDER IT UNTRUE. Ahab's hatred of Micaiah because he prophesied evil did not prevent the evil coming (1 Kings xxii. 8). For the Indian woman to destroy the mirror because it showed her ugliness did not alter the fact. Accept the warnings, which are sent in mercy.

2. THERE IS NO HOPE FOR THE MAN WHO REFUSES GOD'S MESSAGE. Ralph the Rover stopped the unwelcome sound of the bell on the Inchcape Rock, and because its warning note was silenced he suffered shipwreck there. In the word of God that warns us of coming ill is our only hope of mercy. To refuse the warning is to render our salvation impossible.

Evangelistic Notes.

Ryde.—A fruitful mission has been conducted at Ryde in connection with the Oddfellows' Hall and Railway Mission.

Chippenham.—Rev. J. and Mrs. Turner have held special evangelistic services at the Baptist Chapel here, and as a result several have been won for Christ.

Mr. G. R. Cairns, "the singing evangelist," who has just closed a fruitful mission in Seattle (U.S.A.), intends coming to England in May for evangelistic service.

Tavistock, Devon.—Mr. W. Mortlock, who been labouring here for the past sixteen months, held a special Gospel Lantern Mission for three days, the object being to reach non-church and chapel goers. Many were present and were much impressed.

Consett, Co. Durham.—A good work is going on in the Gospel Hall amongst the working-people—steel-workers and turners—of the district. Two evangelists have been conducting special meetings. The hall has been crowded, and many profess to have been blessed.

Ireland.—A very successful fortnight's Gospel Mission has been held in the parish of Ardmore, co. Armagh, by Rev. John P. Cushing, of Liverpool, and as the result the number of communicants has been quadrupled; a ten day's similar mission has just been held by Rev. Jas. Stewart, in Agnes-street Methodist Church, Belfast.

Devizes.—A three weeks' Evangelistic Mission has just been conducted by Mr. John Elliot, of the Evangelisation Society, in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, concluding on Sunday with a crowded meeting. Cases of blessing have resulted; while at the last meeting a number stayed behind, and several professed to find peace in believing.

Mr. Matthew Burnett, Australian evangelist, after a brief respite has resumed public work. On Sabbath week he opened a series of Evangelistic services in South Cliff, Scarborough. Last Sunday (7th) he commenced similiar services in Scarborough, after which he will visit some of the former scenes of his labours in the Scarborough district. His address is Stainton Dale, Scarborough.

Crouch-hill.—Revs. F. B. Meyer and F. C. Spurr have just concluded a most successful twelve days' mission at Crouch-hill Baptist Church. The neighbourhood had been well canvassed previously, and the Divine blessing has been abundantly granted. Not only has the church been quickened, but a great number of Christians and others from a widely-scattered district have gathered to the meetings, and have professed to receive much good.

Rev. R. Balgarnie's engagements up till May are as follows:—Long Buckley (Baptist), Feb. 11-18; Launceston, 20-26; Winchmore-hill, London, March 1-7; Woodgreen (Presbyterian), 12-18; Louth, 20-21; Farnworth, 22-28; Eastwood, Notts (Congregational and Wesleyan), April 2-15; Sneinton, April 17; Worksop, 21-27.

HAM-YARD SOUP KITCHEN AND HOSPICE (Great Windmill-street, Haymarket, W.). More than forty-eight thousand penny dinners were provided last year for the destitute; upwards of two hundred sick persons were admitted into the Refuge; employment was found for nearly one hundred, and 145 tons of coal were given away during the winter months. The hon. secretary is Mr. Henry S. Trower, who in his report adds:—"Gifts of left-off clothing will be gratefully received; these often enable men to obtain employment from which the shabbiness of their appearance would otherwise debar them. Boots also are particularly useful for the inmates, many of whom have completely worn out their own in the weary search for work."

NORWICH.—Mr. Edward Wright recently visited Norwich, and told the story of his life before a large audience in the Victoria Hall. The seats in the gallery, which holds about 200 people, had been reserved for recipients of invitation cards from the right worshipful the Mayor (Mr. G. M. Chamberlin), who, accompanied by several ladies and gentlemen, occupied a prominent position on the platform, and was thus placed opposite to his guests, collected from Pockthorpe, St. Martin's, Ber-street, &c., by the City Missionaries, and who previously to the commencement of the service were treated with a plentiful supply of buns and hot coffee. The hall was crowded with a most attentive audience. Before Mr. Wright delivered his address the Mayor, at the request of Mr. Adcock, leader of the Mission, read John iii. A correspondent writes to us rejoicing that the city has a Mayor who in word and deed witnesses for Christ.

THE LATE MADAME COILLARD.

In communications published in the February ue of the Journal des Missions Evangeliques, M. illard gives a touching account of the last ars of his devoted wife. Mme. Coillard had en ill for some time, but at last the fever did deadly work with alarming rapidity. Between r expressions of confidence in God she encour- ed her husband to renewed earnestness in the rk to which he had given his life.

For emphasis she occasionally used her mother ngue, and said, "Do be in earnest, do!" Then, hen the end drew near, she declared in ordi- ry French converse that dying was not so ficult as she expected, for (quoting from e English Bible) "Underneath are the ever- ting arms!" Finally, looking upward, she cried rapture, first in French and then in her loved tive speech, "Oh, how very beautiful!" She d where she laboured, among the poor ricans, refusing while yet able to return to eat Britain to recruit her health. She said, ife is too short, and the work too great. Let remain at our post till the end. The Master ows that I am in need of health, and He is le, if He wills, to give me here what I may go ewhere to seek."

The Paris correspondent of Evangelical ristendom writes: "We knew Christina Mackin- h long before she entered the mission-field. e presenting on a Scotch platform at a mis- nary meeting of little Sarah Roby—whose ry every child knew at that period—an infant ried alive by heathen parents, and rescued by missionary and his wife who had heard its fled cries—made an impression on the mind of Scotch lassie in favour of the missionary life ver to be effaced. And when, after testifying her Lord in Paris, she was claimed as help- et by the noble-hearted François Coillard—an inently endowed French peasant, a good son his mother, and most successful missionary dent—she joined him at the Cape, and in suto'and doubled his usefulness during thirty ars, accompanying him, as usual, in his ilous pioneering on the Zambesi, until, at ula, fever called her to the Heavenly Mansions October last."

"SERPENT" MEMORIAL WORK-ROOMS.

Although many a gallant ship has gone wn since November 10, 1891, the loss of H.M.S. pent is still fresh in the public mind, and the very of officers and men, in dying at their ts, touched such a chord in the country's art that the sum of £13,581 was subscribed in ler that the widows and orphans and aged ents might be adequately pensioned. While ing, at the request of Admiral H.R.H. the ke of Edinburgh, on the Relief Committee, I very strongly that some permanent good ght to be conferred on the wives and widows of er seamen, who are so constantly left desti- e by the invaliding or deaths of their hus- ds. I consulted H.R.H. on the subject, and agreed with me that the establishment of k-rooms in connection with my Sailors' Rests ld be a great boon to the service.

The public, once more appealed to, most kindly trusted me with the sum of £2265. I have ned a spacious work-room in Portsmouth, e to the Sailors' Rest, where some thirty or ty women are constantly employed. Many the wives of stokers, who, being lately ruited, earn but boys' pay. I am anxious teach them all plain needlework, and o the use of the sewing machine, and pe to add knitting, tailoring, &c. A small che below provides for the safety of the little es, and a free registry office is attached, by ich I have found work for numbers of wives ose husbands have gone away for three and r years. The workroom is pleasant and bright; ny a hymn is sung as the machines whizz nd; an interesting tale is read by one of my y helpers; and the working hours close with ling and prayer. The money earned is a real p, and keeps the wolf from the door. I shall be too glad to receive orders from ladies for r clothing for themselves or their children, d can guarantee thoroughly good work at very sonable prices. We also make strong clothing the poor. Boxes containing £2, £3, £4, or of useful garments are sent, carriage paid, to y address.—Yours in the Master's service,

Agnes E. Weston.

Letters to the Editor.

CARDINAL NEWMAN'S MEMORIAL.

Sir,—In the discussion about the proposed site for the Newman statue, no reference was made to the letter of Lord Halifax, in which he confessed that it was he who made the suggestion of Oxford being the place. The Roman Catholics on the Duke of Norfolk's committee were divided, some preferring Birmingham and others London as the site. The blame of stirring up all the strife must be mainly borne by the extreme Ritualists, Lord Halifax being the representative of the English Church Union. These men hate the very name of Protestants, and some of them call the Reformation the Deformation. Their relation to Rome is not remote.

It is not surprising that many Ritualists are rejoicing at this expected triumph of the "Oxford Movement," by having an imposing statue of the Cardinal in the University city. But the most melancholy part of the whole affair is to find a majority of the Town Councillors indifferent to the cause of Protestantism, and unable to distinguish between charity towards individual Romanists, and opposition to Vaticanism as a system. One of the intelligent speakers said he would be delighted to see the statue of Newman standing in sight of the Martyrs' Memorial. He cannot know that, although kept in check in England, the principles of the Church of Rome are unchangeable, and that her persecutions are as cruel as ever in some lands. Lord Macaulay said, "The worst vices of Popery are a complete subjection of reason to authority; a weak preference of form to substance; and, above all, a merciless intolerance." These Oxford town councillors would have us forget the noble words of Latimer at the martyr-fire, "Be of good comfort, master Ridley, and play the man; we shall this day light such a candle as by God's grace in England I trust shall never be put out." The words of Dr. Ince, Regius Professor of Divinity, are good, "It is an abuse of the modern spirit of toleration to act as if all religious opinions were to be considered equally true and equally false if only they are held sincerely."

One of the Oxford newspapers states that the majority of those who carried the resolution to accept the offer of the statue, and to confer with the Duke of Norfolk's Committee as to the best site (other than Broad-street), are what are known as "political dissenters." The better class of Nonconformists voted with the University members. Nothing is settled by the vote of the Council. It is to be hoped that no public position will be granted for a memorial, intended by many as a triumph of Popery and an insult to Protestants.

It is not Newman as the author of "Lead, kindly Light," but Newman as Cardinal that the statue will commemorate. The "Apologia" is a painfully interesting record of declension, and a warning to all who leave the solid rock of Scripture for the shifting sand of Tradition. That he was a good man to the last, proves how the grace of God can live under loads of error and folly. He was honest enough to leave the Church of England, while many Tractarians remained; of whom Adam Sedgwick, of Cambridge, said, "I pity their delusion, I despise their sophistry, and I hate their dishonesty." Of Newman himself Thomas Carlyle said, "He has the brains of a sheep;" thus emphatically condemning the submission of his reason to authority. The reply of Bismarck to a German archbishop who said, "We must obey God rather than man," is worthy of remembrance; "Yes," said the Chancellor; "but the Pope is not God."

James Macaulay, M.D.

THE "HIGHER CRITICISM."

Sir,—Is not much that is written about the higher criticism likely to be unprofitable and unsettling to the mass of ordinary readers?

To all but unbelievers is not the authoritative statement of the New Testament, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. iii. 16) sufficient?

When the Lord Jesus Christ Himself gave the command, "Search the Scriptures—they are they which testify of Me," there was only the Old Testament Scripture to search.

When He told the Jews, "The Scriptures cannot be broken," and "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures" (Matt. xxii. 29), it was still the Old Testament of which He spoke.

May God the Holy Ghost, by his mighty power, lead many ere it is too late to realise the solemn import of Christ's own words, "The Word that I have spoken the same shall judge him in the last day" (John).

H. W. Ellis.

REV. EDWARD SMITH, now of Bradford, who did such good work in the Methodist Central Mission at Clerkenwell, will preach at Christ Church (Rev. Newman Hall's) next Sunday morning and evening. He will give a Gospel Temperance address in the afternoon, and the next evening (Monday) at 8.30 he will speak on the Gospel to the masses, with some account of three years' work in Clerkenwell.

The Book World.

Books by Mr. Spurgeon.

Published by Passmore and Alabaster.

The sermon for reading last Sunday in The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit series was one entitled "God's will about the Future," and it was based on James iv. 13-17, "Go to now," &c. In a postscript the publishers record the death of Mr. Spurgeon, and intimate that the weekly discourse, as well as The Sword and the Trowel, will be continued as usual, as they have on hand a large quantity of manuscripts and sermons by Mr. Spurgeon that have not yet been published.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit. Sermons preached and revised by C. H. Spurgeon during the year 1891. (7s.) Volume xxxvii. of a series which will long be famous on account of their revered author, and owned of God because of their loyalty to revealed truth. To describe the discourses is needless, for readers in all parts of the world agree with preachers of all denominations that they are peerless for their full statement of the Gospel of the Grace of God, and reliable instruction in fundamental doctrine. The area covered in this volume is as large and broad as ever, the year opening with a discourse on "Jehovah Shammah" (Ezekiel xlviii. 35), and ending with one on "Prodigal Love for the Prodigal Son"—"and kissed him much." (Luke xv. 20, R.V.)

The Sword and the Trowel, for 1891 (5s), will have a peculiar interest as the last edited by Mr. Spurgeon. The pages contain intimations of many occurrences connected with the last year of the life of the celebrated preacher, who, in concluding the preface, says: "Strength and space alike fail the editor, and he patiently resumes the couch. Gratitude to God and to all sorts of friends, brings the water into his eyes as he writes." The articles are as varied as ever; Mr. Spurgeon's solid vigorous expositions and meditations being interspersed with sketches and articles on practical subjects from the pens of trusted contributors. Of course the many institutions associated with Mr. Spurgeon's name are described and their progress reported upon at length.

Life of Pastor A. G. Brown.

The Life and Work of Archibald G. Brown, Preacher and Philanthropist. By Godfrey Holden Pike. 1s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster. This is an appropriate "Silver Wedding Memorial" of one who has done grand work for God and humanity in East London. We trust it will be a long time before Mr. Brown's "Life" will require to be written. While, however, he is with us, and throwing all his heart into his much-loved service, this sketch will assuredly interest his friends, and, without doubt, help forward his many important enterprises. The introduction by Sir Arthur Blackwood, under whose preaching the youthful Archibald Brown was converted thirty years ago, is redolent of grace and truth. The pages tell of a modest man and a marvellous work, and we trust they will have many readers. The illustrations include excellent portraits of the Pastor, and his daughter Nellie, who recently left England under the auspices of the China Inland Mission.

"Darkest England" Social Scheme.

Here we have the first year's report of the social work of the Salvation Army, admirably illustrated, well-written, and presenting something like a comprehensive view of the various operations put in motion during the past year. As we have already said in these pages, the whole movement is full of promise, as the reader of this able report will perceive from the facts and figures adduced on well-nigh every page. The Shelters and Food Depôts, the Labour Bureau, the Elevators, the City and Farm Colonies, the Salvage Wharf, Prisoners' Home, Women's Rescue Work—these and other branches show evident tokens of result among the hopeless and helpless. All who wish to know something of this Social Scheme in practical working will do well to secure and read the report, which may be had of the Salvation Army, 101, Queen Victoria-street, price one shilling.

A special number of Footsteps of Truth is issued to-day as a Spurgeon Memorial Number. It contains a memoir and personal reminiscences, with a large selection of extracts from leading articles and other notices relative to Mr. Spurgeon. Being largely illustrated with portraits and sketches, this special number will form an interesting souvenir. (Shaw.)

Messrs. James Clarke and Co. have published an excellent portrait of the late Mr. Spurgeon in mezzotype and colours, reproduced by the London Stereoscopic Company from one of the most recent photographs of the deceased preacher. It is a faithful likeness, such as no doubt very many of Mr. Spurgeon's admirers will be glad to have. (1s. 6d.)

Temperance Notes.

In the University of Zurich, the newly-appointed Rector and the President of the Medical Faculty are both total abstainers.

Rev. C. Garrett has issued to Sunday-school teachers an earnest letter on the temperance question, urging the value of personal example and effort.

Mrs. Ward Poole reports the formation of a Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association among the ladies of Londonderry, who promised united and hearty action in Temperance Work.

Mr. W. S. Caine points out that if we had the Maine law for this kingdom to-morrow, we should require every public-house for some other trade. And the other trades, let us remember, would require many more workmen than does the liquor traffic.

The Dublin, Glendalough and Kildare Diocesan Temperance Association has arranged to hold an examination on the principles of temperance on March 25, the text-books being "Economy and Morals" and "Temperance Addresses for Young and Old."

The executive committee of the London auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance has issued an appeal to the ratepayers of London, in which they urge the importance of maintaining and developing the temperance policy systematically pursued by the present London County Council.

Lady Somerset has assumed the editorial charge of The Union Signal, the organ of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, at Chicago. American papers say that Lady Somerset's residence in Chicago is likely to be a long one—so interested has she become in her work.

A lady who does not wish her name to be known has provided an establishment combining café, farmer's yard, &c., about to be opened at Coleraine; and the Irish Temperance League has opened a new café in Donegall-street, Belfast, making the seventeenth establishment of that sort which the League has now in the city.

The Friends' Temperance Union held on Wednesday week three meetings at Devonshire House. The morning meeting was devotional, and Mr. Arthur Pease, J.P., presided. This was followed by a meeting of the General Council of the Union. In the afternoon the subject was, "How can Friends best promote temperance legislation?"

A correspondent in Australia writes as follows to a prominent temperance worker in this country:—"Could not something be done in reference to the drinking bars on the Australian ships? You have no idea how dreadful they are, both on the liners and on the local steamers. Drinking goes on all day, and to idle men, with so little to amuse them, the temptation must be very great."

The wife of a leading American Senator says: Never since the days of Mrs. Hayes has so little wine been taken at public official receptions as during the present administration. Very few U.S.A. official homes, during this administration, furnish wine; and even when it is furnished, the example of the Harrisons, Wanamakers, Millers, Proctors, and many others, has a restraining influence. Scarcely any of the men selected by President Harrison as his advisers ever take wine."

The first annual meeting of the Brighton and Hove Cabmen's Gospel Temperance Association took place on February 4. About seventy accepted an invitation to tea. Afterwards a meeting was held and addresses given. A pleasing feature of the evening was that the president of the Association presented a sovereign to each man, whom it was ascertained had faithfully kept his pledge for twelve months. This Association now numbers nearly one hundred members, and is making steady progress.

The annual meeting of the Dublin Women's Temperance Association was held on January 28, in the Friends' Meeting House. Mrs. Henry Higham presided, and Mrs. Ward Poole gave a stimulating address. The report, which was read by Miss Edmundson, the Secretary, detailed the work of the Committee in the past year. Many meetings had been held, and the work commenced in the early part of the year, among telegraph boys, had been carried on with much interest and considerable success.

Mr. Joseph Rowntree, at a meeting last week in Devonshire House, sketched a measure of licensing reform, the leading provisions being (1) That money compensation be regarded as inadmissible; (2) after a fixed date the number of public-houses be largely reduced, and not to exceed, say, one to 1000 people in towns; (3) popularly elected licensing boards to take over the magistrates' powers, and be invested with larger powers; (4) ratepayers to have power to prohibit all licences, or to diminish the number, or to prohibit any new ones.

The Committee of the Londonderry Gospel Temperance Association has issued an appeal, which has been distributed in the various churches of the city, and in which it says:—"We have ventured to issue this circular to you after much prayer, and with a conscious sense of our deep responsibility to God, and to the claims of our brothers and sisters who are tempted and overcome by the demon of strong drink. We are also conscious that, until the Church of Christ has arisen to a sense of her duty, and to the dreadful enormity of this evil, and until this barrier is swept away, we cannot expect to see the work of God prospering in our midst."

Personalia.

Rev. G. W. Olver is slowly recovering from the influenza, but is not yet allowed to leave the house.

Rev. A. N. Mackray.—Many will be glad to know that Mr. Mackray has so far recovered as partially to resume work.

Mr. A. H. Baynes has, we are informed, so far recovered as to return to his post at the Mission-house, though he yet feels the need of care.

Rev. S. H. Booth, D.D., has, we are glad to hear, been able to resume his secretarial duties. His three months' stay in Egypt has done much for him.

Dr. Pentecost has concluded a fruitful mission in Burmah, and on January 14 wrote:—"I now go to Madras, to close my work in India. I leave India in March."

Mr. W. Lethaby, who, with his wife, has for some years been labouring at Kerak ("Kir of Moab") amongst the Bedouin tribes, has just reached England for a much-needed rest. He may be addressed Market-place, Sidmouth.

Bishop Richardson, it is announced, has resigned his jurisdiction as Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church, and Bishop Sugden, D.D., has been appointed to the oversight of all the congregations of this church in Great Britain.

Rev. Edward Stevenson has completed fifty years' pastorate of Baxter-gate Chapel, Loughborough, where for thirty years previously his father was minister. The event is to be celebrated by special services on the 14th and 15th inst.

Rev. W. J. Woods, of Clapton-park, who has been elected by the Committee as Secretary of the Congregational Union (subject to ratification at the Union meeting in May), succeeded in 1881 Rev. E. Paxton Hood in Manchester, and has since, for five years, laboured successfully in Clapton-park.

Grove-street Institute, Glasgow.

The new report relates that a little boy of twelve years, having been charged with theft before a police-court, was asked by the magistrate what he had to say for himself, and pathetically replied, "Please, sir, I never got a chance." The children's department of this institute claims at least to give the children "a chance," the Bible being systematically taught, and portions of it committed to memory. Further, the elevation and evangelisation he whole family is said to be an integral partof the society's aim, hence the young women of the city are provided with all good influences, including Bible-classes, as the result of which "not a few have become decided Christians." On Sunday afternoon a class of working-men gathers for the study of the Bible.

The Gospel services have increased in attendance, many new helpers have joined, the Divine blessing has been largely vouchsafed, and evident signs and fruits have followed. As to the Evangelistic Department, we read: "Under this head may be briefly summarised all the Gospel meetings held in the institute. The Superintendents and workers are thankful to be able to report a steady increase in the attendance, at the meetings. Many new workers have joined us, and a hearty and zealous spirit, accompanied by unbroken harmony, have pervaded all. The Divine blessing has been largely vouchsafed. As results in God's work cannot be tabulated, so statistics of attendances are not always a certain indication of true progress, for often some of the smallest meetings prove the most useful."

It is now proposed to commemorate the semi-jubilee of the institute by a considerable enlargement and extension of the premises at a cost of £2590, toward which sum several hundreds have already been promised. The erection of this new wing is deemed an absolute necessity if the work is to go on in its prosperity, and for the needed funds a strong appeal is made. Mr. T. A. Boyd is the Superintendent.

MISS MASON'S HOUSE OF REST.—At the monthly meeting of the House of Rest, Finchley-road, held on Friday last, Rev. C. G. Moore gave a heart-searching address on John xii. 24, 25, and 26: "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." When the Christ-life is first given to us, the death of self begins; but as time goes on there grows up another self-life, not the old self, but a new self-life. This has to be destroyed; it is not that of a good-self, but of Christ alone that our life must be. Just as a seed, a germ of life, self-encased, needing nothing, giving nothing, with no communication with the outer world, is put into the ground, and there, in the damp and darkness, is pulled to pieces until a fresh self springs up, and, finally, as a tall blade of wheat comes into fellowship with all God's universe—the sun, the clouds, the air—and then gives forth abundantly for the good of man, so the Christian, to be what God would have him, must be buried by God until self of every sort is dead, and the Christ-life springs up, bringing him into fellowship with God's work and God's people everywhere, and making him a fruitful blessing to others. In the evening an address was given by Dr. Montagu Miller.

Morley Wright, and addresses were delivered by Revs. W. J. Woods and J. Sibree, of Madagas car. It is believed the effect of the meeting will be a con siderable awakening of interest, and that the church wil gladly take up its share in the work.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Secretary of the Londo Missionary Society, says that four more men than are a present available are required to fill up actual vacancies i the staff in India and China, whilst fifteen new mission aries are needed to complete the additional hundred whon it is desired to send out under the new forward movement An anonymous donor has sent £2000 towards the expense of this new movement.

Rev. Stanley Rogers has compiled a Missionary Praye Union Calendar for the use of members of the Prayer Union The objects are to deal with work of the Missions in a direct and definite manner, to bring the missionaries by name before God, and to record answers in order to further stimulate to prayer. In the calendar some special mission field is selected for each month; a map is given with the names of the missionaries engaged, the character of their difficulties, and the success attained are recorded.

The Baptist Missionary Society recently received £2 from an unexpected source. A London scavenger called at its office in Furnival-street, and handed in four £5 Bank of England notes, and giving a text of Scripture in place of his name, said, "Please put that down to the centenary fund."

Special meetings are to be held in Liverpool in celebra tion of the centenary of the Missionary Society on Monday March 21. There will be in the afternoon a reception by the Mayor at the Town Hall, and a public meeting in the evening. Revs. Drs. Maclaren, Angus, and Glover have promised to attend and speak.

The fifteenth anniversary of the church meeting at High gate-road Chapel, London, was held on Feb. 3, Rev. James Stephens, M.A., presiding. From the report read by the Church Secretary, it appeared that the present number of members is 676, seventy-eight having been added during the past year. The number of missionary members in other lands was eighteen, the first break in this band being caused by the recent lamented death of Mr. John Luff, on the Upper Congo. The various agencies of the church have been well sustained, and a new movement had been started in the hire of Stanley Hall, in the neighbourhood, for a series of evangelistic services.

CADBURY'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE, THEREFORE BEST.

The late Editor of the Sanitary Review, writing on "The Consumption of Cocoa," warns the public against the use of foreign cocoas containing alkali, and makes the following allusion to the firm of Cadbury Brothers:—"It is the aim and practice of this famous firm to send out cocoa absolutely pure, of the highest quality which art will permit.

The Editor of the Medical Annual speaks in the highest terms of Cadbury's Cocoa as a beverage and a food for invalids on account of its absolute purity, high quality, and great solubility; and counsels the Medical Profession to remember, in recommending Cocoa, that the name Cadbury on any packet is a guarantee of purity.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Special services for the young have recently been held in several South London churches.

The annual meeting of the Young Men's Societies' Union was held last week at Regent-square Church, when the report read showed good and useful work for the past year.

A meeting in connection with Presbyterian missions was held in Manchester on Monday evening, when Revs. Dr. Monro Gibson, H. L. Mackenzie, of Swatow, and Thos. Barclay, of Formosa, were among the speakers.

At the Regent-square annual meeting, a few days ago, when the present position of affairs was seriously considered, a committee was appointed to co-operate with the Session in seeking a suitable minister.

The annual meeting of Brunswick-street Church, Manchester (Rev. W. Rigby Murray's) was held last week. The reports submitted showed that the congregation is in a more prosperous condition than it has been at any period in its long history; that is, since its origin in 1790.

During the past three weeks a series of united prayer meetings has been held in the Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches of South Morningside, Edinburgh. The three ministers, their office-bearers and people, have entered most heartily into the movement, and the meetings were held alternately in the three churches for three nights each week. Last week special evangelistic meetings were held in the several churches, addressed by the three ministers.

METHODIST.

Large and enthusiastic meetings on behalf of the London Mission were held last week in York.

A fruitful ten days' mission has just been held at Witney by Mr. and Mrs. Stanton.

Successful meetings in connection with the London Central Mission have just been held in Ilkley.

A very thorough system of house-to-house visitation has been organised in Bradford, in the hope of reaching and stirring the indifferent.

It is proposed by Rev. R. Spooner, the superintendent of the Windsor Wesleyan Circuit, to hold a Temperance mission, beginning on February 14, in which he invites the Nonconformist churches of the borough to join. Some of the clergy of the neighbourhood have shown much interest in the movement.

General Sir Robert Phayre, K.C.B., presided at the annual public meeting of the Mission Band associated with the Wesleyans at Clifton-street and Studley-road, Stockwell. Rev. W. Waters characterised the Mission Band movement as one of the most promising in modern Methodism.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Bradford Friends' Mission reports good work for the past year.

Joseph Taylor reports busy evangelising in the villages of the Hoshangabad district, India.

The Bedford Institute has completed its twenty-fifth year of work, and in every respect is doing good service. A labour agency has lately been started, securing employment for not a few.

Reviewing the present position of the Friends as a society, The Friend calls attention to the fact "that sixty years ago we were one of the most self-contained sects; to-day we have become one of the broadest in Christian sympathies and philanthropies. The change is shown to be from that of a religious recluse to that of an active citizen."

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Baptist Church has been formed in Limerick, and several members of the Congregational Church in that City have joined it.

A large number of Presbyteries met last week. Several of these made nominations for the Moderatorship, and Rev. R. McCheyne Edgar, Dublin, obtained the largest number.

The Society for Providing Penny Dinners for the Poor in Cork is doing a good work. During last year, 17,109 such dinners were sold, and a balance of over £19 remains in hand.

The late memorial service in Cork for the Duke of Clarence, has given rise to an animated discussion in the local press on the subject of prayers for the dead, and a correspondent has asserted that in that city there is a High Church party getting stronger and stronger every day.

At the monthly meeting of the Belfast Ministers' Union, representing nearly all the evangelical denominations in the City, held on Monday week, a resolution of sincere condolence with Mrs. Spurgeon in her sad bereavement was agreed to, and a similar resolution was passed by the Belfast Presbytery last Friday.

"A powerful and brilliant work. Dr. PENTECOST is not only a man of marked ability and scholarship; he is also a pulpit orator of the highest order. He at once arrests the attention, penetrates the heart, moves the affections, fires the imagination, bends the will, and directs the conduct. There is no escaping the spell of his voice, the charm of his style, and the power of his utterances. Anything from his pen may be bought with eagerness. He is equally at home in addressing saint and sinner, as this volume amply proves."—Oldham Chronicle.

WORK AMONG DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

DEAR FRIENDS,

During the fifteen years this branch of our work has been in existence, 42,000 discharged prisoners have been placed in the way of earning an honest living, and the daily applicants for help are still increasing in number.

Is it possible that a work such as this, which God has been pleased to bless in so marked a manner, and which is admitted on all sides to be largely responsible for the great decrease of crime, should be in danger of curtailment for want of means?

Never during the whole thirty-two years that have elapsed since our Mission was first started, have we been so pressed for money to carry on our efforts, and the difficulty of raising our income is causing Mr. Wheatley and myself the greatest possible anxiety.

The response to our appeal at Christmas was fully £1000 less than last year, and we are this amount in debt. Towards this deficiency one old friend of the Mission has given £100, and another anonymous friend has promised £100 if the remaining £800 is contributed before the end of February.

May we earnestly beg your kind and prompt help so as to be able to secure this valuable gift?

Donations will be most gratefully acknowledged if sent to our Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; to our Secretary, Mr. W. Wheatley, 29, Brooke Street, Holborn, E.C.; or to

Yours sincerely,

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY, since this work began, 33,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual pressure, and from present appearances a very hard season is apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT, office of THE CHRISTIAN.

A Review from The Preachers' Magazine:—
"The great charm of this very beautiful monograph is its clear setting forth of the way in which the life of Joseph mirrors, to use the author's own phrase, the life of Jesus. This idea is not at all unduly pressed, but it runs through the volume, and adds immensely to its homiletic and devotional value."

A REVIEW BY THE LATE REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

RARA AVIS—A BOOK!

Preachers abound: but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter: but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work entitled we have found a book. It is part of our appointed suffering in this life to be compelled to winnow heaps of literature, with great result in chaff and dust and small gain in breadcorn, and therefore our rejoicing is the greater when grain comes to our garner as clean provender, in good weight and measure. The work before us is a great book for matter, though modest in size.

Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices, and are mainly of use in stirring up pure minds by way of remembrance. Dried fruits are their merchandise; such a thing as a freshly-gathered peach is never seen in their basket. One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch: he is no withered bough of the autumn forest. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way.

This excellent author deals with John—the man, the companion of Jesus, the apostle after the Ascension, the writer, and the theologian—thus furnishing us with a full-length portrait of "the beloved disciple." He has evidently chosen a congenial subject, and has such sympathy with the man before him that he can see far into his mind and heart. Even to comment upon John's writings is far from easy; he is so simple, and yet so fathomlessly deep; he uses so many of those pregnant monosyllables, so much more expressive than long words. Dr. Culross is a Christian of the Johannean stamp, and hence he is at home with the beloved disciple.

It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate on what they read.

We heard of a gentleman who entered an hotel and ordered a dinner of chops. One chop was brought him with due state, this being considered enough for a meal. The hungry diner inserted his fork into the lonely portion of flesh, and as he put it on his plate he said, "Yes, this is the sort of thing; bring me a dish of them." So have we risen from the perusal of many a modern book, feeling that the one or two thoughts we obtained were good; but we wanted more of them. No such tantalising have we undergone while reading this work; but, on the contrary, we have had a feast of fat things full of marrow.—Sword and Trowel.

"COME OVER AND HELP US."

There are 139 MILLION Women in India, including 21 MILLION Widows, 79,000 being children under nine years of age. Thousands of women and girls die annually whose lives might be saved by proper Medical Assistance. There is only one Missionary to every 250,000 of the population. The object of the

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission,

Or, INDIAN FEMALE NORMAL SCHOOL AND INSTRUCTION SOCIETY,

Which works in co-operation with the Church Missionary and other Protestant Missionary Societies in India, and which was founded in 1852, is TO MAKE KNOWN THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST TO THE WOMEN OF INDIA. The agencies it employs are as follows:—

English Lady Zenana Missionaries, Native Christian Assistants, Bible-women, Day Schools for Girls, Training Schools, Village Missions; also Hospitals and Dispensaries, presided over by fully qualified English Lady Doctors. Attendances last year, over 22,000.

The Society's work has nearly trebled during the past ten years. Appeals for more Missionaries are constantly received, to which the Committee are ready to respond as soon as the necessary funds are provided. THE NEED IS MOST URGENT. WILL YOU HELP? Pamphlets giving further particulars will be sent on application.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurers, Lord Kinnaird and Sir W. Muir, K.C.S.I.; or by the Hon. Finance Secretary, W. T. Paton, Esq., at the Society's Offices, 3, Adelphi Terrace, London, W.C. General Secretary, Rev. A. R. Cavalier.

SOCIETY FOR RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS

(Syrian Colonisation Fund).

Mr. R. Scott Moncrieff, the Society's Special Agent, reports terrible distress among Jews in Palestine. Men, Women, and Children in silent misery, till sought out by Christian kindness. Winter has begun: "Frightful weather—floods of rain four days—half a gale of wind, in terrific gusts—followed by three days' great snowstorm, then more rain and cold winds. Hundreds outside the City in wretched huts, lying IN THE MUD on the floor. No bedding, food, or fire." Scarcely any clothing. Mr. Scott Moncrieff is giving bedding, flour rations, and fuel to hundreds; also bread twice a week to 1000, and at Jaffa shelter and food to 694 daily. Hospitals filled to overflowing. Mothers and new-born infants found starving.

FUNDS NEEDED for giving Food, Fuel, Bedding, Shelter, Work. Who will help in token of Christian sympathy?

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Mr. Benjamin Scott, for thirty-three years Chamberlain of the City of London.

Mr. James Van Sommer, in last week's Word and Work, had a heart-searching article on sin. It was suggested by the prevailing epidemic, which has invaded his household with grievous consequences, carrying off his wife. The same issue of our contemporary contained a portrait and biographical sketch of Rev. John Urquhart.

We regret to hear that the invaluable work of the St. Giles' Christian Mission is in a difficult condition, owing to the insufficiency of the subscriptions. Few, probably, need to be told that the Mission has done, and is doing, a remarkable work, which, notably amongst prisoners and lads, has been greatly blessed of God in the salvation of many, and the deliverance of large numbers from a life of crime. At present, fully £1000 are required, in order to clear off the deficiency and enable the operations to proceed with vigour. Towards this the treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan, has made a special gift of £100, while a lady promises another £100, provided the remaining £800 is cleared off by the end of February.

There have been two main characteristics of the Asiatic opium traffic—devastation in India and China, and discredit to the name and fame of Great Britain. Both characteristics are to-day realised to an unparalleled extent throughout the Christian community, and were properly accentuated at the meetings held last week for humiliation, prayer and fasting, and reported on page 13. The wicked traffic has long been doomed, and now its end seems almost in view. The resources of Satan are such, however, that energy must by no means be suspended nor vigilance allowed to wane. Righteousness will not be nationally magnified if God's remembrancers hold their peace. Humiliation, prayer, and fasting must still go on, until the iniquity is put away, and Britain's name associated with reparation rather than degradation.

We welcome back our old friend, General Booth, of the Salvation Army. Others have received him in a public style, which the daily newspapers have described at length. We must confess that we do not see the true relation of the parade and pageantry to the professed aims and endeavours of the Salvation Army. A very sympathetic critic has written of the "show of glory" in the proceedings. If not justified by New Testament teaching, this should be estimated in the light of the Gospel; and then it will surely rank as essentially "according to the course of this world."

That Ireland's woes can find no true remedy save in the Gospel is fully and freely admitted by all who themselves know and value its saving-power. Mr. Townsend Trench, however, feels that while this fact may be conceded, it is not altogether acted upon by the Lord's stewards. On this point he writes:—

> I notice that out of some £430 acknowledged in one week's issue of The Christian, as having been received towards the promotion of the Lord's work in various places, only ten shillings thereof appears to have been given to the Lord's work in Ireland.
> England has long tried coercion in Ireland; when will the day dawn that she will try the power of love? Will not the Christians of England lead the way? If they do so, you will have no difficulty in pointing out for their information those fields of evangelistic labour that are now in active operation, and those who work in a spirit of love and keep themselves free of sectarian controversy and politics.
> The Irish are the most affectionate people on the face of the globe. They recognise love when they see and feel it, and Irish Christians still hope for the loving and practical sympathy of their brothers and sisters in England, so that Ireland may feel that, so far as Christian England is concerned, she has not been quite forgotten.

Untaught even yet by the dealings of God in the appalling famine raging within her borders, Russia seems still bent on further cruelties against the Jews, for, according to latest advices, preparations are being made for an exodus far greater than anything yet witnessed. Every Jew who has means, it is said, is looking forward to an early departure. Notices of expulsion served on the Jews of Moscow for the end of January are now being relentlessly executed, and, despite the intense cold that prevails, no provision is made for protecting the exiles against the inclemency of the weather, and many are left exposed for hours to the severest rigour of the cold and snow. The Moscow correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt telegraphs:—

> The dreadful scenes which took place here on January 26 were repeated on the following day, although the number of those expelled was smaller. The protests of the general public at the severity of the officials became so violent, that the Chief of the Police was compelled to defer the further expulsions till February 13.

Nor is it the Jews only, for other correspondents show that the harshest measures are being dealt out to any brave enough to search into and accept for themselves the Gospel according to the Word of God. From various sources we learn that in Baranovka the fund at the disposal of the authorities for the relief of the distress is devoted altogether to the needs of the Orthodox. Stundists applying for relief are told that the fund is not for heretics. In Nerubalsk terrible distress prevails among the Stundists, as they are unable to obtain work on account of their faith. Kuzma Grebeniuk, in Nicolaieff, a Baptist preacher, is again in prison for permitting meetings of his co-religionists in his wife's house. His wife has just been liberated after three months in gaol for the same offence.

Those who are being led to put their trust in the "Higher Criticism," and to reject the testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ concerning Moses and the Old Testament writings, on the ground of his "becoming subject to human limitations of knowledge," may be thankful to be reminded of the testimony of Scripture on this point. As though in anticipation of these sceptical suggestions, God has made the authority of his words absolutely sure. In Deut. xviii. 18 God said to Moses, "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee; and I will put my words in his mouth, and He shall speak unto them all that I shall command Him. And it shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which He shall speak in my name, I will require it of him."

The Lord Jesus Christ says, concerning his own testimony (John viii. 28), "Howbeit He that sent Me is true, and the things which I heard from Him, these speak I unto the world...As the Father hath taught Me, I speak these things." And again (John xii. 48-50), "He that rejecteth Me, and receiveth not my sayings, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I spake, the same shall judge him in the last day. For I spake not from myself; but the Father which sent Me, He hath given Me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak...The things, therefore, which I speak, even as the Father hath said unto Me, so I speak." If the critics could break down the first line of defence of the Divine authority by limiting the knowledge of the Son, they will find the second line of defence, that the words He spake were "spoken" and "commanded" by God, an insuperable barrier to their impious suggestions.

The election in May next of "the Black Pope," as in Rome the General of the Jesuits is termed, is already causing no little excitement in Romish circles. The society now consists of nearly thirteen thousand members in various countries of the world—Italy, strange to say, having the fewest, or only 1764, as compared with the 2863 in France, and 2307 in the English province, which latter, however, includes Ireland and North America and Canada. A Romish contemporary a few days ago referred to the Jesuits as "the corps d'elite of the Church militant," and claimed for the era that they have had a large share in the "making of Church history." There would, however, appear to be very strong grounds for believing that the order meddles with other history as well, and the Italian Government has not hesitated to give very practical expression to the view.

In the current number of The Review of the Churches Dr. Lunn gives details of a Conference to be held at Grindelwald, in the Bernese Alps, next summer. His idea is to induce a number of leaders of the different Churches to spend at least a part of their holiday in this delightful Swiss village, discussing the possibilities of reunion, and the methods by which they may solve the different problems which now confront the Churches.

> We are told that, amongst others who have expressed their willingness to be present, are the Hon. and Rev. Canon Fremantle, Canon Basil Wilberforce, Canon Body, Dr. Parker, Dr. Clifford, Dr. Mackennal, Mr. Price Hughes, Mr. R. F. Horton, Mr. Percy W. Bunting, and Mrs. Sheldon Amos. In order to secure audiences for the Conference, Dr. Lunn has made arrangements by which any who wish to combine a fortnight's holiday in Switzerland, with the pleasure of listening to these discussions, can do so at a cost of ten guineas each. Canon Wilberforce thinks that "all theological hatchets would find a grave in the Grindelwald glacier," and his hope seems to be shared by the others who are joining in this Conference.

The burying of theological hatchets in the ice of Grindelwald will of itself scarcely bring about the union for which Jesus prayed, and no reunion of Christendom is worth even the short journey to Switzerland if it does not mean "that they all may be one: as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." Burying the hatchets would be a very good beginning, if followed by an absolute and loyal return to the Scriptures of truth. To see a council of representative Christian men bury each his weapon, and each assume the whole armour of God, even to the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, would be the grandest sight since Pentecost. But along with the hatchets must be buried many venerable ancient traditions, and many modern vested interests, and the council must consist of men of whom the world is not worthy.

It is to be regretted that in the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland it has been laid down a few days ago that the decision of the House of Lords in the famous licensing case of Sharp v. Wakefield does not apply to Ireland, and it, therefore, follows that in the sister island the magistrates have no absolute discretionary power to refuse an application for the renewal of a licence. The point is of such vital importance that it is hoped that the decision will be taken to the Lords. If there is a country in which, above all others, it is essential that the justices should be able to weed out licences, that country is Ireland, where, as a matter of fact, the number of spirit-shops is disgracefully large in almost every town and village throughout the land.

A committee, representing the drink interest, met in London on Friday last, and with closed doors discussed the steps to be taken to obtain the introduction of a Bill this session of Parliament for the amendment of the Licensing Act, so as to do away with the necessity, which at present exists, for yearly applications for the renewal of licences. The measure is intended to secure the legal continuance of licences, except in cases where there has been offence against the law, and it is not difficult to see what is the object behind the action of the promoters. There should be a strong and speedy pronouncement of public opinion on the subject.

It is gratifying to observe that the movement in favour of the proper observance of the Sabbath is gaining ground in France. The congress on the subject, which recently met in Paris, was largely attended, and was a very successful gathering. With considerable foresight, the society is at present aiming rather at the education of the public mind on the subject than at legislative interference; when that education has progressed somewhat, the time will have come for the other course.

A short time since, we inserted a note respecting a new departure in the way of itinerant evangelisation in Spain. There is abundance of room for this, as half of the country is unevangelised. We find, however, the evangeliser in question writing thus:—

To-day, what Spain wants is not periodicals, nor schools, nor political influences, or other like things of this world. Without the Holy Ghost—without preachers filled with Him—there is nothing to be done here.

This is a very mixed and misleading paragraph. Why are periodicals and schools thus connected with political influences, except to produce a false impression? Is not the Gospel preached in periodicals in Spain, as well as elsewhere? Is there anywhere in Spain better work being done than in the evangelical schools? There is more here than meets the eye; there is an unworthy attempt to disparage other work and workers. We have heard of a threat to "take away the credit in England" of some whom we know to have been for years doing an unostentatious and blessed work, in the power of the Holy Ghost, though schools are included in the procedure. We do not say more now, but this unworthy persecution has gone on too long already, and, if necessary, we shall speak more plainly.

Missionaries and "The Christian."

Rev. Joshua Knowles, writing from Martanchum, Travancore, where, after a brief rest at home, he is now in the midst of his loved work, thanks most warmly the friends—to him unknown—who send weekly a copy of The Christian. The only clue afforded, he remarks, is the post-mark "Leamington." He adds:—

Living as we do over sixteen miles from any European, it is a treat to get papers unexpectedly. I have charge of over fourteen thousand native Christians, and a considerable number of them speak and write English; and I should be thankful for any books which might be put into the agent's library, and I would be glad to send letters and photographs in return to those kind enough to help us. I enclose two photographs, No. 1 one of a few of the native Christian girls in our boarding-school, and No. 2 a small photo of a Bible-woman. The girls cost about £3 a year, and the Bible-woman about £10, and are supported by friends. If the kind friend who sends the paper should send for them might I kindly ask you to forward?

I also send two small photos No. 3 and 4 for yourself. No. 3 is the ruins of an old Hindu-temple and a banyan-tree. No. 4 is a little girl of the name of Janika, who attends the boarding-school. Her father came one day to me to ask might she attend; and I said, of course; but did he know, I asked, that it was a Christian school, and Christian teaching. Yes; he said he knew, that was all right; so for some months she came, and seemed quite happy to be with the Christian girls. Then she went to her grandfather's at Tuvandram. Yesterday she came to wish us a happy new year. Will you pray that she may come to know the Saviour's love, and that God's blessing may rest on the little ones? I do not wish to beg, but if any one would like to train a good Christian girl in the boarding-school, or to support, a Bible-woman, I should be so glad.

Convalescent Home and Weary Toilers' Rest.—A lady has kindly promised to provide for a long-felt need, in the shape of a Weary Toilers' Rest and Convalescent Home for East London respectable poor, on condition that funds are raised for the furnishing. If £50 be forthcoming the Home can be opened at once. Owing to the effects of the prevailing epidemic, the Home is sadly required. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by Miss Ewer Benn (Hon. Worker), 33, St. Peter's-road, Mile End, London, E.

"Add to Faith, Courage."

It was the great desire of the Apostle of the Gentiles that prayer might be made for him, that utterance might be given unto him, that he might open his mouth boldly...to speak boldly, as he ought to speak.

The two most prominent preachers of this generation have been C. H. Spurgeon, who has just been called to his rest, full of sheaves, if not full of days; and D. L. Moody, who is yet, by the good hand of God upon him, at work with undiminished energy. One chief characteristic which these two men had in common is courage to speak out the truth of the Gospel as it ought to be spoken.

But of the Lord Himself was this pre-eminently true, and of Him, beyond all his servants of ancient or modern times, was it true that the people hung upon Him for to hear Him. The people love reality, and the highest courage, in this world of shams and lies and evils of every sort, is needed to declare the truth and to bear witness to the right.

Many preachers are afraid to touch the prevailing vices, which are eating like a cancer into the people's life. They are afraid of being called fanatics, or, worse still, faddists, as The Times and the Anglo-Indian Government, and the distillers and brewers and licensed victuallers stigmatise those who, in the name of God, denounce the opium curse abroad and the drink iniquity at home.

The unwisdom of timid reticence was shown in Scotland as well as England last week. On the occasion of the funeral of Mr. Spurgeon many of the publicans of South London closed their establishments for a short time. They thus showed respect for one who did not hesitate, throughout a long ministry, to denounce their demoralising traffic. There was a similar expression of esteem for Mr. Moody in Scotland. Our American friend has never so "gone for" the drink demon as he has in this campaign in that whisky-loving country. Yet, in spite of this, we find the publicans of Hamilton unanimously agreeing to close their houses for two hours on a week-day, in order that they and their assistants may have an opportunity of hearing the evangelist and Mr. Sankey.

Is it that they are in a degree conscience-stricken? Or do they act so because they admire the dauntless courage of the man? In either case the effect is equally salutary.

Let preachers everywhere realise—what we believe to be the fact—that men respect straightforward, honest, unflinching testimony, while at heart they despise the man who only utters pleasantries which are too feeble to do either good or harm. The faithful preaching of the heart's sinfulness, and the plan of redemption, will ever be honoured of God to accomplish his purposes towards the children of men.

UNBELIEF IN GERMANY.—The Berlin correspondent of Evangelical Christendom writes:—"In the Grand Duchy of Berlin the pastors have now received the permission of the Church Government to officiate at ceremonies of cremation. The author of a well-known pamphlet in the sense of modern rationalism has given some addresses in our city, but they were very scantily attended. A great number of people shout loud applause when anything appears which they think they can make use of against the Christian faith, but that is all; for the moral and religious thoughts of such half Christianity they have no interest. Therefore, our unbelieving pastors receive loud praise in the Press, but have no hearers for their sermons."

CORK Y.M.C.A.—A site for the new building has been obtained. The members have increased during the year. The expenditure has been heavy, says the report, owing to large aggressive movements having been started to counteract evil influences around, but the year closes free of debt. The holiness convention, held on the lines of Keswick teaching, resulted in blessing to many. During the year one of the members entered a foreign missionary college, another offered himself to the C.M.S., and others are waiting as opportunities may offer. The Sunday-night Meeting has been a decided success, and many, it is believed, have received definite blessing. It is also pointed out that the prominent feature of the entire work is evangelistic, and that the spiritual agencies predominate. The Hon. Sec. is Mr. W. A. Boyd.

FIVE RULES FOR DAILY LIVING.

At a recent meeting of the North-East Metropolitan District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations at Stratford Rev. Mark Guy Pearse made some helpful suggestions for godly living. He made two preliminary remarks—(1) that while we count our lives by years, God speaks of our days, "So teach us to number our days," teaching us to "live a day at a time"; and (2) no rules are of any value until we know that we are in the right road.

Rule 1. Put the Word of God in the right place. "Wash yourself regularly in the bath of God's Word every day." Rule 2. Pray for what you want. "When you pray for blessing on a certain thing you are going to do you touch it with grace; and when you come to the time for action, you see the grace waiting for you." Rule 3. Think of God when you hear the clock strike. "Get a breath of heaven and a sight of God. Rule 4. Get a dinner-time for your soul. Rule 5. End the day rightly. "When you kneel down, and look back over the day, do not ask God vaguely to forgive your sins. Bring them out, and call them by the right name."

A member of a church once got drunk. He sought to go back to God and get his peace restored. He could not find the Saviour, so he sought again. His minister called upon him. The minister said to him, "You pray again." They knelt down together. He began: "Oh, God! Thou knowest thy servant in a moment of unwatchfulness was overtaken by sin." "Nonsense!" said the minister; "tell the Lord you got drunk." That was another matter; he could not bring that up. He began again: "Oh, Lord! Thou knowest thy servant in his weakness and frailty was overtaken by a besetment." "Nonsense! tell the Lord you got drunk." At last the poor fellow said, "Oh God! Have mercy upon me; I got drunk." Then very speedily that man was at peace with God again. The fact is he used these phrases to wrap up his faults. Again some people are afraid to thank God. It is a good thing to come and say, "Oh, my Father! I do thank Thee; about eleven o'clock this morning I was worried and vexed. I do thank Thee that by thy grace I kept my temper." Yes; end the day right.

ANOTHER DOOR OPENED.—Chiningchow, a city four days south of Chinanfu, is now open to missions, and a piece of property has been bought there by the American Presbyterians. Just a year ago Dr. Hunter and his brethren were driven out of this city by a mob. Negotiations for an adjustment of relations, which have been pending ever since, were consummated in October last through Rev. Gilbert Reid, of Chinanfu. He was tendered a partial recompense in money for the few things stolen from Dr. Hunter, a present to the doctor and himself from all the gentry of the city, and a feast from a chief official, whose word is pledged to protect missionaries in future and to punish any who may scatter abroad anonymous placards reviling Christianity.

PARMITER-STREET MISSION.—One of the oldest and largest Sunday-schools in Cambridge Heath was, until October last, linked with the Episcopal Jews' Chapel, but in consequence of changes there the connection was severed, and the title changed to "The Parmiter-street Sunday-School and Mission." For over sixty years most successful work has been carried on here by a devoted band of teachers and helpers; the schools are vested in trustees, whilst the management devolves on a responsible committee. On Thursday week the friends of the Mission had their annual tea and social gathering, followed by the annual meeting, presided over by Rev. J. B. Barraclough, M.A., President of the Mission. Amongst those who took part were Rev. H. Oliver Allbrook, A.K.C., Messrs. A. H. Cocks, Alfred Hughes, G. H. Gillman and A. Robins. The hon. secretary gave a condensed report of the work of the past year, from which it appeared that although a period of trial and difficulty, it had been one of marked advance. This the friends trustfully take as an earnest of still greater success and blessing in the future. The scholars on the books number over four hundred and the teachers thirty-four, whilst among other departments of Christian work are Mission and Children's Services, Bible-classes, Soup Kitchen, Tract Distribution, Mothers' Meetings, Factory Girls' Instruction Class, Benevolent Society, Scripture Union, Sabbath Union, &c. The committee are very anxious to increase the usefulness of the Mission and strengthen and add to its agencies; they therefore earnestly appeal for personal or monetary help. Inquiries will gladly be answered by Miss Bock, Lady Superintendent, 40, Groombridge-road, South Hackney, or Mr. G. W. Lonsdale Barraclough, Hon. Sec., 11, King Edward-road, South Hackney.

AT THE FOOT OF SINAI.

EXODUS XIX.

FROM Rephidim the children of Israel marched slowly and laboriously through the great thoroughfare of the desert now known as the Wady-es-Sheykh, the longest, widest, and most continuous of those vast desert valleys. It must have been an astonishing exchange from the flat alluvial land of Egypt, where the only hills were those raised by the hands of man. On either side of the pilgrim host lofty and precipitous mountains reared their inaccessible ramparts of red sandstone and variegated granite, without verdure, or gushing rills, or trace of living thing. They must have appeared like the stately corridors of a vast temple, to the inner shrine of which the pillar of cloud was conducting them by its stately march.

The Red Sea, which must have seemed like a friend, had been long ago left behind, and there was no chance of retracing their path or returning. There was nothing to allure them or arrest their steps amid the awful desolation and grandeur of those inaccessible precipices. They must have sometimes been almost overwhelmed by the bare sterility of the scene, and the awful silence that was stirred to resent the intrusion of such a multitude upon its ancient reign. But their course was always onwards, until they must have been impressed by a deepening awe, such as became those who were already treading the precincts of a temple not made with hands, a shrine of incomparable majesty, to which those vast and sublime avenues were the befitting approach.

At last it broke on them. After a march of eighteen miles from the Red Sea, they came out on a perfectly level plain of yellow sand, some two miles long, and half-a-mile wide, nearly flat, and dotted over with tamarisk bushes. The mountains which gather around this plain have for the most part sloping sides, and form a kind of natural amphitheatre, but towards the south there is one pile of jagged cliffs which rises sheer upwards in wild precipitousness, whilst behind lies the granite mass of the range of Gebel Mousa, deeply cleft with fissures, and torn, as though it had fought a hard battle with earthquake, storm, and fire. This pile of rocks is called Ras Susâfeh and was probably "the mount that might be touched and burned with fire." It rises from the plain below as a huge altar, and all that transpired on its summit would have been easily visible to the furthest limits of the camp of two million souls pitched beneath.

Such was the chosen scene for the giving of the law. There the hosts of Israel remained stationary for long weeks; and there, whilst clouds veiled the heights, and fire played from peak to peak, and mysterious voices, resembling at times a trumpet's notes, awoke unwonted echoes in the heart of the hills, God met with his creatures and gave them his law, writing his name, not on tablets of stone merely, but on the entire course of human history.

I. GOD'S OBJECT AT SINAI.—We can but briefly touch on this, as we are most of all concerned with the character of the great leader; but in that more exclusive study we may for a moment consider the impressions which the marvellous scenes associated with Sinai were calculated to produce on the people and on himself.

At the time of the Exodus the world was almost wholly given to idolatry. The first objects of idolatrous worship were probably simply the sun and moon and heavenly bodies, or other conspicuous objects of creative wisdom and power. Afterwards the Deity was supposed to reside in men, and even beasts. Of these, images were made and worshipped—at first covered with drapery, but afterwards in a state of nudity, and exerting the most demoralising effect. "Professing themselves wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God for the likeness of an image of corruptible man, and of birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things. Wherefore God gave them up to the lusts of their hearts."

In dealing with this deluge of idolatry, God acted as with the deluge of water that drowned the ancient world. He began with a single family, teaching them the sublime lessons concerning Himself, which when they had perfectly acquired, they should make the common coin of the world.

Let us notice the successive steps.

1st step.—God chose from the masses of heathendom one man, "called him alone," led him to follow Him into a strange land. There, shut away from surrounding peoples, He began to teach him about Himself. As a gardener selects one plant that he may bring it to rare perfection, and make it the means of improving its entire sisterhood, so Jehovah spared no time or pains with the first great Hebrew, that being blessed he might be the means of blessing to the race.

2nd step.—God welded the Hebrew people together into one, that they might be able to receive and retain as a part of their national life those great truths with which they were to be entrusted. This welding was accomplished by the tie of a common parentage, of which they were justly proud; by the bond of a common occupation, which kept them to themselves as shepherds, apart from the busy traffic of cities and marts of commerce; and, lastly, by the pressure of a common trial, which, together with the marvellous deliverance that was granted them, remained fresh and indelible in all after generations, like those colours in the land of their bondage, which in that dry desert air have lasted unfading for thirty centuries. So perfectly did God do this work that while other nations have risen, reigned, and fallen, and their disintegration has been utter and final, the children of Abraham endure, like an imperishable rock, undestroyed by the fret of the waves or the friction of the ages.

3rd step.—God revealed his existence. Into the midst of their bondage tidings came that the God of their fathers was a living God, that He had met one of their number in the desert and had called him by name, and had promised to interfere in their behalf. The news may have excited but a languid interest. They were glad that like other nations of the time they had their tutelary deity, but that was all, and they knew little or nothing beside.

4th step.—God showed by the plagues that He was stronger than the gods of Egypt. Can you not imagine the children of Israel saying, "Our God is great, He has turned the water into blood, but perhaps He is not so strong as Isis or Osiris or Serapis or the sacred bull"? But the wonders which were wrought on the gods of Egypt settled that question for ever.

5th step.—God excited their love and gratitude. You can do anything you like with those who love, but to get you must give, to excite love you must declare it. Hence they were touchingly reminded of what He had done: "Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagle's wings, and brought you unto Myself."

6th step.—God set Himself to teach them concerning certain of those great qualities, the knowledge of which lay at the foundation of all right dealings between the people and Himself. And in order to achieve his purpose, He made use of outward significant signs which did more than the most elaborate discourse to instruct the ignorant and sensual people whom He had taken for his own.

7th step.—God clearly designated Moses to be the organ and channel of his communications to man. "Lo, I come to thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and may also believe thee for ever" (9). It was impossible to forecast the way in which God was fulfilling his purposes at the time, but as we look back on the story we can detect the development of his plan, just as from the summits of the eternal hills we shall see the way by which He has been leading us all the days of our pilgrimage.

II. THE LESSONS OF SINAI.—(1) The Majesty of God. The natural scenery was sufficiently majestic, but it became more so as the incidents of the third day were unfolded. Was there not majesty in the thunders and lightnings, in the brooding cloud where clouds were almost unknown, in the flashing lightning dispelling the pitchy gloom, in the trumpet peal echoing through the hills, now soft as a flute rolling through the yielding air, now loud as an organ striking against some outstanding cliff? Meanwhile the clouds dropped water, and there were showers of tropical rain. And it was amid such scenes that God spake. Could any combination of natural phenomena have given grander conceptions of the Majesty of the Divine Nature?

(2) The Spirituality of God. What was their God like? Would He assume the form of anything that is in the heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth? Would it be in any, or in a combination of all, of these forms that they should see Him who had brought them out of Egypt? But on that memorable occasion, "when Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet God," they saw no likeness. He was there, for He spoke But there was no outward form for the eye to discern.

It was very hard. The extreme difficulty of the human heart accustoming itself to the worship of what the eye cannot perceive, or the imagination realise, has been attested by the repeated relapse into idolatry, from the days of the golden calf to the crucifix which the Roman Catholic devotee presses to her lips. It has not been easy for mankind to learn this lesson so clearly taught on Sinai, that God is a Spirit.

(3) The Holiness of God. This primal lesson was taught in striking fashion by outward signs which impressed the sense. Bounds were erected to keep the beasts from grazing on the thin herbage of the lower slopes; whoever touched the Mount must die; all clothes were to be carefully washed against that third day; absolute purity was to be observed in heart and life; Moses alone was called up to the top of the Mount, where smoke and fire and lightning flash commingled, and the thunder peal vied with the trumpet-blast; and when he had climbed thither, he was sent all the way down again for the express purpose of charging the people, and even the priests, not to break through upon the Lord to gaze, lest God should break forth upon them.

All these significant acts converged to give outward and sensible manifestation of the Holiness of God.

(4) The Royalty of God. In their triumphal ode of victory by the shores of the Red Sea, the people had confessed the right of Jehovah to reign over them for ever, but they were yet to learn that He was indeed absolute monarch. The Jewish state was a kingdom, and God was King. And the reality of his government appeared in the way in which Moses himself obeyed his behest. It was a sight never to be forgotten to see how their great leader Moses was absolutely subservient to the command issued from God's pavilion. At the best he was only God's executor, "the passive instrument of the Divine will." The Decalogue was spoken by God Himself "out of the midst of the fire, the cloud, and the thick darkness, with a great voice." Every ordinance of the Law, every custom and provision for domestic and civil life, every item in the construction of the sanctuary and in the ordering of the priests, was due to the direct will of God, spoken from his mouth. "God, and not Moses, was the author of each proviso, the real legislator, the real law-giver, the real King, Moses was but the mouthpiece, an intermediary to communicate God's decrees to his people." How clear was the testimony to the supremacy of the Most High! Such were some of the lessons taught at Sinai.

III. Moses at Sinai.—He seemed at home there. Though as to his physical system he could not but fear and quake from the unwonted accompaniments of the Divine Glory, yet there was no slavish dread such as would make him draw afar off, as the people did. Mark the successive stages in that familiarity between him and God. "Moses went up unto God" (3). Having reported God's words to the people, he appears to have returned to tell the people's words to the Lord, for we are told "he went down from the mount unto the people" (14). When Jehovah came down in thunder and smoke, for the third time Moses went up to the top of the Mount (20). When the ten words of the law had been spoken, Moses drew near to the thick darkness where God was (xx. 21). After this, he was bidden to ascend the mountain a fifth time, the elders accompanying him to a certain point, and Joshua still further, but he alone entering the cloud, which was like devouring fire on the top of the mount, and he remained there forty days and forty nights to receive the Divine instructions for the erection of the Tabernacle (xxiv. 18). A sixth time he returned unto God, offering to be blotted from his book, if only Israel might be spared, and their sin atoned (xxxii. 30). And yet a seventh time he was invited to come up early in the morning, carrying with him two tables of stone, and there, as he stood in an alcove of the rocks, the presence of God passed by, and the name of God was proclaimed, and he remained for a second period of forty days and forty nights, descending to the people with shining face, the living evidence of the reality and closeness of the fellowship. "And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend."

This fellowship had an ennobling effect on his character. Not only did his face, but his life shine. There was henceforth a supernatural grace and beauty about his aspect and demeanour which clearly marked him out as "the man of God." His meekness, his gentleness under provocation, his jealousy for the name and cause of God burnt with an intenser and more even flame. He must have been regarded by the people with a kind of reverential awe, as one who was a favourite courtier in the presence of the great King, and had the right of entrance there as he chose.

The life of fellowship with God cannot be built up in a day. It begins with the habitual reference of all to Him, hour by hour, as Moses did in Egypt. But it moves on to more and longer periods of communion. And it finds its consummation and bliss in days and nights of intercession and waiting and holy intercourse. Ah! what patterns are seen on the Mount! What cries are uttered there! What visions are seen there! What revelations are made there! What injunctions are received there! Alas for us that we remove so far away from it, or at the best are admitted to stand only with the elders and see paved work of sapphire stone beneath God's feet! Oh! for the closer access, the nearer view, the more intimate face to face intercourse, such as is open still to the friends of God.

THE ANGEL OF DEATH.

The angel of death is abroad,
He stalketh the land in his pride;
No age or condition can parry his blow,
Or safe from his presence can hide.

Away in the palace he's found,
On the rich and the noble he waits,
No obstacle hinders his stealthful approach,
Or stayeth the foe at their gates.

The poor and the humble he meets,
Eclipsing the cottage with gloom,
The father, the mother, the bridegroom or bride
He ruthlessly marks for the tomb.

Since then we in jeopardy stand,
'Tis wisdom at once to repair
To Him who can aid in the bitterest hour,
And thus for his mandate prepare.

For One has abolished death,
By going Himself to the grave,
And now in the heavens exalted He sits,
The Mighty, the Mighty to save!

A NATION'S APOSTASY.

Many, at this time, feel deeply that God's chastening hand is stretched out over the land, and that while various national sins must be mourned over, the great sin bringing down judgment is that of apostasy, from God and into idolatry. A special meeting for humiliation and prayer in this matter, held in St. James's Hall, on Friday evening, was well attended and earnest in tone. Although several addresses were delivered it was felt throughout that the gathering had been called for prayer; and each speaker concluded with a few words of earnest petition. The proceedings opened with praise, prayer, and the reading of Joel ii. 12-20.

Sir S. A. Blackwood, K.C.B., who presided, said: We are met at a solemn moment for a solemn purpose—not for of others, but for the confession of our own sin. If our land be full of iniquity, if truth has fallen in the streets, where does the guilt rest? If there be clouds of darkness, is it not because those who are the lights of the world have failed to shine; if there be corruption, is it not because the salt has lost its savour? Hence we are not to lay the guilt upon others, but to confess our own failure and to ask God to let his light shine, and to show the people of God what they are, and what they are doing, and wherein they have turned aside. In the language of the opening prayer, we acknowledge that the hand of God is stretched out; He has taken away one of the Royal House, and has He not also taken one who was a mighty champion for the truth, and removed him to higher service? It has been hoped that a day would be set apart for humiliation. The Chairman did not think that such a day would be set apart, seeing how many had no such wish; but it was for Christians to pray apart, and by their influence to lead men to break from their evil ways. He conceived that the most grievous sin was the apostasy from the Protestantism of their forefathers, and the going over to the superstitious idolatry of Rome. They must not, however, confine themselves to one form of evil, but take a wider view of all the sins which are inflicting injury throughout the land, so that as a nation we might be a holy and God-fearing people.

Rev. E. W. Bullinger, D.D., read Judges ii. 14 and 15, and brought out the lessons of the story, as well as of Josiah's reformation, for the present time. In the course of his address he said that for two hundred years the nation sang praises for deliverance from the persecution of the Roman Catholic Church. At the end of two hundred years the Government removed the barrier, and opened again the gates of idolatry, and God had sent chastening upon the land, the particulars of which he traced.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D.D., said they had met to humble themselves before God for national sins—for permitting the continuance of the drink and opium traffic, but especially because of the more terrible evil of Ritualism and Romanism, which he looked upon as part of the great apostasy—which God would judge as He had done in former times. The speaker went on to draw an analogy between the history of the Jewish and Christian Churches, showing how brought down the judgment of God, and how again judgment seems to be impending. Yet underneath all these succession of apostacies we have the movement of the Divine purpose which makes ceaseless progress in the destined and predicted direction.

Miss Cusack (the "Nun of Kenmare") said that while the Church of God was founded upon a rock which never could be overthrown, the professing Church, or the reformed portion of it, may be. There is, she said, cause for humiliation in that evil of evils—the turning away from Jesus. There is a system which presumes to teach that a man can be God's vicegerent on earth, a system, therefore, which dethrones God, and puts a man in his place. But we want no King but Jesus, and no book but his blessed Word, which Rome hates and fears. The question of questions for to-day is, Who shall be king? Shall we have King Jesus or Rome? We cannot have both; and if Ritualism had been crushed in England, as it ought to have been when it first raised its idolatrous head, Jesus would now be owned and known as King in this land.

In a few burning sentences Miss Cusack went on to charge nominal Protestants with supporting Rome politically, socially, and financially. Let that support be withdrawn, and Rome in this country will collapse.

Rev. W. Sinden reviewed the Old Testament parallels of humiliation and prayer, and trusted the present gathering would prove a breakwater to the judgments of God.

Mr. Mark Knowles traced the sad progress of Romanism in recent years; and gave some details of a painful case in Torquay, in which a devoted foreign missionary returned from his field of service only to find his home broken up, his wife in an asylum, and his children captured by the Jesuits. Such things reminded us we must be alert and on our guard against this unsleeping foe.

A JEWISH MISSION TOUR.

Mr. C. T. Lipshytz, superintendent of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, has just returned from a month's tour on the Continent—a long-cherished hope which, by the kindness of a friend, he has at last been enabled to realise. Going over ground with which he was familiar, he met many old Hebrew Christian friends, some of whom had heard of his growing work in London, and all of whom gladly facilitated his purpose to preach Christ among Jews in France and Germany.

During a stay of nine days at Paris on his outward journey, Mr. Lipshytz preached several times, visited in many Jewish homes, and engaged in discussion in the restaurants. Having called at Basle and Strasburg, he spent a brief season at Stuttgart, and thence passed to Heidelberg. In some of these places the opposition was very strong, the Jewish disposition being soured by the deplorable fact that the Christian community, to a large extent, shows neither love nor pity for Israel. At Darmstadt the Anti-Semitic feeling was very pronounced. Nevertheless, loving Gentile Christians gathered round Mr. Lipshytz and interested themselves in his mission, greatly to the astonishment of the Jews, some of whom confessed that the prevailing prejudice and hostility is largely responsible for their stolid refusal to listen to the Gospel. Pastor Wagner, formerly of Sydenham, resides at Darmstadt, and shows a special interest in the evangelisation of Israel.

At Mayence Mr. Lipshytz found a goodly number of Jews, among whom he used to visit years ago. He was much encouraged to learn that in two instances at least the Lord had blessed his testimony after many days. These convinced and converted men have been baptized, and are leading godly lives, rejoicing in Christ. After Frankfort and Leipzig, Berlin was reached, where the good work done by Mr. Rohrbach at Moabit, and by Fräulein von Blücher at Bülowstrasse, was a gladsome inspiration. Mr. Lipshytz spoke several times in Berlin to Jews concerning Christ and to Christians concerning the Jews, and addressed a meeting of students at the Institutum Judaiacum, directed by Dr. Hermann L. Strack. Continuing his tour, he passed through Hamburg and Bremen, and, coming to Cologne, was again among old acquaintances in a familiar field. Here he had planned to stay a day, but was compelled to remain four. During his journeyings he distributed about two hundred New Testaments and four thousand tracts in German and Hebrew.

The work at the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, is still carried on with much encouragement, and Mr. Lipshytz resumes it with renewed vigour. The degree to which in Germany the Jew-hate, in which many nominal Christians are implicated, has estranged Israelites, and prevents them from so much as giving a hearing to the Gospel, caused him much sorrow; and he hopes to be able to do something to promote, at least in one German centre, mission work of that sympathetic and gracious type which God has so abundantly blessed to Jews in our own land.

PARIS MISSION TO THE JEWS (21, Quai aux Fleurs).—The Jews recently driven from Russia here tell their own tale of suffering, and misery, and persecution. The work accomplished during the past year has been on the lines of missions in general religious and philanthropic. Deep interest is evinced by many in the study of the Scriptures, while not a few are secret disciples, who it is believed, will in due time "come out straightaway." The report speaks of a clever Russian student who on taking his leave of the Mission said, "Your preaching has been the means of entirely changing my life." And a postscript adds: "Our present need is a home for Judæo-Russian fugitives and inquirers; this would immensely extend the usefulness of our Mission." Miss M. A. Palmer is the hon. treasurer.

Funeral of C. H. Spurgeon.

THE MEMORIAL SERVICES.

We cannot epitomise these services better than by saying, in the language of Scripture, "the whole city was moved." A cedar has fallen, the uprooting of which has sent a thrill of dismay, and a profound sense of loss, even to the ends of the earth. Dr. Pierson only gave voice to wide-spread conviction, when he said we must go back for at least one hundred years, to find a parallel to the bereavement which now has so sorely stricken the Church of God. The funeral of C. H. Spurgeon must take rank as a great historic event, of which not the oldest man amongst us has seen the like, nor of which the youngest spectator, however long he may live, is likely to see the equal. A man of unique personality has passed away, and instinctively society is moved to its depths, even in quarters usually case-bound, by the feeling of deprivation. As a friend remarked, "Not even in life has the great preacher preached such a sermon as he has done in his death." It is indeed so. The effect of the death is the most touching tribute to the life. Even those of us who knew him best and valued him most are strangely conscious to-day that we were but half awake to his real worth. We thought much of him before, but we think more of him now. And this feeling, common to those in the innermost circle, is reflected to such a degree as to constitute a national, and, almost, a world-wide, sorrow. Oh, that the chastening may be as widely hallowed as it is penetratingly felt!

The first of the memorial services was held on Wednesday morning at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Rev. J. A. Spurgeon presiding. This was strictly a gathering of the Tabernacle Church and congregation with a representation of the College, Colportage, Orphanage, and other Tabernacle organisations. It was, therefore, the most private commemorative meeting held. After prayer had been offered by Mr. S. R. Pearce, and the hymn "All hail the power of Jesu's name" was sung, Dr. Angus, a former pastor of the church when in Park-street, briefly addressed the great assembly. "For fifty years," he said, "I have been severed from this church, but have been in constant touch with its pastor and many of its members." There was one passage he desired to fasten on their hearts: "Remember them that are your leaders, inasmuch as they have spoken unto you the Word of God, whose faith follow."

DR. PIERSON

(officiating pastor) followed with an address that rose to the level of an oration. After describing the gathering as the unique one of the series to be held, for herein the family met together to weep and pray, and also to talk about the spiritual father and brother who a few days since was in the land of the dying, but was now in the land of the living, Dr. Pierson said, "Before proceeding further, I must relieve myself of the last message from dear Mrs. Spurgeon, contained in a letter to hand this morning." The extract as read, and by which many were moved to tears, concluded with these words: "How little we thought what God meant to do with his dear servant, when He called you from beyond the sea. But our faith shall not fail. He hath done all things well, and though the future, both to you and me, may seem clouded and uncertain, we will trust and not be afraid. With me it is an absolute necessity that I keep looking up" (at hearing this many gave way). "'He is not here, he is risen,' is as true of my beloved as of my beloved Lord. To-day" (this was written on the Lord's Day) "he has been a week in heaven. Oh! the rapture of seeing his Saviour's face! Oh! the welcome home which awaited him! He has left this sad earth. Not for a moment do I wish him back, though he was dearer to me than tongue can tell. I shall pray much for you all during this week of grief. I feel myself like a shipwrecked mariner" (here there was an outburst of sobs), "who has with difficulty reached the shore, and now looks with streaming eyes and fainting heart on others still struggling through these awful waves of sorrow. With Christian love and intense sympathy, your grateful friend, Susie Spurgeon."

We can give but a meagre outline of the able address which followed the reading of the foregoing extract. Dr. Pierson was en rapport with his theme, and borne along in it like a ship in full sail before a strong breeze. "This beloved man of God," he said, "was in that family circle a preacher of the Gospel. And what a preacher! I am persuaded that the century has known no other that was his equal in the simple and persuasive utterance of the Gospel message. It was a heroic resolve on his part to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified; but it was a rare success on his part, knowing nothing but this, to gather and hold the largest Christian congregation within the bounds of the Christian world. There were some who depreciated him as a man who had no broad horizon, as a man whose range and scope were narrow; but such depreciation reacted upon his accusers, for it showed how little they appreciated the genius of his ministry. The fiddler who, after hearing Paganini, went home and burned his own fiddle, did so not simply because the master violinist had brought out of the wooden box the most marvellous melodies and harmonies he had ever heard, but because upon one string he had effected melodies and harmonies that no other living performer had been able to bring out of four strings. And the glory of Charles Haddon Spurgeon in preaching the Gospel was that on that one string, 'Christ and Him crucified,' he effected the melodies and harmonies to which the whole orchestra of intellectual instruments was not equal. The glory of his ministry was the limitation of his ministry."

Next Dr. Pierson showed that Mr. Spurgeon's celebrity as a preacher was matched by his celebrity as a pastor; that he did not require to repeat himself; and that though shut off from this by his published discourses, he could yet keep on with perpetual freshness with his one perpetual theme. Dr. Pierson's last point was to the effect that what Mr. Spurgeon was as a preacher, what he was as a pastor, and what he was as a worker, he owed to what he was as a believer in Christ Jesus. The address closed with an eloquent appeal to carry on the work which had so blessedly prospered in their late pastor's hands.

The hymn, "Servant of God, well done!" was then sung, and private secretary to Mr. Spurgeon, next spoke. Needless to say, every ear was awake. Mr. Harrald has been more than a private secretary; he has been a loving, close, laborious friend, who has long and faithfully served the departed one with heart as well as nerve and brain. "I wish," he said, "to bear testimony on behalf of Mrs. Spurgeon to the sustaining grace of God which had been granted to her, and to all of them who had sorrowed with her away in the sunny land. Many of them, perhaps, knew that the loved pastor said to many friends, 'I shall be home in February. I shall be home in February.' And he was. Before the time he had himself fixed he was at home, for ever with the Lord." In tender tones Mr. Harrald added: "As five of us gathered in that little room at Mentone, after he had entered into rest, I felt that I ought to lead the little company in prayer for all who had been bereaved; but we were touched beyond expression, as we still continued on our knees, to hear the voice of the loved one, so sorely tried, thanking God for those many years that she had had the unspeakable joy of having such a precious husband lent to her."

Another point in Mr. Harrald's statement which evoked intense interest was what he had to tell touching Mr. Spurgeon's last moments. In reply to a question that had been often put to him since his return from Mentone: "When did the pastor say, 'I have fought a good fight,' &c.?" the speaker observed: The pastor had not said it at all. He (Mr. Harrald) had taken every opportunity to make known to every one that the last message their beloved pastor was able to deliver to the congregation, or to any one, was that memorable message which had been telegraphed to them the very day that they were bringing their thank-offerings for his partial recovery. In the course of its dictation Mr. Spurgeon fell into unconsciousness. He (Mr. Harrald) tarried, and on the pastor's coming to consciousness again, asked him if he had finished the message, saying, the congregation would want to know how he was progressing. In his own characteristic way, he said, "Let them find out." Mr. Harrald's conviction was that for some days before that the pastor knew he was dying, for in a most solemn conversation to him he had said, "My work is done," and then began talking of certain matters which no man, such as he, would speak of unless he was certain his work was done; and yet, knowing that he was lying on his dying bed, and perhaps knowing that that was the last message he would ever send, he did not speak of himself. Beyond the telegram referred to, then, there was no last message. All for others and not a word about himself—such his characteristic up to the last. As to how the text came to be applied, Mr. Harrald said that it had been his painful duty to submit to Mrs. Spurgeon certain matters that needed attention, and among others he took in the text, and as soon as he did so she said, "How is it you always think of just what I have been thinking? There is no other text for him." "I have fought a good fight," they knew how true that was. "I have finished my course," it was no broken column they had to rear; his work was finished. "I have kept the faith," every one there and throughout the world knew how true that was. Proceeding a step further, Mr. Harrald observed: "Many voices would say this, but none ought to say it more distinctly than my own. Within that olive casket there lay all that remained mortal of a martyr for the truth's sake." After quoting Mr. Spurgeon's words in The Sword and Trowel for this month, in confirmation of that view, Mr. Harrald drew attention to the peculiarity attaching to the sermon of the week, which was one Mrs. Spurgeon herself had entitled "His Own Funeral Sermon." In the text and his treatment of it there lay for them his message: "After he had in his own generation served the counsel of God he fell on sleep."

At the close of Mr. Harrald's touching address, Mr. Charlesworth read a selection of the wonderful words of life from God's own Book, and Mr. Medhurst (the first to go forth from the College) led in prayer.

Mr. T. H. Olney (treasurer), who followed in a brief address, said, "They had no need to-day to set aside seats for special mourners—they were all special mourners."

Mr. J. T. Dunn, who represented the eldership, followed in the like tender vein, saying that the kindness and sympathy of their Pastor had been beyond expression; while in discussing business, when they were in difficulty, the pastor would solve it in a word. As for the future, the officers were pledged to hold together in the name of the Lord, and to stand fast for the sake of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Chairman then read the following telegram from Mrs. Spurgeon at Mentone, which had just arrived: "My heart bleeds with yours, but our beloved's joy is full; we shall see him again, and our hearts shall rejoice. Death shall be swallowed up in victory, and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces." The hymn, "O God of Bethel," was next sung, and Mr. William Olney having supplied another tribute of warm love to the beloved pastor's memory, the proceedings closed with the Benediction.

THE MINISTERS' SERVICE.

In the afternoon of the same day, a memorial service was held for ministers and students of all denominations. The gathering was enormous, suggesting the idea of an Œcumenical Council. It was a grand testimony to the influence of the departed that from all parts of London and the provinces, and from all sections of the Church of Christ, ministers and students, moved by a common impulse, should have assembled in their thousands to honour the dead. The gathering of Pastors' College men alone, not including the present students, must have been nearly, if not over, five hundred. Yet neither expense nor inconvenience was thought of in the absorbing desire to pour out the heart's love in the farewell offices to the earthly remains of one they so much revered. With the generosity of a noble mind, of Manchester, himself far-famed as a preacher, struck as Chairman the key-note of the proceedings. "We are gathered," he said, "this afternoon united in one sentiment of affectionate reverence for the greatest preacher of the age." In uttering this sentiment there is little doubt Dr. Maclaren expressed the general feeling. Three things the speaker noted as characteristic of Mr. Spurgeon—profound faith, earnest devotion, and self-oblivion. He had learnt, thinking of Charles Spurgeon's life, what was the staple of a successful ministry. The first thing was that if a man desired to reach and to hold and to bless the largest number of his fellow-men he must hold fast by the great central verities of the Christian religion. Another thing was toil and pains. Their brother was gifted with a natural genius for forceful utterance such as set him beside the great masters of the English tongue; but it was not because of natural genius, but it was because he had set himself to be understanded of the common people that his words crystallised themselves into proverbs, and flashed and glowed with illustration, and never transcended the possibilities of the comprehension of the lowest of his audience, which was an ambition that the most learned, cultured, and refined among them might well set before themselves. Dr. Maclaren further enlarged on what he called their brother's most winning and powerful trait—namely, his utter self-forgetfulness. There was no affectation, no contortions, few exaggerations, a rich variety of tone and subject, and all made mighty because it could be seen that the last thing he was thinking of was himself. Dr. Maclaren next dwelt on the spirit of faith animating the man, saying, "From that bier there came the voice, 'I believe, therefore have I spoken.' Let them answer, 'We also believe, and therefore speak.'" followed in an address no less emphatic than the Chairman's in the estimate put upon Mr. Spurgeon's character and work. "There was not the suggestion of incompleteness resting upon his work. He had the endowment of a surpassing memory, and that was no small matter; that he could forget nothing, but could command and use whatever he had read and learned; and yet all the gold and myrrh and frankincense of his genius were laid at the feet of Christ with the humility of a little child, unconscious of the gift which it carried in its hand." Having spoken a stimulating word to the bereaved students, the Canon concluded his eulogistic address in the words: "The world to-day is colder, duller, darker, poorer for his absence; but heaven is fuller, warmer, richer for his presence."

Prayer having been offered by Pastor Cuff, and a hymn sung, Dr. Monro Gibson spoke, and took as his key-note the grounds of consolation that were theirs in this emergence. Was there any reason for their not believing that there might not be another Spurgeon raised up in the coming generation? He trusted that that great time of mourning and of the stirring of thoughts and hearts might leave behind it a rich harvest.

DR. HERBER EVANS,

Chairman of the Congregational Union, followed in an address marked by much pathos. He remembered Mr. Spurgeon saying he could always preach better on the Sunday if he only went to see the dying on the Saturday, to have just a look over the brink. They were taking a look over the brink now. God could not have conferred a greater blessing on this age than by giving them Charles Haddon Spurgeon, with his great soul, and that soul fully possessed of love for Him and his Gospel, because he loved not his own life only, but moulded the lives of thousands. His goodness and his character were not like a watch hidden away in the pocket to tell on the life of one man, but rather a great clock on the tower, directing and correcting the lives of millions by showing them time in the light of eternity.

The next to address the gathering was the President of the Wesleyan Conference,

DR. T. B. STEPHENSON,

The words, "If you would find his monument, look around," had been in his mind ever since he had gazed on that sea of faces. Men were not always appreciated at their real greatness in the hour of death; but no man who was not in the noblest sense a great man could have won or deserved such a testimony as was now being borne to his memory. In the course of his address, Dr. Stephenson observed that Mr. Spurgeon had rendered great service to his age in that he had upheld the majesty of preaching. The silver voice of Mr. Spurgeon would be heard no more; but they thanked God that they had heard it, and they glorified God for the grace that dwelt so constantly on his lips.

At this stage of the meeting "The Homeland" was sung by a number of lads from the Orphanage; and then Dr. Pierson spoke with much fervour and force, this time as representing American Christians, in whose name he desired to lay a garland alongside of the grave. After a few words had been spoken by Rev. F. B. Meyer and prayer offered, the benediction was pronounced by Dr. MacEwan, of Clapham-road.

SERVICE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

Before the ministers' service had closed, great crowds were awaiting, outside the gates, the opening of the doors for the public service to begin which was designed to give the Christian public, outside the bounds of the Tabernacle, an opportunity of taking part in the general sorrow. This meeting, which began at 7 p.m., was presided over by Mr. Geo. Williams, who remarked in his opening address that Mr. Spurgeon's work extended beyond the walls of that Tabernacle to wherever the English tongue was spoken.

Speaking of the revered name of C. H. Spurgeon, Sir S. A. Blackwood said: "If the beloved brother whose remains lie there to-night could speak to us, I believe he would say, 'Speak not of me, but of my Saviour; or, if you must speak of me, speak of the great God who was magnified in me.' He, Mr. Spurgeon, ever loved to hide himself behind the Saviour whom he loved."

Perhaps the most touching incident of the evening was Mr. Sankey's tender tribute to the memory of the departed. Among other things he said: I think it a great privilege to gather here with these thousands to pay my little homage to one who has done so much for the truth. That voice is silenced for ever on earth, but who of us here to-night cannot recall its clarion tones as it moved us from time to time in this great temple? It has always been my custom in coming over here to come to the Tabernacle to have my torch lighted anew for the great work I have been engaged in for Jesus. Mr. Sankey fittingly closed his tribute by singing Miss Sarah Doudney's hymn, "The Christian's 'Good-night'":—

Sleep on, beloved, sleep, and take thy rest;
Lay down thy head upon thy Saviour's breast.
We love thee well, but Jesus loves thee best—
Good-night! good-night! good-night.

Addresses were subsequently given by the Rev. G. T. Palmer, the Vicar of Newington; Colonel Griffin, Pastor A. G. Barley, from Paris; and Mr. C. R. Hurditch. The last service of this memorable day commenced at 10.30 p.m., and was impressively conducted by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, the Tabernacle evangelists. Mr. Sankey sang with much pathos the hymn, "Only remembered by what I have done," all in the congregation in the meantime bowing their heads and engaging in silent prayer.

THE FUNERAL.

THURSDAY, FEB. 11, AT 11 A.M.

Seldom in history, we should think, has a service of such solemnity and unaffected sorrow taken place as that which constituted distinctively the funeral service of the late C. H. Spurgeon. Speaking for ourselves, the strain was almost more than one could bear. And what we felt was reflected on every hand. How, then, must they have felt who were of his own kith and kin—the brother in his solitariness, the son, his twin-brother (being far distant), and those who, though not present in body, must have had bleeding hearts all the time, present in spirit if not there in actual person. The whole character of this service was subdued and touching to the last degree. It was sorrow's gala day, and if the outside signs of mourning were inconspicuous, the heart within was all the more heavily draped. Mr. Harrald's prayer was grief overflowing; Mr. Arch. G. Brown's reading of Scripture was, as it were, grief in pause, stilled at the voice of God, but there all the same, though compressed by a power greater than nature. As the hymn arose it was grief that was praising—the grief of many tongues, yet of one heart. So in Dr. Pierson's magnificent address, it was grief that touched the harp of eloquence and swept the strings of loving eulogy. Ah me! it was a meeting never to be forgotten. God grant we may all meet again in that land where tears are wiped from every eye.

And if it was sorrow's gala day inside the Tabernacle, it was as if London had gone in mourning outside of it. All along the route to Norwood Cemetery the people were massed together—in some places from ten to fifteen deep—shops were closed, and even the public-houses had shutters up. The people had come out to see, and it was not sensation that drew them—for no pageant was this cortège—but the impulse of a sorrow and respect that must find vent.

On the way the Stockwell Orphanage was passed; and here, on a raised platform, stood the fatherless children, now twice bereaved, the very picture of grief. They had essayed, as the coffin drew up, to sing, but grief broke them down. They were weeping as we passed along.

At the graveside the service was brief, but exceedingly touching. In words that made strong men sob,

PASTOR A. G. BROWN,

apostrophising the mortal remains of him he had loved so well, said (the usual words of committal having been pronounced): Beloved President, faithful pastor, prince preachers, brother beloved — dear Spurgeo we bid thee, not farewell, but, only for little while, good-night! Thou shalt rise so at the first dawn of the Resurrection Day of t Redeemer. Yet is not the good-night ours to bi but thine. It is we who linger in the darknes thou art in God's own light. Our night, t shall soon be past, and with it all our wee ing. Hard worker in the field, thy toil ended. Straight has been the furrow thou ha ploughed. No looking back has marred thy cour harvests have followed from patient sowing, a heaven is already rich with ingathered sheave and shall be enriched through years lying eternity. Champion of God! Thy battle lo and nobly fought is over. The sword that cla to thy hand has dropped at last; a palm-bran takes its place. No longer does the helmet pre thy brow, oft weary with its surging thoughts battle. A victor's wreath from the Great Co mander's hand has already proved thy full r ward. Here for a while shall rest thy precio dust. Then shall thy Well-Beloved come, and his voice thou shalt spring from thy couch earth, fashioned like unto his body in glor Then spirit, soul, and body shall magnify t Lord's redemption. Until then, beloved, slee We praise God for thee, and, by the Blood of t Everlasting Covenant, hope and expect to prai God with thee

Prayer by Dr. Pierson followed these gra words, so heartfelt and simple, and the Bish of Rochester having pronounced the Benedictio the vast gathering slowly and sadly disperse If, as Dr. Pierson said on Wednesday afternoo "God never reproduces a man," and as anoth speaker observed, "There are no duplicates God's museum," we cannot hope to see on ear his like again.

THE MINISTERS' MEMORIAL SERVICE,

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

The Pastor's Silent Coffin of Olive Wood Standi in the Midst.

Thy sleep was tranquil, Brother, 'neath the palms,
The fronded palms arched o'er death's olive lid!
Though all the Churches vied 'mid sobs and psalms
To chant thy praises,—God his servant hid.

And all the while I saw thee, stand without,
With rapt gaze fixed upon the Master's face;
But when the angels caught the victor shout,
I watched the bursting tear-drops stream apace.

These straight the Master wiped Himself away,
And leaned thee on his breast in converse sweet;
And lo! our wintry earth seemed turned to May,
Unearthly fragrance rare filled house and street.

Thy home is henceforth 'mid the glorious stars,
Though fiery was the track that led thee there;
But, ah! for us still staggering in the wars,
Where is thy prophet's mantle, Brother—where?

"God's Spirit changeth not!" But, Brother, where,
Where is thy prophet's mantle for the strife,
Our clothes are rent—yea, rent in self despair?
"My prophet's mantle was the Word of Life,

Prayer-steeped, like Gideon's fleece spread out all night
Beneath the dews of Heaven, then boldly wrung
By faith with both her hands at morning light—
God's secrets learnt in darkness fire the tongue,

The Spirit's tongue, which, although steeped in dew,
Flames forth unquenched with pentecostal fire,
And, piercing guilty conscience through and through,
Heals while it wounds with love-notes from Heaven's lyr

Thus armed, seek Jordan's brink; cry, Where's the Lord
God of Elijah, nay, Emmanuel's God!
Then smite the depths as I did—seek no ford,
Through fire and flood Faith cleaves her conquering road.

Baptize us, Lord the Spirit, once again,
Wreath Spirit fire afresh round every head,
Baptize us with thy glorious latter rain,
Baptize, Oh, now baptize us for the dead!

THE LATE REV. BREWIN GRANT.—Since t death of Rev. Brewin Grant, the question has aris on all sides, "What will become of his library which is undoubtedly a unique one on Christian e dence. The Opium Humiliation.

A spirit of intense solemnity and fervour arked all nine meetings on the three great ays of public prayer last week, which gather- gs, with one exception, were held in Exeter Hall, ondon, and had reference to the righteous emand of the Anti-Opium Committee of Urgency r the immediate and total abolition of official inistrations to Asiatic debauchery. Monday's atherings had closed as we were going to press ith our last issue, in which they were duly ronicled.

Most manifestly were the sorrows of oppressed nd helpless heathen heavy upon the hearts of hose who continued to assemble morn, noon, and ight on the Tuesday and Wednesday, in by no eans despicable numbers, to plead before od strong reasons for the baring of his mighty rm against wickedness in high places.

"The sin of the English Government" was the rder of Tuesday's meetings. Mr. Robert cott presided in the morning, remarking that o topic of the Queen's speech could compare in nportance with that occupying the attention of is meeting, and, as he proceeded to read cripture, the thought was again forcibly borne upon one's mind how terribly condemnatory f modern iniquities are the inspired words of od's ancient prophets. Comparing the bugbear f loss in revenue—a matter of some three and -half millions—with the six to seven hundred illion souls in India and China, more or less ffected by the traffic, Mr. Scott estimated that ur gard half a sovereign as of more value than one undred of our fellow creatures. Later in the eeting, Mr. Scott also read a letter of expostula- ion and protest concerning legalised vice and pium poisoning in India, which, as chairman of he influential meeting held on January 12, he ad addressed to the Premier and other members f the Cabinet. A copy of that letter has also een sent to every member of Parliament.

Mr. Maurice Gregory announced that, as hon. ec. of the Urgency Committee, he had received any letters showing deep interest in the urpose of these meetings.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson thought that all temper- nce effort at home must fail to be fully owned of od while this great Indian wrong remains nredressed.

Mr. Hind Smith referred to the odious practice hich he had witnessed on the part of some ndian mothers, who press opium into their hildren's finger-nails, to procure a deadly sooth- ng, which must create a fatal appetite. At the lose of the meeting, and to a small company of en only, gathered in an ante-room, Mr. Hind mith repeated a startling confession made to im by an opium smoker, who follows in India an ccupation equivalent to that of the English abman, which statement threw a lurid light n the vicious basis of the opium fascination.

The prayers of the morning breathed the con- iction that it was not God's will to have Asia's y this traffic; and the spirit of these numerous nd burning supplications was against party pirit in relation to this question, and for Divine nlightenment and guidance to the Premier, the ndian Secretaries, and the newly-assembled arliament.

The afternoon saw the Hall full, and some raying ones looking down from the gallery. he solemnly-worded subject of "The Indian overnment in the Sight of God," was opened rom the Chair, by Mr. T. A. Denny. It is an wful thing, he said, for the Indian Executive o put God out of their sight, to say that they annot afford to do right, and to practically urder people by the million. Surely the niquity cannot last much longer, now that light as been let in upon it.

After succeeding petitions, lamenting that the pirit of lying had seized upon officials, and that he famine sign is seen in India, the meeting stened with the utmost attention and interest o a long address from Mrs. Grattan Guinness, ho contended that God does govern in the orld, proving this position by instancing the ivine retributions which have come not only on such as Jeroboam and Manasseh, but upon odern nations which, at the Reformation, re- ected the truth of God; hence the Indian Ad- inistration cannot expect to be an exception to rule which has prevailed the world over; and, common with an individual who robs and poisons his neighbour, the Indian Government stands.

A CONVICTED CRIMINAL

in the eyes of the whole world. Moreover, that Government recognises the principle of slavery, in practically holding that one race of mankind may be demoralised for the benefit of another. English legislative safeguards respecting poisons have no counterpart with respect to this governmental manufacture and monopoly in India, which is accompanied by deliberate falsification of statistics. While strongly condemning Indian administration as regards opium, Mrs. Guinness seemed disposed to extend much kindly and prayerful consideration to individual members of the executive, under the disadvantages of an "official conscience," the traditions and customs of a ready-made policy, and the possibility of personal loss through righteous action. Side by side with crying to God about the evil, there must be continued pressure upon human authority, the task of enlightening the people of England generally, and the tiresome work of getting signatures to petitions; and, in the direction of practically applying evangelical truth, it would be well to ask all the Gospel ministers of England to preach a sermon on the opium curse, on a given Sunday in March.

Mr. Denny thought India must either give up opium or give up missions. An open vanload of opium smokers, taken from the Tower to the Reformers' Tree, might be a useful object lesson.

The voice of entreaty once more rose to God against blended with requests for softened hearts and opened eyes in the men of this Parliamentary session, especially among those who are just entering upon official life. Prayer was also made for righteous discharge of electoral responsibility in the coming general election, and for the deliverance of Africa from the curse which is threatened by the opium importation just beginning.

Tuesday evening was devoted to prayer on behalf of

THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT,

Dr. J. L. Maxwell leading the meeting, and calling attention to the happily altered conditions which the past twelvemonths had brought about in the holy war against opium, a progress which should strengthen the attitude of confidence in God, and which would warrant faith's large expectations from Him. That meeting was held for confession of the awful crime which our fathers committed in resisting the endeavours of the Chinese authorities to withstand the wholesale introduction of opium into their land, and to pray that, realising its noble traditions in this conflict, the Government of China may yet obtain deliverance for its people. Desire for added power with the Gospel was a very strong motive for seeking these things at the hand of God.

Mr. A. S. Dyer's consuming earnestness found vent in a prayer which produced a powerful effect of sympathy in all who heard it. He called God to witness that a monstrous crime had been perpetrated, under circumstances of the greatest aggravation, by a nation which boasts of its favour with God. The Christian endeavour of a heathen nation had been met by England's brute force. God would not deal with governors in a corporate capacity, but one by one; and He would not always suffer the of a nation exalted by privilege. The heathen who had heard the Christian protest were looking to see whether our God is like unto their own gods. In a very agony, the suppliant cried, "O God, save Asia, even though this corrupt nation of ours be extinguished; break the curse, by thy mercy if possible, but, if not, break it in judgment."

Other prayers followed, and Dr. Maxwell, as secretary of the "Christian Union" against opium, read a letter from Sir Arthur Blackwood, regretting unavoidable absence and giving assurance of fellowship in prayer for speedy fulfilment of anticipated victory.

Mr. Maurice Gregory refuted the suspicion that the Chinese hope to starve out Indian opium from China by home cultivation, mentioning the fact that the Chinese consumption of the imported Indian kind, which acquires peculiar and inimitable strength by a secret process of manufacture, has increased by thirty per cent. within the last twenty years.

More prayer was made for strength to Chinese waverers, and for unity on the part of the Christian Church in condemning this sin, with never ceasing sense of the suffering which the iniquitous traffic entails on our poor suffering fellow creatures who come under its fascination.

The third day of prayer,

WEDNESDAY,

opened with some weighty words from the chairman at the morning session, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who cited the doom of ancient tyrant empires, and the national calamities which have followed the modern barbarities of Spain and Portugal, as object lessons whereby the people of the United Kingdom may realise that true prosperity can never accompany cruel wrong-doing. Our unrighteous wars with both America and China followed, in the first case, on the sinking of taxed tea off Boston; and, in the second case, on the patriotic sinking of poisonous opium off Canton; and our national rebuke in America's independence may also find a parallel with respect to China. The present question is certainly a Christian and a missionary one, but it touches the very existence of our nation. Prayer followed for repentance concerning Babylonish greed and cruelty.

It was announced that Mr. Cheok Hong Cheong was prevented from attendance through the imperative necessity for rest, in order to recover from the strain of continuous public speaking. Letters of warm sympathy with the objects of the meetings were read from Mr. Lakhman Rao, a converted Brahmin, and from several prominent ministers of the Gospel and others.

Some of the subsequent prayers asked that our legislators may be impressed with the need for and that newspaper editors may feel a solemn sense of responsibility in writing about the traffic.

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer delivered an impassioned protest against any attempt to minimise the blood-guiltiness of Indian officials, on the score of difficulty in relinquishing large salaries, when he had endured so much personal sacrifice in twenty years' labour on behalf of wronged and despised Asiatics, who are as dear to the heart of Christ as are Europeans, and quite as faithful to Him. Amid evident signs of strong approval, Mr. Dyer declared that the time has come for representatives in India of the corrupt and decayed Christianity of western civilisation, whose mouths are stopped concerning iniquity, through fear of losing Government grants and emoluments, to give place to fearless exponents of the primitive Christianity of the early Church. Mr. Mathieson strengthened the powerful indictment by reference to Sunday horse-racing in Calcutta and Lahore.

The sorrowful letters which come from missionaries in all parts of China concerning opium ravages and hindrances was testified unto by Mr. Benjamin Broomhall, Secretary of the China Inland Mission, in taking the chair for the meeting on Wednesday afternoon; and he brought the good news that agitation in England is carrying hopefulness into Chinese hearts. Then came two earnest prayers, calling God to witness that through this curse, and recognising his righteous action in overthrowing some modern confederacies which have been inimical to human interests.

Mrs. Maurice Gregory read about the bondage of the Israelites and God's deliverance for them, and repeated her stirring story, already reported in our pages, of the sights which she has seen in opium dens. It was encouraging to hear from other speakers, of expressions of sympathy received from all parts of our country, and of the circulation of twelve and a half tons of literature for the enlightenment of English Christians upon this dreadful subject. More prayers followed for those who have no human helper, mingled with confessions of shame and confusion of face, about souls and bodies wounded and left to die.

Mr. Broomhall recapitulated the plainly-formulated demands of the Urgency Committee, and was reminded by a friend on the platform that there was also much need of funds to support further aggressions upon ignorance and apathy.

Dr. Maxwell referred to the company of young men gathered that afternoon around the remains of Mr. Spurgeon, and prayed that the occasion might be one of blessing in raising an increased number of Gospel labourers.

Other petitions besought the power of the Holy Ghost upon the leaders of this holy war against the poppy, and an increased sense of individual responsibility about the evil among Christians generally.

MR. SPURGEON'S WORDS

were quoted, and fell with pathetic and powerful effect upon the meeting: "The revenues of India are fed by ministering to one of the most degrading vices into which men can fall." Throughout the afternoon, all who attended laboured under a deep sense of the heavy burden which had been assumed before God, on behalf of the British and Indian Executive.

In consequence of Exeter Hall being engaged for another purpose, the closing meeting on Wednesday evening was held in the Friends' Meeting House, St. Martin's-lane, under the intensely solemn direction of Mr. A. S. Dyer, who started with thankful recognition of what God had wrought in this righteous cause during the past two years, of the profound sense of humiliation which had characterised the present meetings, and of the God-inspired petitions which arouse confident expectation of a gracious and abundant answer. After several others had lifted up their voices in the spirit of

PRAISE FOR THE COMING VICTORY,

Mr. Dyer said that, disregarding conflicting opinions about his statement, he could say that two years ago, at a prayer-meeting in Shanghai, he received what he believed to be God's assurance that the death blow to the traffic will be given in the early months of this year. "That conviction," said he, "has been confirmed by all that has happened since, and it exists to-night!" After a detailed and God-glorifying review of the recent history of the agitation, Mr. Dyer acknowledged that the apathy of the Government in view of Christian opinion was unexpected, but said that when the victory comes, it will be seen to be due to God's interposition, and not to organisation.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., stated that he had received official confirmation of the report that the Indian Government intends to close its opium dens. Although he seemed to consider this a great point gained, his enthusiasm was not shared by the meeting nor by subsequent speakers, who demanded nothing short of the absolute prohibition of the traffic in any form.

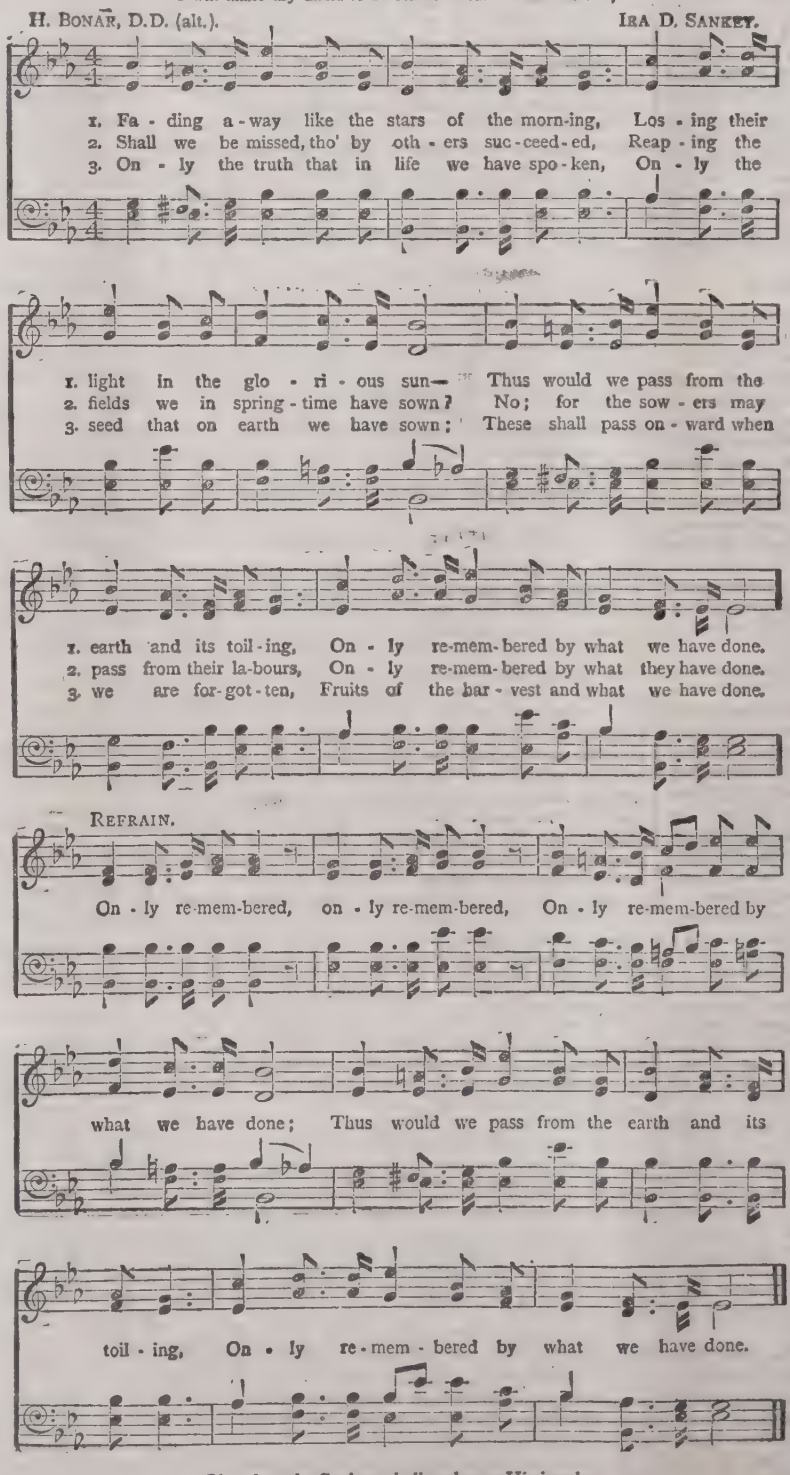
Miss Soonderbai Powar urged that unless opium growth be abolished, there may be a hundred dens in the homes of the people for a single public one. Christ does not teach us to stop sin gradually.

In a voice tremulous with emotion, Mr. George Gillett begged the meeting not to be deceived. Six years ago Lord Cross recommended the closing of opium dens, but they are open to-day. But for the wish to spare England, it were possible to make the whole traffic stink in his nostrils, and, if needful, the evil must yet be lifted.

Mr. Dyer was thankful for Mr. Smith's position in "the House," but God may show our country which is the more expensive way, if we dare to trifle with iniquity. Mr. Dyer closed with a comprehensive prayer, asking for a continued sense of personal responsibility in the minds of God's people as instruments of righteousness; that they may abide in fellowship with Christ in his sufferings on behalf of oppressed humanity; and for preparation in view of the tremendous evangelising possibilities which shall follow the coming victory.

THEATRE SERVICES, CAMBRIDGE.

Some thirteen years ago, the Barnwell Theatre, in a dark and low part of Cambridge, was secured for Gospel work, the lease being purchased by the aid of the late Hon. Ion Keith Falconer, Mr. F. N. Charrington, Rev. W. R. Mowll, and other friends. Since then, a splendid work has been done amongst the people, and many have been led to the feet of Christ. Situated as it is, on the main road between Cambridge and Newmarket, the hall attracts many passers-by. In early days the services were conducted by various gentlemen from the University and town, as well as others from a distance. Of late years very considerable help has been received from the Evangelisation Society, which has supplied preachers the greater part of the year. The ordinary branches of mission work such as Temperance, Band of Hope, weekly Bible-classes, working men's band, are in full operation; and it is good to see the bright faces of some of the men, rough in the exterior, yet rejoicing in the knowledge of the forgiveness of sins.



Since the death of her husband, the Hon. Mrs. Keith Falconer has rendered valuable financial assistance, making herself responsible for support of a missionary, Mr. G. F. Barnes, who, during the last three years, has diligently visited in the homes of the people, has conducted the minor meetings, and by earnest personal dealing has been the means of blessing to many. Owing to the multiplication of other agencies, such as the Salvation Army, Church Army, and various mission-halls, the attendances have not lately been so large as formerly; but since, in the aggregate, a larger number of persons are reached, the workers are content to rejoice therein. With the increase of other agencies, Cambridge friends who support mission work are unable to give as much as formerly to the Theatre Mission, while, at the same time, the decreased attendance involves decreased collections. The help, therefore, of outside sympathisers would be greatly welcomed, and would lessen the burden of the hon. supt., Mr. W. K. Vawser, who, since the commencement of the work, has laboured indefatigably to make it a success.

The Sunday afternoon and evening Gospel services have, during the past four months, been well attended; while the Tuesday evening meeting, the Wednesday and Thursday evening Bible-classes, and the Gospel Temperance meeting on Friday evening, have shown tokens of real interest and blessing, of which many illustrative incidents can be given. Communications should be addressed to Mr. W. K. Vawser, The Cury, Cambridge.

Only Remembered.

"I will make thy name to be remembered."—Psalm xlv. 17.

4. Oh, when the Saviour shall make up His jewels,
When the bright crowns of rejoicing are won,
Then shall His weary and faithful disciples
All be remembered by what they have done.

This is the hymn which was sung by Mr. Sankey, at the last of the services in memory of Mr. Spurgeon, in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Wednesday last week.

PROPOSED ENGLISH "OCEAN GROVE."

Rev. W. B. and Mrs. Osborn, of America, are in this country for rest and Christian work. Mr. Osborn has been engaged for many years in evangelistic and camp-meeting work. We met him twenty years ago at the third National Camp Meeting at Round Lake, N.Y., conducted by the late Rev. J. Inskip. Mr. Osborn is hoping to inaugurate in this country a seaside summer resort after the manner of America's "Ocean Grove." In Australia such a resort has resulted from his visit there some years ago.

Mrs. Osborn, formerly Miss Lucy Drake, went from Dr. Cullis's institution in Boston, as a missionary to India, but failing health obliged her to return. She founded, seven years ago, the Missionary Training Institute in Brooklyn, and is still its principal. Already twenty-five of its students have gone into the foreign field. She is open to give missionary addresses in England. Communications for Mr. and Mrs. Osborn may be addressed to our care.

"ANGELS UNAWARES";

OR, THE BOYCES' NEW YEAR'S EVE.

It was a glorious evening, the birds were still singing, and the flowers were sending forth their evening fragrance as John Boyce pushed open the gate at the end of his fine garden, and introduced himself for the last time in the year 1887 to his family.

"I expect it's cutting fine capers just now in the old country," he said, as he put on a linen house-coat for coolness, and went out to the door with the youngest in his arms. "Fancy these roses on New Year's Day in England. Ha! ha!" he laughed, as he set down the child, plucked a red rose, and, turning back, put it in the brooch at his wife's throat. "Which do you like better, Moll," he asked, "a warm, sunny Christmas-time, spent a few miles out from Sydney, or a cold one in Camden-town?"

"Pooh," answered the wife, "they're all the same to me, so long as you're there, John; and you know that, too."

John's eyes twinkled; he was quite satisfied with the verdict.

"I declare, you're as bad as ever, Moll," he rejoined; "I must confess I should like to see a familiar face from old England just at this time, without any disrespect to you, dear."

"The thing I miss most," answered his wife, "is the watch-night service I used to go to with dear mother. She was good, was mother, John. I often wish as you'd known her," and a wistful expression stole over Mary Boyce's face.

"So do I, if she was anything like you, Mary, as I've been told she was. But wasn't she religious?"

"She was good, John. Leastways she read the Bible, and I know she used to practise what she read. She was always trying to get me to read it; more's the pity I didn't."

"So, after all, you're not quite content with only me," said John, a little huffily, Mary thought. "You suit me better with*out* the religion, and that should satisfy you, I think."

John Boyce strode out into his garden. He was feeling just a little put out that Mary should have any sort of desire, however limited, outside himself. Man-like, he did not know of the fathomless depths in a woman's heart, which can be reached and soothed alone by the infinite love and the infinite pity of the heart of God the Father.

Some such thoughts as these were passing through the mind of Mary Boyce as she put her three little ones to bed. She longed just then for a power to rest her such as she knew had stayed her mother in times of need, a power higher and greater than any she had yet known, beyond the love of husband, or the awakening touch of helpless childhood. She felt that she needed God.

Presently she heard John talking, and looking through the bedroom lattice she saw he was heartily shaking the hand of a stranger, who looked dusty and weary with much walking. He was holding by the hand a flaxen-haired child, who limped with the pain of blistered feet. All the mother in her came out then, her own needs were forgotten, and quick as thought Mary Boyce was presently in the garden, leading the child into her cool room.

"We will not say a word," said she, "till we have bathed these poor little tootsies, and had some bread-and-milk ready for the parched little throat. Poor baby!"

"Tired, but not a baby," demurred the child; "I'm nearly eight, and have come all the way from England with father. Father and I have no mother now, so we have to be brothers. I take care of father, father takes care of me, and God takes care of us both. But I'm sleepy now."

After the bread-and-milk, the child fell asleep; and the weary traveller, much refreshed, told his tale. He had come out to settle in the New World, when he had found his late wife's brother. He thought he should like to settle near relatives, though he had never seen the man, and if his kind friends would give him and his child accommodation for the night—well, he would push on in the morning. He had but a few miles to go now, and he should always remember their kindness, and give them a place in his prayers.

John coughed at this, and was less talkative than before, but Mary's heart warmed to the stranger, and she put her best linen on the bed that was soon got ready for the travellers.

John and Mary sat up talking long after the strangers had retired for the night. Through the thin wooden partition that divided the rooms they could hear the heavy breathing of father and child. Still they talked on. Then John said: "It's nearly time for your watch-night service, Mary, isn't it? We may as well keep watch-night together now, for it is half-past eleven. We've not been so late for years."

"Thank you, John," said Mary, "there'll be no service; but it'll be nice seeing the new year in together, won't it?"

Hand in hand, they became silent. There was something so solemn in thus waiting for the death of the old and the birth of the new, that, gazing into each other's eyes, each saw the other in tears. They could not speak, but a thrill passed through them when they heard a voice reading: "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live," right through from John xi. 25 to 44. They did not know where the words were, but they knew them to be Scripture.

Then th 'child's voice asked, "Now, daddy, read me the Shepherd chapter." The father read John x. Still John and Mary sat hand in hand listening—it was, indeed, their watch-night service, and both were strangely moved. "The kind people won't hear us, will they, daddy?" the child asked.

"No, they are asleep hours ago; people retire early here. Why do you ask, my child?" said the father.

"Because, father, we must not forget them. They forgot Jesus when we sat down to supper; nobody said grace. I'm sorry they forgot Him, so we must pray for them."

Then John and Mary heard such words as they had never listened to before, words that drew Mary to her knees, while she hid her face in John's arm. Presently a tear fell upon her neck, but she never moved, she knew John, her husband, was crying, and that he was crying because he had forgotten God. She, somehow, also knew that neither would forget Him again, and that though no word was spoken between them on the subject, each was ashamed and broken-hearted because of neglect and sin.

The kitchen clock began to strike the midnight hour, then the chime of the town church rang out clear upon the still air—1888 was born—it was the New Year. As the last stroke died away, John and Mary rose and faced each other, while in the next room two hushed voices began to sing the Doxology. Without a moment's hesitation the Boyce's accompanied the strain—but before it was ended the stranger and his child had joined them, and it became a thanksgiving service. The summer morning dawned before Mary, John, and the stranger, had exhausted all they had to say of the goodness of God that leads to repentance, to pardon, and to peace. Mary, with glad tears in her eyes, said, "We have entertained angels unawares, but now that we know it, we cannot let you go so soon."

Praise God from whom all blessings flow,

"No need for going yet awhile," said the stranger; "my wife's portrait, as I first knew her, hangs in the next room. You are John and Mary Boyce, and I have no need to travel further. 'This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.'"

It was true. John had not long left the township to which the stranger was going the night before, and so he did not know of his removal. But, as all were ready to believe, it was God's providence over all that had thus brought them together. John found the friend he wanted to see from the old country; Mary had her watch-night service, but better than and beyond all, both had been found of Christ. It could never be anything for them now but a happy and blessed New Year.

STREET-ARABS' GRATITUDE.

A cablegram from Toronto has just brought us the gratifying news that an "Old Boys' New Year's Gift" for this year amounts to £272—an increase of £68 upon last year—all cheerfully contributed out of their hard-earned savings. It is not only an indisputable proof of their prosperity, but a touching token of their grateful affection for their old home and of their self-denying sympathy for those left behind in London slums still needing a helping hand in life.

"Rescued to rescue" has been a principle we have sought to instil into the hearts of each outgoing party, and the teaching is bearing cheering fruit indeed. Several of our "old boys" have come over the sea this Christmas to visit their friends in the Old Country, but all of them have taken our advice, and, before starting, remitted to us enough for their passage and expenses back again. It is noticeable, too, that they do not return, as they went out, in the steerage, but as intermediate passengers.

Some of our "old boys" are now ministers of the Gospel in Canada; many of them earnest Christian workers as local preachers, Sunday-school teachers, &c., in sparsely settled districts, where their help is much valued. Their steadfastness and growing usefulness are a great encouragement to us here. One we saw out there last spring, rescued from the low music-hall stage, is now toiling at lumber work (filling timber, &c.), for three or four months, living on the plainest food, that he may be able with his savings to carry the Gospel for two months or so without money and without price to out-of-the-way settlements; then returning to his heavy labour till he has saved enough to go forth again in soul-winning work.

In the whole range of present-day Christian activity I really do not know a better investment for a £10 note than the taking of a boy (or girl) right away from London streets, struggles, and snares to a simple, healthy, natural life on a Canadian homestead, with sound, moral, and spiritual influences. What a debt we all owe, under God, to Miss Rye and Miss Macpherson, whose womanly intuitiveness first discovered this unequalled opening in life for our teeming juvenile home heathen.

We are commencing preparations for our next party. Our friends in Canada ask for an earlier party this year than usual, and a larger party, or a second one, somewhat later; but I have been very ill for some weeks, and am making only a tedious recovery, so that I am comparatively useless, yet God's strength is made perfect in weakness. The issue is in his hands. I can only say, "Wait thou upon God, O my soul, for my expectation is from Him."

Y.W.C.A. HOME OF REST.—Miss L. Harris, Cotswold, Clevedon, Somerset, writes: "For some time we have longed to open a small seaside Home of Rest in connection with the Y.W.C.A. at this lovely health-giving place. Now we feel that, as we have the furniture and the offer of a most suitable lady superintendent, the time has come to start the little Home. To open free of debt £50 is required. We feel sure that in the near future the Home will be entirely self-supporting."

MR. McAULIFFE'S WAYSIDE WORK.

The Wayside Mission, carried on by Mr. John McAuliffe, is increasingly interesting to those who know its sphere, methods, and results. In a "Pen-and-Ink Talk," just published, Mr. McAuliffe gives a brief retrospect of thirty years of his career and details of work during 1891. The story is well worth reading, and we recommend our friends to procure copies from the Mission House, John-street, Tunbridge Wells.

The record of last year's effort includes the following with reference to a Mission at Glasgow:—"Never on earth can I forget a midnight meeting of fallen women held during this Mission. Our friends at the hall came together for prayer at 10.30, and an hour later went forth into the streets, and in a brief space of time gathered together 150 young fallen sisters from sixteen to thirty years of age. A warm, midnight meal was given to them. I was permitted to speak of Jesus, the sinner's friend, and God's Holy Spirit owned the word. Among that company of Satan-bound sisters was found the daughter of an old and faithful servant of the gentleman who was paying the expenses of this work. The father died; and in the drift of this human life of ours she went down; but it was the privilege of this servant of Christ to rescue at midnight from the winter streets of Glasgow this daughter of an old servant, whose life on earth had closed for years, and to give her back again, we trust, to womanhood and better things.

"From Glasgow I returned home to give myself up for a few weeks to lectures on the Reformation and the principles of Protestantism. We need now not only to preach the Gospel, but to lift a warning voice against this plague of ritual and teaching of the doctrines of Rome, which is to be found not only in our cities and towns, but in our obscure and hidden villages. Undoubtedly, infidelity and Romanism are largely on the increase, to say nothing of the jelly-fish school of religion, with no distinct tenets or doctrines, and sermons as smooth as billiard balls, without either edge, point, or corner."

Mr. McAuliffe further writes:—"At Kenilworth, in happy fellowship with its Vicar, blessed work was done, hundreds of Bibles and Testaments and thousands of books and cards were circulated. The people would stop the carriage in the streets, and say:—'Preach here.' I could weep for joy as I write these pages in the quietude of a sick-room, as I recall men and women who were blest by the Spirit of God during the summer time of this year also."

Speaking of Wayside Words, his pretty and useful little monthly tract, he says:—"Upwards of one hundred and thirty thousand copies have been printed and circulated during this year in many parts of our land, and in regions beyond. Many people send for parcels, whom I know nothing about, save that they do send in his name, and as far as I can I gladly send back for his sake. In our home work God is with us in deed and in truth. Our mission-hall is all too small for us, and we hope soon to enlarge it further."

STREET LICENTIOUSNESS IN PARIS.—A league of fathers of families, called "Central Society against Street Licentiousness," has been formed, independent of all religious opinions, to "raise a clamour" against the abominations of literature high and low, and is following out its plan. The future looms fearfully when the instruction in schools, so liberally meted out to children, is still more extensively met by filthy dreamers' incubrations pouring from the press, and forced freely upon the notice of all who have not the sense and firmness to turn their eyes and hands away from the distributors and bill-stickers.—Evangelical Christendom.

REV. DONALD FRASER, D.D.

With profound regret have thousands received the tidings of the death, late on Friday evening, of Dr. Fraser, the beloved and honoured minister of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, who for over twenty years has been regarded as one of the leaders of the Presbyterians in London.

On Sunday morning, long before the beginning of the service, Marylebone Presbyterian Church was crowded in every part, the announcement in Saturday morning's paper that Dr. Donald Fraser would occupy the pulpit the following forenoon, and the report of his sudden death in the evening journals, being, no doubt, instrumental in attracting such an immense attendance. Before the service began, Mr. Cecil Robertson, one of the deacons, who was accompanied by other prominent members of the congregation, broke the intelligence of their minister's sudden and unexpected death. Dr. Fraser, it was stated, died on Friday night at ten o'clock, of pneumonia, after an illness of only four days' duration. On the previous Sunday he occupied the pulpit as usual, and no later than Monday took the chair at the annual business meeting of the congregation. Dr. Fraser had been for twenty-three years the minister of that church. His fame was in all the churches, and everywhere he was honoured and revered; but they who knew him intimately and had constant intercourse with him regarded him with deep, warm, ardent affection. The funeral would take place at Inverness on Saturday next; the mortal remains of their beloved minister would be brought to that church on Thursday, when a memorial service would be held. An appropriate service then followed, with a short address from a Canadian minister, Rev. Mr. Hamilton, who was a personal friend of Dr. Fraser's nearly forty years ago in Montreal. In the evening Rev. Dr. Matthews, secretary of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, preached to a numerous congregation.

Dr. Fraser, who has twice been Moderator of the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England, was but recently elected to represent the London congregations at the Great Synod of Presbyterians to be held in Toronto during the present year.

We gave in July, 1888, a biographical sketch and portrait of Dr. Fraser, hence we need not now review his career. It is sufficient to note that in his death the Christian Church has suffered yet another serious loss. All will pray that God will be pleased to raise up men of grace and gifts to supply the place of those trusted leaders who have been called to their eternal rest.

MR. A. G. BROWN'S SERMON TO MEN.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown preached his twenty-sixth anniversary sermon "to men only" at the East London Tabernacle on Sunday evening. It is estimated that about 3500 persons were present. The assemblage presented an imposing sight; and the eloquent and impressive discourse was listened to with profound attention. Words which went home to the heart and drew forth many audible responses.

Just before the sermon the Pastor addressed a few personal words to his hearers, saying that since he first addressed the men's meeting, twenty-six years ago, many changes had taken place, but God was the same, and his presence was still manifest in their midst. The text was Luke v. 12, 13, especially the words, "Lord, if Thou wilt Thou canst make me clean...I will, be thou clean." The preacher remarked that "If Thou wilt" is man's language; "I will" is Christ's. The Master knocked the "If" out. So the subject of Mr. Brown's sermon was, "No 'if' about it." How much hangs on this little word, "If." Yet there is no pleasurable association connected with it. It is a word allied with doubt, disquiet, and distrust. No hope is to be found in it. "If" is the misery of many a life. It takes a wonderfully strong character to stand an "If." It is like the poison of a doubt injected into the mind. It is a most uncomfortable word. What was the condition of a leper? Physically, he was a mass of corruption—corruption eating even into his bones. Socially, he was, to use a vulgar term, boycotted—living separate outside the city gates. Religiously, a leper was to the Jew unclean. This man was full of leprosy. He could not be more full. He was not indifferent to his condition. It troubled him very much. Yet those who have the leprosy of sin do not seem to trouble themselves much because they are sinners. The man's leprosy did not carry him into the recklessness of despair. What wonderful faith he had! His "If" was not only excusable, but commendatory. He could not claim healing from Christ. Then what could he do but say "If"?

Christ can revolutionise a life. He will; three things prove it: 1st, Christ's appearance—He was moved by compassion, see Mark's account; 2nd, Christ's action—He stretched forth his hand and touched him; 3rd, the result. Immediately the leprosy left the man. The cure was as deep as it was sudden. Christ pronounced him clean. He went to the roots of his being. So with salvation. The Master's "will" has more than met the man's "If." Then he was told to go to the priest, i.e., the sanitary officer, and get a certificate of his cleanness. "Show thyself." When Jesus saves a man He makes him so that he will bear any inspection. If your life as a Christian will not bear inspection, Christ has not had much to do with you. If you were as anxious to be saved as God is to save you, your salvation would be a fact now. The power of the Holy Spirit was very manifest, and many hearers remained to a prayer-meeting.

THE LATE CANON BROOKE,

FORMERLY RECTOR OF MARALIN, CO. DOWN, IRELAND.

CANON BROOKE, who was taken to his rest a few weeks ago at Rostrevor, in the North of Ireland, in his ninety-third year, has left behind him a name and memory much honoured and beloved by all who knew him, especially by his former parishioners in the two large parishes of Drumgooland and Maralin, both in the county Down, of which he was successively rector during a period not far short of half-a-century.

Edward Perry Brooke was born in January, 1799. He was the second son of an eminent physician in Dublin. His elder brother—the late Right Hon. William Brooke—was well-known in Ireland, especially in connection with the Prayer Book Revision Movement of the Irish Church, and his younger brother—the late Rev. Dr. Brooke, Rector of Wyton, Huntingdon—had for many years of his life been known as the able and eloquent Chaplain of the Mariners' Church, Kingstown. Edward Brooke began life in the Army as an ensign in the 62nd Regiment, and rose to be a captain before that great change took place in his life which made him, through grace, so earnest a Christian and so faithful a minister of the Gospel of Christ. So far as his conversion can be traced to any human instrumentality, it would seem to have been due, under God, to the unceasing efforts of his elder brother, who had himself been converted to God through reading Wilberforce's "Practical View of Christianity," a book much blessed in that generation. Captain Brooke had lived a very worldly life in the Army, and, much as he loved his brother, he was not easily won; but grace at last triumphed, and having found peace through the Blood of the Cross, he determined henceforth to be a witness to others of that Saviour whom he had found to be a Saviour to himself.

It was not so easy in those days as it is now for a Christian to work for God in the Army. He, therefore, determined to give himself to the ministry of the Gospel, and, with considerable resolution for one who had for so many years been living a life of pleasure, he went through the University of Dublin, as well as the Divinity-school attached to it, and was ordained in what was then the United Church of England and Ireland in the year 1834, being then in his thirty-fifth year. His first curacy was in the Isle of Man under the late Archdeacon Philpot, with whom he maintained an uninterrupted friendship till the death of that truly venerable servant of God, which occurred not long ago. Mr. Brooke used often to tell a story of a humiliating experience which happened to him at that time. He had a tendency to stammer, which was much increased by any circumstances which made him feel nervous. In one of his early sermons a fit of stammering came on, which he was unable to overcome, and, to his intense humiliation, he had to give up the effort, and come down from the pulpit. He afterwards heard that a lady in the congregation who was suffering from religious melancholy, arising from a fear that God had forsaken her, was restored to joy and peace in believing through this incident, for she argued, "If God could forsake his servant on such an occasion, I need not suppose that my being forsaken proves me not to be a child of God." Thus did the Lord, through the stammering lips of one of his servants, speak peace to the soul of another, and the humiliation of the one became the deliverance of the other.

He afterwards returned to Dublin, and took a curacy in Swift's-alley, one of the poorest districts of that city. Here he learned something of what hard work amongst the poor meant. He married about this time Miss Lucy Saurin, a daughter of the last sole Bishop of Dromore, and a descendant of the celebrated French preacher at The Hague. She died some years before her husband, but her name is still beloved in his former parishes, where she worked with him as a true helpmate. Shortly after their marriage Mr. Brooke was appointed to the large and populous parish of Drumgooland, part of which lay in a wild mountain district of the county Down, chiefly inhabited by Roman Catholics, while the other part contained a large and sturdy Protestant population, partly Presbyterian, partly Established Church. Between these two opposing elements of Protestants and Romanists, the feuds were frequent, and the rector's influence was often of use in the preservation of the peace, especially at the well-known fight at Dollysbrae, which was in the parish. Thither he rode off at once on hearing of the attack made by the Romanists on the Orangemen, who were returning from Lord Roden's park, and though his own people besought him not to risk his life by exposing himself, he exerted himself so in the cause of peace that the officer commanding the troops told him afterwards that his presence had done more than anything else to restrain the excitement of both parties, and bring about a cessation of the fighting.

Though known to be a strong Protestant, he was greatly respected and trusted by the Romanists, many of whom would come to his house for advice as to their family affairs, and would entrust him with their money matters rather than go to their own priest. On such occasions he never failed to speak a word for his Master, and Roman Catholics would occasionally be seen even at his family prayers, to which he invited all who happened to be in or about the house at the time.

(From a photograph by Messrs. Chancellor and Son, 55, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin.)

He valued very highly the work in his parish of an admirable Scripture reader, supplied to him by the Society of which Captain Kearney White is now the efficient secretary. He often spoke of his services as more valuable to him than those of a curate, and, partly on this account, and partly from being one of the oldest members of the Committee, and so knowing its work well, the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland had a very foremost place in his esteem. His elder brother had been one of the original founders of the Society.

In the year 1859 came that remarkable visitation of grace commonly called the Irish Revival. It broke out in Drumgooland—for the language usually applied to an epidemic was often used in describing it—as it did in other parts of the North of Ireland, in places where no human effort was made to produce it. On the mountain side, in the lonely road, by the fireside of the cottage, strong men, as well as women and children, would suddenly be prostrated under a deep conviction of sin, and nothing seemed to restore them but the message of salvation, which, when received, produced in a very real and visible form, "joy and peace in believing." Mr. Brooke was at first somewhat suspicious of the movement, fearing that it might be mere physical excitement, but when sent for at all hours to go to all parts of the parish, to visit those who had been "stricken down," as the saying was, he soon learned to regard it as a mighty work of the Spirit of God, preparing souls for the message of life, which it was his high privilege to minister. Many at that time received the message of salvation from his lips, and gave satisfactory evidence, through changed life and ways, of the reality of their conversion. He, however, always thought less of those cases where excitement of any kind had been an element in producing effects. Late meetings, in crowded rooms, under excitin; preaching, seemed to him to produce man's imitation rather than God's work; and, in many cases, there soon followed undeniable proofs that hysterical excitement is not spiritual awakening.

In the year 1863 Mr. Brooke was promoted to the more valuable living of Maralin, near Lurgan, which he held for about twenty years. In his days the sturdy Protestantism of the parishioners received no such rebuff as, not long ago, caused the church to become a scene of unseemly conflict between the rector and his people. Mr. Brooke attached far more importance to preaching faithfully the Gospel of the grace of God than to adorning the building in which they met for worship. He had no desire to offend the strong Protestant susceptibilities of a North of Ireland congregation. His untiring labours amongst the people, visiting from house to house, and holding cottage lectures, soon gained him the loving attachment of an affectionate people, and to this day the name of the former rector is as much beloved in Maralin as it is in Drumgooland. He was ably seconded in his house-to-house visitation by his excellent wife, whose labours, especially amongst the young women and the aged poor, will long be remembered in the parish.

His preaching was very effective. With considerable natural eloquence and fervour, he used to set forth the subject so dear to his heart—full and free salvation through the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ. The writer can never forget a sermon he once heard him preach on the first verse of Psalm ci., "I will sing of mercy and judgment," in which he showed that the theme of the believer must ever be mercy to the sinner combined with judgment to the surety who took the sinner's place and died in the sinner's stead. His teaching was very much on the lines of that of the late Rev. Francis Goode, of Clapham, brother to the late Dean Goode, whose sermons, as well as his "Better Covenant," he always referred to as, in his judgment, unequalled as expositions of true Gospel teaching. He saw and preached faithfully the pre-millennial advent of the Lord Jesus.

A few sentences from a funeral sermon preached in his old pulpit at Drumgooland by Rev. William Moore, the present rector of the parish, will best conclude this slight sketch of his ministry.

"You all know better than I can tell you how much he was beloved by rich and poor, and respected by all creeds and classes. How anxious he was for the welfare of the souls committed to his care; if he missed any worshippers on Sunday, on Monday he was off to discover the cause of absence. Some here can recall his self-denying efforts in this parish during the great famine years. When fever raged he fearlessly entered homes from which others fled; in his Master's service he knew no fear, and the only illness he almost ever had was brought on by his unselfish work for the good of others. Noble in physique, he was nobler in character; in his day he was like Saul, or one of Homer's heroes, head and shoulders above his fellows. He was a staunch supporter of Scriptural education, and gave largely in his lifetime to this and all other societies connected [with our church for the spread of God's Holy Word and teachings. Some here, I am sure, remember the last beautiful and solemn service held in this church, which he loved so well—aye, and continued to love until the close of his life. At that farewell service his dear and honoured friend—that true Christian nobleman—the old Earl of Roden, was present. Although it is almost a generation since he ceased to minister here, his name and memory are affectionately cherished. During his pastorate in this place his earnest and powerful expositions of Divine truth attracted large and interested congregations. The small parish church had to be enlarged to its present proportions to accommodate the numbers who crowded to listen to his faithful preaching of the Gospel of Christ. Like St. Paul, he preached not himself, but Christ Jesus the Lord. The Word of God was his spiritual meat and drink. He took his stand upon the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture, accepting it, with unfeigned faith, as the inspired and infallible rule of faith and the Divine charter of man's salvation. The faithful pastor, the aged saint, has reached home at last. He has entered into the joy of his Lord."

THE NUN OF KENMARE.

Miss Cusack has been engaged, since her return to England as a lecturer—and with marked success, among those who wish to be informed as to what Rome does and what Rome teaches. She "speaks the truth in love," studiously avoiding anything like rancorous controversy.

Her experience as the Mother-General of a religious order in the Romish Church, has placed her in a position to know the inmost feelings, hopes and fears of the sisters, and to be a safe guide in efforts to liberate those who wish to be free, but who scarcely dare to entertain such a wish, even in their most secret thoughts. In view of the domination which Rome is at present obtaining, socially as well as politically, every Christian should know why she claims a dominion which no other church asks, and what she proposes to do when she has obtained the power which she makes no secret of claiming, as a Divine right.

Miss Cusack has been lecturing for Lady Ashburton at her Dock Missions. Her ladyship, who introduced her on each occasion, indicated the very high position which the lecturer held for so many years in the Roman Catholic Church, where, being a Mother-General, or head of a religious order, she was practically a sort of archbishop. Pope Pius IX. sent her an apostolic brief, in which he said she had "surpassed the ordinary powers of women in her literary and other work;" and the present Pope had granted her a private audience when she visited Rome, and bestowed on her the authority to found a new religious order—a favour only granted to those who are held in the highest esteem.

Miss Cusack's health—always delicate—does not permit her to give many lectures, so that those who may wish to avail themselves of her services need to make application well in advance. In leaving the convent she sacrificed all her fortune, and is at present dependent on the very precarious charity of Christian people. Miss Cusack's great desire now is to give the rest of her life to work for her Irish fellow-countrymen, to whom, Protestants as well as Catholics, she rendered liberal succour in the famine of 1879-80. We understand that some friends are endeavouring to found a small annuity, which would enable her to pursue her work on independent lines.

Miss Cusack has an important course of lectures. One is on "Convent Life"; one on the "Political Power of the Pope," which gives information of the greatest moment at the present time. Miss Cusack does not make statements at random. She has been able to procure an immense fund of information while in America, which is of the deepest interest and importance for us. Another is on "Roman Catholic Education," and treats of facts in connection with Roman Catholic Schools and Universities. On this subject Miss Cusack speaks from personal experience. A fourth is on "The Jesuits," and in this the history of this most extraordinary order of men is given, and much information from inside sources as to their methods of working. A fifth is called "What Rome teaches"; and we know of scarcely any subject which is more important for the young. Forewarned is forearmed, above all when the warnings are given in the shape of facts, taken from approved Roman Catholic sources.

THE Y.M.C.A. AND THE CHURCHES.

A conference on this important subject was held on the 7th inst. at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Two speakers were invited to speak from the Church's point of view. Rev. J. H. Jowett, Congregational minister, desired wider openings for ministers in Association work; that the responsibility resting upon each of the Association members to his own particular church should be more earnestly pressed upon his attention. He also felt that young men should have the privilege of urging the claims of the Association from the pulpit, on one Sunday in the year at least, in the several churches in the town. The attitude of the Newcastle ministers to the Association was, he said, distinctly friendly, a statement heartily endorsed by subsequent speakers. Mr. McLean, an evangelist in connection with the Presbyterian Church, thought the churches ought to cater for the recreation of their young people. If they would undertake this there would be no need for the Y.M.C.A. He would rejoice if, by the churches rising to their duty, the downfall of the Association were effected.

Mr. Robert Burn (London) replied that the Y.M.C.A. sought to be the instrument of the united churches in the town, in reaching the young men with the Gospel, and in providing them with social comfort and recreation. No one church could do the work thoroughly, and young men in general would be hindered from availing themselves of the advantages it could offer, on account of its denominationalism. There were great advantages resulting to churches that co-operated with the Association: (1) by means of their young men members newly-converted young men were drawn into Church fellowship; (2) their members received training in the Association in active, aggressive Christian work. The minister's interest should be maintained by his being supplied with information up to date. He, on his part, should encourage his people to support the Association financially, not fearing any diminution of local supplies, remembering that the more people learn to give the more they enjoy giving. The following was a good plan, which had worked excellently in Hackney:—The clergy and ministers gladly gave the Association a sermon and a collection yearly, in some cases quarterly. It was made mutually advantageous by the following methed: The Association printed and circulated the announcements; they worked up the audience; the church then became known to many who had never entered it before. From the total collection the average amount was taken by the church, the balance (sometimes amounting to £20) went to the Association. It was felt that this plan might be widely adopted.

The alienation of ministers and churches from the Association was sometimes caused by—(1) the object and methods of the Y.M.C.A. being unknown to, or misunderstood by, the ministers, and no earnest effort having been made to remove them; and (2) by the Association departing from its proper work, of seeking young men, by engaging in work for young women also. This incongruity was made conspicuous by a suggestion that the Young Women's Christian Association should hold meetings for young men! No effort was too great to secure the sympathies and co-operation of the ministers. It was reported by some of the delegates present that in some towns the ministers manifested opposition. It was felt that these cases called for a visit from an experienced Association officer—one able to meet and remove the objections entertained, or, where necessary, to remove from the Association programme the objectionable items. It was said that some young men attached to the Y.M.C.A. did not seek Church communion. This was strongly condemned. It was recognised by all that each member should be urged at once to unite himself with a church. On the other hand, it was contended that, as a rule, the best Y.M.C.A. workers were the best Church workers also.

A minister present rejoiced in the freedom and unconventionality he experienced when speaking on a Y.M.C.A. platform, when compared with the stiffness and formality of the pulpit and gown. He greatly desired to promote hearty young men's meetings in connection with all the churches. In Newcastle-on-Tyne it was apparent that the churches and the Association were working for one end, and that there is perfect friendliness and co-operation.

The Revival in Scotland.

Last week began with a visit by Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Hamilton and Bothwell, the great centre of the iron and steel industries in Scotland. Here, as in many such districts, religious indifference largely prevails, and hence the general interest awakened by the great meetings of Sunday and Monday is regarded by many as a token of much hopefulness. From Hamilton the Evangelists went on to Paisley for Tuesday and Wednesday.

THE WORK IN PAISLEY.

Many were the pulpit references on Sabbath to Mr. Moody's expected visit; and these brought together on Monday evening a large and representative company, who filled the beautiful Margaret Brough Memorial Hall. Mr. Wilson, of the Evangelical Union Church, New-street, presided, and after prayers had been offered up by Rev. J. M. Sturrock, of the Free High Church, and Rev. Mr. Farquhar, of George-street Baptist Church, the meeting was thrown open, and then several engaged in prayer. The hour went past on flying feet, for all present felt that it was good to be there. In the prayers allusions were made to Mr. Moody's previous visits to the town, which were accompanied and followed by marked blessing. At the close, those who volunteered to form a choir for the special services remained to sing over the hymns which Mr. Moody had selected; and their enthusiasm and efficiency were so evident that the members of the arrangements Committee were satisfied that the praise part of the coming services would be all that could be desired.

Tuesday turned out to be a mild spring day, and by two o'clock people began to gather at the gate of the Free High Church, though the service was advertised to begin at three. Mr. Moody gave his

BIBLE-READING ON "THE BLOOD."

At the close of the service a prayer-meeting, attended by several hundreds, was held, which was very solemn and refreshing.

By half-past six a large crowd surrounded the gate of the church, which was crammed shortly after the doors were opened, and Mr. Moody began the service half-an-hour before the advertised time, announcing that an overflow meeting would be held in Free St. George's, a neighbouring church. This became known to the people outside, who at once made for the other church, which was soon closely packed. Although many were disappointed that Mr. Sankey was not present, yet all felt that it was but fitting that one of the evangelists should be present at the funeral of Mr. Spurgeon, the greatest preacher of this generation. Mr. Moody gave a very powerful address, which contained many impressive counsels and appeals to three classes—Christians, backsliders, and the unconverted. At the close the anxious were dealt with by earnest Christian workers in the adjoining hall, whilst Mr. Moody made his way to Free St. George's Church, where, with great animation, he spoke on repentance, from the familiar text, Is. lv. 7: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts." Many inquirers remained, and were spoken to by ministers and others, most of whom departed after professing faith in Christ.

One of the most interesting cases dealt with was that of a man, who was found by standing in the dark outside the door of the inquiry-room. He was speechless, and trembling violently, whilst the tears rolled down his cheeks. With clasped hands the two stood for five or ten minutes, the teacher kindly and plainly explaining the way of salvation, when the strong man, who had become like a little child, heaving a deep sigh, at length said, "I see it all clearly; here and now I give myself to God, and accept Christ as my Saviour." He had been for some time separated from his wife, who had joined the Salvation Army, and, on announcing this, he added, "Though she came not to me, yet I will go to her, and tell her that I now love her Saviour whom I once despised."

Wednesday was bright and genial, and by three o'clock the Free High Church was again filled by an audience, whose deep interest in the present revival movement was evident in the singing of the hymns and the rapt attention given to the speaker. Mr. Moody was in his best form, though he complained of headache due to the overcrowded meetings of the previous night, and delivered a pointed and powerful address on

"THE NEW BIRTH."

It was full of telling hits and touching stories. On seeing two mothers leaving the church because the babies they carried had become restless, he entreated them to remain, and threw out a hint that ladies who easily get to church all the year round might find a sphere of practical usefulness by renting a room and taking charge of the children of working-men's wives, who often find it difficult because of home duties to get out on Sabbaths. He made good use of this incident, and then returned with fresh vigour to his proper subject. Speaking of culture as a substitute for conversion, he said it reminded him of a man expecting a crop in autumn, by simply ploughing the field over and over again without putting in any seed. He also questioned if there was more than one-tenth of any existing congregation who could give a personal testimony, and said he would count it a greater honour to be called "an out-and-out Christian" than if all the universities of the world were to tack on all their titles to his name. It was a stirring Gospel address, which will be long remembered and spoken about in Paisley.

In the evening both churches were crowded an hour before the advertised time, and service was at once proceeded with in both places, Mr. Campbell White, of Glasgow, giving the address in Free St. George's. Mr. Moody's subject in the Free High was "Sowing and Reaping," and most powerfully did he explain and illustrate the law which operates in the moral as well as the natural world, "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Particularly impressive was he in enforcing his third proposition, "that a man reaps more than he sows," and this part of the discourse was listened to with deep emotion. It was here that his power to get at the hearts and consciences of men was best manifested, and it was not at all to be wondered at that at the close the inquiry-room, capable of accommodating three hundred, was at once filled by the anxious and Christian workers.

Arrangements have been made for continuing the special meetings in the Free High until Sabbath, the 21st inst., when the Rev. John McNeil will carry on the work for other four days in the Clark Town Hall. His visit is being looked forward to with great expectations, as his voice will be new to the people of Paisley.

RENFREW AND BARRHEAD.

Thursday was devoted to Renfrew, a thriving town at the junction of the Cart with the Clyde, and largely peopled by intelligent mechanics and engineers. Short as the visit was it had been well prepared for by united services. Both afternoon and evening great throngs assembled, the keen, shrewd men being largely represented in the audiences.

On Friday two services were held in Barrhead, a busy manufacturing town. At the first the U.P. Church was filled. Mr. Moody's address was on "Prayer," and referring to "the greatest preacher of this century," Mr. Spurgeon, he said that his prayers were even more remarkable than his preaching. In the evening the Established Church was crowded. Mr. Moody spoke from Mark xii. 34, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God"—enforcing the danger of allowing any one sin to keep us without the kingdom from the case of Herod, of whom it is written (Mark vi. 20) that at a certain period of his history he "feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him; and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly." Some talked of their intellectual difficulties, but he believed that nothing but sin kept people from receiving Christ, and if they went on neglecting their soul's salvation they would come to "refuse" and ultimately to "despise." A large number remained to the after meeting, and were conversed with throughout the church.

A CONVERT'S LETTER.

One of the hardest evangelistic workers now in the Scottish field, and one of the most earnest, is Mr. Merton Smith, late of Chicago, the tragic story of whose conversion in that city, several years since, has been published by Mr. H. Pickering, of 180, Buchanan-street, Glasgow. Mr. Smith recently conducted a fortnight's mission in a town in the south-west of Scotland, and among those who were won over to the side of the Saviour was a man who had been a confirmed and outspoken infidel. He now rejoices in and proclaims the truth that he formerly sought to destroy. The following extract from a letter he recently wrote to Mr. Smith is an admirable testimony, and one that ought to encourage all who labour for the souls of pronounced unbelievers:—

Dear Mr. Smith,—I am praising God all the time for that ever blessed "Friday night, at 1 o'clock in the morning," when his light broke on my darkened soul. I never expected to experience such a sense of complete rest and peace of mind as I have had ever since. My poor thanks to God seem so inadequate that I must ask you, dear friend, to thank Him too for me. My wife is fairly at her wits' end with joy. I can assure you the prayers of us both will follow you wherever you go.

My wife is a member of the ——— Mission, and I arranged to join them. On Sunday night I took your advice, and openly confessed Christ in the hall. I was greatly pleased to hear two or three others stand up and say they had been born again that same Friday evening. I think that the devil must have been off watch that night. He knows what an energetic servant he had in me, and he has been pulling at me from time to time since then, but Jesus is giving me strength to resist. Of course, I expect to have to stand a good deal of sneering from the world, but as the same people would probably sneer as much if they met me in the street and I were drunk, I do not see that their opinion matters a great deal. "Let them laugh who win."

And now, may God strengthen your heart and assist your labours wherever you are. Attack the infernal drink traffic without mercy; it will kill our nation if it is not checked. I know something about it, for I have been in the depths there too.—Your sincere friend,

THE WORK OF FOLLOWING UP.

A most gratifying and hopeful feature of the present movement is the way in which the permanent church workers have been stirred to seek a widening of the area of blessing. In a circular sent out to Free Church pastors throughout the north by Principal Rainy, Rev. J. M. Sloan, and Rev. John Burnett, as conveners of three leading Free Church Committees which are co-operating, these brethren say:—

On two successive Committee days there has been special conference among brethren in reference to the work of religious awakening which appears to be going on in various parts of the country. Strong testimony has been borne to the existence of a widespread desire for plain and earnest dealing with souls concerning the things that pertain to their peace, and encouraging reports have been made of the apparent fruit in connection with the means used in various places. A Committee has been appointed, which has secured from various brethren promises of help in the work in any places where these services may be required, and they are now anxious to ascertain in what congregations and districts there may be an opening for efforts in this line.

We shall be glad to learn whether, in your opinion, it would be desirable to have special meetings and services in your congregation and district, with a view to awaken religious interest and inquiry, or to extend and deepen these where they have been awakened. The Committee would endeavour to provide assistance on the part of brethren of the ministry willing to be so employed. We believe many persons in almost every district have lately been led in some degree to serious thoughts; that many more might, with God's blessing, be so led; and that we might cherish the hope of a signal ingathering in connection with the earnest and prayerful use of fitting means. We beg the earnest prayers of yourselves and of believers around you, that the work of the Lord may go on without hindrance and without offence; that the Spirit may be graciously poured out from on high, and that all the churches may be enabled to use wisely and successfully the opportunities which appear to be opening at this time.

It seems a thing incredible that such an invitation, sent out with the highest imprimatur of the Free Church, should receive anything but a glad welcome and a promise of cordial co-operation from all to whom it was addressed. It ought to be known that a very different reception has been accorded to it by Rev. Messrs. Mackenzie of Inverness, and Mackaskill of Dingwall. The reserved attitude of these two, however, throws into a pleasant relief the action of others who have entered most heartily into the proposals made. In a recent letter to our correspondent from Rev. Alexander Lee, of Nairn, some deeply-interesting details are given as to the past, present, and future arrangements for keeping alight the torch of special Gospel testimony at this season. Mr. Lee says:—

"Meetings have already been held at Findhorn, Burghead, Lossiemouth, and Grantown, with excellent results. The movement in Grantown is most remarkable. Services were begun there at the end of December in preparation for an expected visit from Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and they are still going on. The Grantown meetings have been addressed by Messrs. Grant of Helmsdale, Lee of Nairn, Martin of Stornoway, Paterson of Edinburgh, Lister of Dundee, and for the past ten days by Rev. J. J. Mackay of Glasgow. Mr. Mackay has had a most remarkable time. He never saw anything like it. A large number have publicly professed conversion during the past fortnight.

"Messrs. Sinclair of Broxburn, Martin of Stornoway, and Grant of Tain, took the services in the other districts around, and much refreshing and quickening were enjoyed. In Hopeman especially the impression was deep, and there we are going on yet.

"Services are arranged for Banff and Macduff for the end of March, to be conducted by Rev. Mr. Currie, of Edinburgh. Mr. Gullan, Glasgow, is expected for Buckie and Portsoy about the same time. We hope to start services at Peterhead on the 22nd inst., I think by Mr. Grant, of Tain. Fraserburgh is to be taken up also this month if possible.

"Messrs. Howie, of Govan, and Sloan, of Edinburgh, take a fortnight each in Easter Ross in the week beginning Jan. 14. Then Golspie, Halkirk, Canisby, and Lybster are to be visited later on by other friends. Services are now being held in Skye. I go to Stornoway for Jan. 21, in connection with their communion, and hope to arrange for five or six deputies going there early in March. I start a week of meetings in Cawdor to-morrow evening; the snowstorm interfered with our former plans there."

MESSRS. SMITH AND BELL AT KIRKCALDY.

These two friends have been vigorously at work in Kirkcaldy during the bygone week, and will continue the special meetings to the end of the current week. The evening meetings last week were in Raith Parish Church, at the extreme west end of the town. The audiences rapidly grew in numbers, indicating a rising tide of spiritual interest. Mr. Merton Smith's addresses have been intensely earnest and practical; while Mr. Ritchie Bell's delightful and expressive rendering of the Gospel hymns has lent much interest to the mission. Inquirers have been dealt with at each meeting, and a goodly list of names has been added to those who decided for Christ during the earlier weeks. The week-day afternoon Bible-reading in St. Brycedale Free Church has been much enjoyed. On Sabbath the centre of effort was moved eastward, to the populous district of Pathhead, and the evangelists had a very busy and fruitful day; they were assisted by Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Barclay, of Edinburgh.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey have received many invitations to undertake mission services in England. Dr. Dale, in conveying to the evangelists a resolution of invitation, passed at a meeting of ministers and laymen of various denominations in Birmingham, writes:—"God has greatly blessed your work in this city. As the result of your first visit, I received about two hundred members into Carr's-lane Church, and after four or five years 75 per cent. of them were standing well. Some of them have lived a very beautiful life, and have gone home. If you come again there will be much prayer before you come, and I trust that the blessing will be as large as that which we had when you came first."

Drunkenness in Morocco.

The correspondent of The Times in Tangier writes:—"There is a drastic form of dealing with inebriates pursued by the Moors which might perhaps be useful in a modified form at home with some of our drunken wife-beaters. In the smaller town prison I saw a Moor who was what is called "mad drunk," and for the time being as dangerous as a wild beast. This man was chained to the wall by a collar round his neck, and consequently quite unable to do any harm. He himself treated it rather as a joke, because he would be certainly set at liberty next day when he was sober. Strong drinks are not allowed by the Mohammedan religion; but, unfortunately, the low grog shops so largely introduced by Spaniards into Morocco are working untold evils with the poorer class of Moors. The Foreign Minister, Sid Torres, told me that this disgraceful traffic is largely on the increase, and the Spanish Government, when remonstrated with, say that by treaty they are at liberty to carry on this trade."

Thus will men ruin their fellow creatures for gain. "Treaty," may for a time displace the golden rule, but retribution must follow, if men will not recognise that "the heavens do rule."

THE ALDENHAM INSTITUTE.

During the past year the Aldenham Institute, Goldington-crescent, N.W., has taken a marked step forward. The membership has increased, as well as the number of new members who have entered the classes. Gratifying results have been achieved by the students who presented themselves at the Science and Art, the City and Guilds of London Technical Institute, and the Ambulance examinations. Social and religious work has been zealously pursued. Above all, and what gives the best assurance of future progress, there has been a decided deepening of the spiritual life among both members and associates. All this was detailed at the thirteenth anniversary, which was held on Saturday week, and which was attended by a very large audience.

After glancing rapidly over the various features of the Institute, Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, who presided, appealed earnestly for regular attendance at the Bible classes. The great facts, principles, and promises in the Word of God best promote man's usefulness in the world, and alone supply a sure support when the hour of trial or suffering arrives.

In faithful fulfilment of a promise made months ago, Dr. A. T. Pierson, officiating minister of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, delivered an address on "How to Make the Best of Life." The saddest sentence in our language, he said, was, "It might have been otherwise." But that was too frequently the verdict of a review of life. It was, therefore, a momentous question how life may be ordered aright. No man can afford to be anything else than a Christian. "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this maketh the whole man," is what Solomon said, though the translators have not uniformly given it so. That was exactly what he (Dr. Pierson) maintained. Make the most of the body by observing carefully the great physiological laws that promote its development and preservation. Cultivate the mind, bring out the powers with which it has been endowed. "Know thyself," for with self-knowledge and a recognition of opportunities will be found success. Obey conscience, the something within man that is like the tribunal of God. Train the will, for a man without a will is like a jelly-fish—without the power of decisive action. Lastly, have a noble aim, following closely the most exalted example given to man.

Mr. Moir, in a brief speech, counselled the young men to make the best possible use of the Institute, and endeavour to extend its benefits to others. Mr. James Robertson, in an eloquent address, warned young men against the vain attempt to secure happiness in the means so speciously presented by the world, and pleaded with them to seek true happiness in God's way. The Institute would fail of its principal object if it did not lead its members to Christ, and he hoped with all his heart that the attendance at the Bible classes would increase more and more.

THE GOSPEL BY POST IN IRELAND.

Rev. F. Boland writes:—"Now that the people of Ireland are rapidly throwing off priestly rule and superstition, we must supply them with the pure Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to save them from the reaction of infidelity. One of the best, and most speedy and sure means of doing this is the post. There are thousands of Roman Catholics in Ireland who can be reached in no other way. Many who would either be ashamed or afraid of being seen speaking to Protestants on religious matters, will gladly read in the secrecy of their own homes portions of the Word of God, tracts, or pamphlets, suitable for their condition of mind, and calculated to meet their difficulties.

"With a few others I have started this Postal Mission in Galway, the population of which is fourteen thousand, thirteen thousand being Roman Catholics, and we are anxious also to include the surrounding neighbourhood, but we have not sufficient funds at our disposal for carrying it on."

Communications for Mr. Boland may be addressed 12, D'Olier-street, Dublin.

"SHALOM" HOUSE, 134, UPPER PARLIAMENT-STREET, LIVERPOOL.—This home for missionaries and workers has just closed its third year with increased prosperity, and evident tokens of the Lord's presence and blessing.

HOSPITAL AT MARSOVAN, ARMENIA.

As is known to our readers, Madame Thoumaian, the wife of Professor Thoumaian, of Marsovan, Turkey in Asia, is in Great Britain, collecting funds for the establishment of a hospital in Marsovan, under the auspices of the Armenian Evangelical Church of that place. The need of such an undertaking is evident from the fact that it is a week's journey to the nearest hospital. The undertaking was recently formally inaugurated, Mr. Thoumaian having rented the greater part of the building once used for the girls' boarding-school under the care of the American missionaries, the women of the church rendering efficient help in the work of furnishing.

The "ward" of the hospital was crowded to its utmost capacity by the two hundred persons gathered to celebrate the opening of the first institution of this kind in Asia Minor. It is a very humble beginning, indeed; but the enthusiasm with which gifts were made and pledges for permanent support were offered made the gathering a memorable one. In the Armenian Evangelical community of Marsovan there are three fully-educated physicians, who guarantee their services gratis for the present.

In the absolute lack of trained nurses, a man of some experience in the healing art is engaged. Medicines are promised by reliable persons, which will go far toward meeting the needs of the hospital for the coming five years. Ten pounds was contributed on the spot; wood, coal, lamps, bed furniture, curtains, books and papers, a bath, kitchen utensils, &c., &c., are cordially promised, and a vote of thanks was carried to Madame Thoumaian for her self-denying efforts. The memorable proceedings lasted three hours, fully half of the time being devoted to a distinctly religious service. Now all are rejoicing that it can be said, "Our hospital work is really begun."

The Broussa Orphanage

This institution was founded by Rev. Gregory Baghdasarian in 1875, following upon the severe famine of the previous year. The little report for 1891 gives a brief account of its present condition, showing that thirty children were received last year, making a total of 90 all told. Of those who have gone forth, some have become teachers and others have entered theological seminaries. To carry on the work efficiently £1000 annually is needed, and as this is the only orphanage in all Asia Minor, a strong appeal for support is made to English Christians, who are assured that the strictest economy is observed in the outlay of funds placed at their disposal.

Spiritually, there have been times of refreshing, groups of girls having at different times come forward and publicly confessed the Saviour. Mr. Baghdasarian adds that the present need is more room for the preaching of the Gospel. "Many who hunger and thirst after righteousness attend the meetings, and the hall is now too small." £300 will be required for the new building. Dr. Hamlin, who for forty years was a missionary in Turkey, warmly commends the work; and all who wish to aid it may communicate with Rev. Dr. Brown, 32, The Avenue, Bedford-park, Chiswick.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION (110, Cannon-street, E.C.).—One of the missionaries writes: "The flowers and text-cards that we have received week by week during the past year have opened for us many doors in the dwellings and common lodging-houses, and we are not without evidence that the Word has accomplished the purpose of God, and some have been born again." The brief report contains heart-rending details of poverty and misery among the recipients of the texts, with allusions to sickening tales of horror "that cannot be transferred to writing." One man acknowledged that for sixteen years he had not entered a place of worship, nor bowed the knee in prayer, nor lifted his voice in praise. The hon. superintendent is Miss Anne Dove.

EAST-END EMIGRATION FUND (44, Newark-street, Stepney, E.).—During the past year the hon. secretary, Captain Gretton, spent seven weeks among the settlers in Canada, visiting seventy families, and "found the large majority of them doing remarkably well." The number sent out to the colonies was 314, making a total of 3602 since the foundation of the fund. The office is open from 11 to 3 (Saturdays excepted), and information concerning emigration will be given on application to the secretary. A sample case is as follows: "A poor man from Hackney Wick emigrated to Manitoba, and did so well that he sent for his parents to follow him. Every year since then other members of the family have gone and joined them; the sons have sent for their sweethearts, and now there is a little tribe of them numbering twenty-five."

CANON CHRISTOPHER'S MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.

This gathering, which is now quite a feature of Oxford life, was held on Saturday last at the Clarendon Hotel, and was attended by over 250 guests, who filled the large room to overflowing. The attendance of men belonging to nearly every section of the Christian Church, and of very varied ranks in the University and City, is not the least noteworthy feature of the meeting; indeed it is probable that only Canon Christopher could command such an assemblage in Oxford. The University was represented by the Vice-Chancellor (Dr. Boyd, Principal of Hertford College), and several other heads of houses, Canons Ince (Regius Professor of Divinity) Cheyne and Fremantle, and a number of professors and tutors. Mansfield was represented by Dr. Fairbairn, Wesleyan Methodism by Rev. James Chapman, Congregationalism by Professor Legge, the S.P.G. by the venerable Dr. Pope, the Baptists by Rev. James Dann, while many other workers were present. The attendance of undergraduates was, as usual, very large. Canon Christopher welcomed his guests in his own hearty way, saying that, although the breakfest meeting was more particularly in connection with the C.M.S., he hoped it would further the work of other societies. In conclusion, he appealed to young Oxford men to follow the good example set them by Cambridge volunteers for missionary work.

The Bishop of Exeter gave some account of his recent visit to Japan, where his son is the English Bishop. He spoke of the missionary work at Tokio, where six Oxford men work together under the Bishop of Japan, bound, however, by no monastic vows, evangelising in that city of over one million inhabitants, and also going out for special work in different parts of the field. The reference to this and to a similar mission among women carried on by six lady workers, elicited from the Bishop the opinion that, from what he had seen, the combination of community missions with the support of married missionaries for pastoral work, was the strength of missionary effort. The Bishop narrated his own and other marvellous escapes during the recent earthquakes. He closed an interesting address with an earnest appeal for men for Japan.

The Vice-Chancellor spoke very tellingly about the influence of Western ideas in Japan. Thus ended the sixteenth C.M.S. breakfast, with feelings of thankfulness to Canon Christopher in giving to Oxford such a singular opportunity for missionary testimony, and with prayers that he may be spared to continue for several years to come his noble work for God.

METROPOLITAN MUSIC-HALL.

For two Sunday evenings recently it has been my privilege to preach Christ in this well-known centre. The weather was well-nigh as disagreeable as it could be. For all that, the large building was crowded to the doors. These conditions are not exceptional, for I am informed that similar interest attaches to the meetings every Sunday.

Our energetic brother, Mr. Charles Cook, has solved the pressing question of true and popular Gospel services for the people. For many years, on the greensward in Hyde-park itself, in Hyde-park Hall, and in the Metropolitan Music Hall, Edgware-road, these services have been continued with great zeal and untiring industry. Without question hundreds of our fellow-men have, as a result, been brought into vital union with the living Christ. A large fellowship of believers exists, and the Lord Jesus is their one exalted Head and centre. In this work tens of thousands have heard the Word of Life.

Our brother possesses remarkable fitness for open-air meetings, and the large and well-trained band of Christian men and women who render the services of praise have done, and are doing, excellently. Mr. Cook needs sympathy and assistance. The rent of the music-hall alone is five pounds per Sunday, to say nothing of the printing and advertisements necessary to arrest attention in this busy, crowded thoroughfare. To those who serve by giving, I would commend our brother and his work. Let those who serve by earnest and fervent prayer, also aid this vigorous and courageous work.

OXFORD NOTES.

(From Our Correspondent.)

The Principal of Pusey House is giving a short course of four addresses at All Saints' Church after the ordinary Sunday evening services. The subject on February 14 was "The Control of the Body."

Dr. Fairbairn's proposal for a Summer School of Theology at Mansfield in July next will still further shorten the long vacation. The programme of lectures on Old and New Testament theology, apologetics, and introduction to special books, promises well, though the names of Drs. Driver, Sanday, Dods, Bruce, and Cave as lecturers suggest that a great diversity of views will be manifested.

The question of Newman's statue remains slightly in abeyance at present, the City Council having decided to grant a site, excluding, however, the one proposed in Broad-street and appointing a committee to arrange matters. This decision was unfortunately largely due to three or four prominent Nonconformist members, who, however, are by no means representative of Nonconformist feeling on the matter. At a meeting of the New Road Baptist Chapel Young Men's Society the proposal to erect a statue was debated, with the result of a majority of over 2 to 1 against it, and that in the presence of the Councillors referred to above.

The Oxford Union has also debated the question, and, to the surprise of every one, the proposal for the statue was rejected, even by a crowded house of undergraduate members. It is hoped that the Statue Committee will withdraw their application in the face of such a general, influential, and deep-seated feeling against the erection in Oxford.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

(From Our Correspondent.)

The Prince Consort Prize has been won by Mr. J. N. Figgis, B.A., son of Rev. J. B. Figgis, M.A., of Brighton. His dissertation on the "Divine Right of Kings" is to be published.

The University Sermon, on February 7, was preached by Rev. A. J. Worlledge, M.A., Canon and Chancellor of Truro Cathedral. He took as his text Ephesians iv. 13. His sermon bore chiefly on the great need there is for unity amongst Christians.

A series of four Bible readings for members of the University was commenced on Sunday last by the Principal of Ridley Hall in the Martyn Hall. "Something wanting" (Hag. i) was the subject of the opening reading. Next Sunday "A Divine Regret" (Ps. lxxxi. 8-16) will be expounded, and on succeeding Sundays "Self Dedication" (2 Cor. viii. 5), and "The Master's Use" (2 Tim. ii. 20, 21).

At the Alexandra Hall, Mr. R. P. Wilder, M.A., Princeton, U.S.A., addressed about 250 members of the University on the claims of the heathen. The University C. M. Union was also addressed by Mr. Wilder, who asked the men why they should not go out for foreign mission work. He introduced his Students' Volunteer Scheme, and, after the meeting, several subscribed their names to missionary pledges. He also addressed the Bible Reading Meeting at Corpus Christi College on Sunday morning, while on Tuesday evening, the members of the Church of England Young Men's Society had the pleasure of listening to an address from him in connection with the February simultaneous meetings. On Wednesday afternoon Mr. Wilder addressed a number of undergraduates at Ridley Hall, and on the following day a gathering of lady students, chiefly from Girton College.

Rev. Handley Moule's second and third sermons on Psalm xxxii. were delivered on the evenings of January 31 and February 7. The earlier discourse on verses 1 and 2, treated of 1. Sin as a load ("covered," Heb. "lifted off," used of a weight). 2. Sin as a crime detected and exposed. 3. Sin as an unpaid debt. Genuine penitence has no eyes except for "my" fault. It is absolutely safe for the believer, and absolutely just in Him for the hidden, secret sin to be detected and exposed.

Verses 3 to 5 occupied the preacher's attention in the third sermon. 1. Silence to God and its results. 2. Speech to God and its results. David kept silence for about one year with reference to his great sin. The outward life of the palace went on; under the surface was terrible anguish. Verse 5, "I said I will confess." It is such a grand thing when a man takes himself in hand. But there is an impotence in "I will;" but say, "I will go to Him who can." Put your sin and yourself under his feet. It is blessed when, in the confessional of Jesus Christ, intercourse is renewed.

OGLE MEWS RAGGED SCHOOLS.—The Committee draw attention to the numerous agencies comprising the entire work of the Mission, including day-schools, Sunday-schools, penny dinners, working-girl's institute, holiday homes, the infant nursery, maternity society, boot club, lending library, pure literature depot, band of hope, penny bank, mothers' meetings, Dorcas society, coal club, and bureau. With many thanks for past aid, urgent request is made for continued and increased support, so that the benefits of the Mission may be extended. Gifts may be sent to the hon. secretary, at the Schools, Foley-street, Middlesex Hospital, W. Also new and second-hand clothing, toys and picture books, and other useful literature.

OBITUARY.

MRS. J. F. ELWIN.

We regret to announce the death of Mary, widow of the late John Fountain Elwin, F.R.C.S., whose biographical story was told in The Christian about a year ago. Mrs. Elwin succumbed to influenza on January 17, at Cotswold, Clevedon, Somerset.

MR. C. C. COUSINS.

Many interested in mission and ragged-school work in West London will remember the faithful service rendered by Mr. C. C. Cousins, for twenty years in connection with the Latimer-road Mission. He was, it may be noted, a child of the Mission. Prior to his conversion he was nightly a chairman of public-house sing-songs; and after the great change, threw his talent of music into the service of God and for the reclamation of drunkards, being remarkably successful in taming and interesting the roughest class of boys. Just about a year ago Mr. Cousins bade us farewell, going off full of hope and spirits to join his son in Mobile, Alabama (U.S.A.). There, however, he soon took ill, and passed away on Jan. 13, 1892, mourned by many.

MR. THOMAS WESTLAKE, OF FORDINGBRIDGE.

In the falling asleep of this devoted servant of Christ, who passed away on January 23, aged sixty-five, all sections of the Christian Church feel they have suffered a loss. Early in life he began work in the Sunday-school, in 1867 commenced an adult school, and in 1874 erected a large mission-hall, which has since been a centre of useful service. Although a member of the Society of Friends this did not prevent him from working in loving fellowship with any of the Lord's people, his scriptural ground for this being 1 John iii. 14. As a preacher of the Gospel his success was very marked. He had a well-balanced and gifted intellect, together with a most accurate knowledge of God's Word, and these talents the Lord made of much service in his vineyard. In is impossible here to speak fully of his manifold labours and the many monuments of his philanthropy, but there was no department of Christian effort that did not find in him a friend. A local paper fittingly says: "Those who knew him best knew that throughout his beautiful and consistent life his constant endeavour was to keep near to God, to live peaceably with all men and to adorn the doctrine of Christ his Saviour."

MRS. BARBOUR OF BONSKEID.

But a little while ago we were mourning the loss of Rev. R. W. Barbour, of Bonskeid, and now his godly and gifted mother, Mrs. Barbour, who died on Friday week at Bonskeid, has also been called home. When yet in her teens she came, in Perth, under the influence of the great revival associated with the name of Rev. William C. Burns, and the blessing thus bestowed sweetened all her future life. Out of the sore trial that fell on her early married life—in the death of her two children through a railway accident—came her first book, The Way Home, which told the story with a pathos and power, going straight to every heart. Other books followed, such as "The Child of the Kingdom," "The Soul-Winner," "The Irish Orphan," and, last of all, a Life of her own mother, Mrs. Stewart Sandeman. "She had," says Rev. Dr. Robert Stalker, "only one passion, and this was to bring others to Christ. In this work she displayed unexampled courage, skill, and fertility of resource; and she was marvellously successful." Her surviving children are Dr. Hugh Barbour, at present in China; Mrs. Simpson, well known as an authoress, and wife of Professor Simpson; and Mrs. Whyte, wife of Rev. Dr. Whyte. A relative writes: A singularly beautiful and fruitful life came to a close when Mrs. Barbour died. In her life of her mother, Mrs. Sandeman, she has traced the surroundings of her own early days, and helped us to understand the genealogy of her lofty spirit, her poetic instincts, her patriotic sympathies. Trained from her childhood to communicate freely of her best, when through the preaching of William Burns she came fully under the power of the Gospel, her life was wholly consecrated to the service of Christ. Her last work on earth was to arrange for postcards being sent out to call together the prayer-meeting for mission work in China. To the friend who was helping her, she said, "There must be much of the Holy Spirit to spare now that Spurgeon is away. Let us ask for a large share." When a soul whom she had prayed over wrote to tell that he was receiving fuller blessing, she replied, "Your letter was God's best Christmas gift to me." We are all feeling to-day how true her own lines are:—

> How much of heaven flows out into our hearts
> While those we love pass in! It is as though
> The angels from the shore cast grappling chains
> Into our gliding barque and drew us near
> To mingle with the best.

Clapton Park.—Rev. Thomas Jackson, 41, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, E., says: "The influenza epidemic has spread to an alarming extent among the very poor of Clapton and Homerton. Whole families are helpless and destitute. We have five nursing sisters employed in attending to the most distressing cases, and in various ways we are seeking to alleviate the sufferings of the poor."

The Book World.

Books about the Bible.

The One Book: A treatise on the unique character of the Bible. By Ven. Joshua Hughes-Games, D.C.L., Archdeacon of Man. (3s. 6d. Hunt and Co.) Emphatically a book for the times. The author keeps well to his subject, and his work is a valuable addition to religious literature of an important class. Designed for the ordinary reader, this little volume will prove of service to all who are engaged in emphasizing the unique character of the Bible at the present day, when, sad to say, so many who profess to be its friends are ranged with the supporters of a depreciatory and destructive criticism.

Stumbling Blocks Removed from the Word of God. By Arthur T. Pierson. (R. D. Dickinson.) Dr. Pierson knows how to meet atheists and those who assault the Divine Oracles, but that is not his purpose in this little volume. Rather, he desires to help believers, by examining and explaining the difficulties and so-called "discrepancies" of Scripture, and by setting forth canons of sound interpretation. The entire symmetry and consistency of the Word of God is shown in these pages, which are specially designed for those who cannot consult learned treatises or have command of theological libraries.

How to Treat the Bible. A Plea for Discrimination in the Study of the Sacred Scriptures. By Clement Clemance, D.D. (R. D. Dickinson.) The formula of discriminate study is "Each part of the Bible is to be taken for what it professes to be, whether the declared Word of God, or the reported words of man." To some this may prove a helpful method, the pursuit of which in the scholastic sphere by no means excludes devotional study with its spiritual heights and depths. Dr. Clemance shows the fallacious and dangerous character of the Higher Criticism, and proceeds to propound in a forcible manner the "higher unity" of the Book. Though small, this volume is a thoughtful contribution to a great subject.

The Tabernacle in the Wilderness and its Teachings. By the late Dr J. Ed. Cranage. Many may be glad to know that copies of this book, containing notes of three valuable lectures on Tabernacle types delivered by this departed teacher, may still be had of Mr. R. Weston, Old Hall, Wellington, Salop (post free 1s. 1d.).

Burdett's Hospital Annual and Year-Book of Philanthropy, 1891-2, contains a review of the position and requirements of the voluntary charities, and an exhaustive record of hospital work. As a guide to British and Colonial hospitals, dispensaries, nursing and convalescent homes and asylums, it will serve a very useful purpose. (The Hospital, Limited, 140, Strand, W.C.)

The Girl's Own Book of Health and Beauty. By Dr. Gordon Stables. 2s. 6d. Jarrold and Sons. Maintaining that there can be no beauty without health, the accomplished author of this manual aims at placing in the hands of girls a practical hygienic guide. The pages are simple and attractive reading, and those who act upon the counsels presented will escape many ills, and enjoy an ease of body and mind which ill-health renders impossible.

Chimes for the Times. By M. A. Chaplin. (W. Wileman, 27, Bouverie-street, E.C.) Rev. W. Lancelot Holland, M.A., writes a preface to this bright little volume. The "Chimes" are humane and evangelical; and those which sound warnings for our times expose Popery, both incipient and full-fledged. "Convent Chimes" plead a noble cause, and are among the best in the collection. Sound in Protestant sentiment, this is a sterling little book.

Hymns of Hope for Israel is the title of an attractive collection of melodies by Rev. John Wilkinson, director of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. Between thirty and forty were composed specially for the book; the rest have been gathered from various sources. Besides pieces relating to the restoration and salvation of Israel, and to the second Advent of our Lord, there are some of a more general character, and others for use on special occasions. (1s. Depôt of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, 60, Newington-green, N.)

The Cyclopedia of Nature Teachings is a large collection of striking passages from the writings and utterances of well-known authors and speakers, conveying information such as may profitably be employed by way of illustrating religious truths or moral principles. The contents are well classified, and there is a full index of contents and list of the Bible texts alluded to. Dr. Hugh Macmillan contributes an introduction, and in thoughtful hands the volume will prove instructive and suggestive. (7s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

The Greatest Work in the World; or, the Evangelisation of all peoples in the present century, is a stirring missionary booklet by Rev. Dr. Pierson. The obligation of the Church to send the Gospel into the regions beyond is powerfully enforced, and believers are urged to rise to their privileges, and the Church to discharge the great commission of her Lord. Full of information, and aflame with zeal, these pages should be read and their counsels heeded by all who pray "Thy kingdon come." (6d. W. G. Wheeler, 21a, Warwick-lane, E.C.)

The Converted Catholic, Vol. VIII., includes last year's monthly issues. Besides its special features—testimonies of converts from Rome to evangelical Christianity and instructive articles for the enlightenment of Roman Catholics—this magazine presents every month an array of Scriptural and historical facts and arguments upholding Protestantism and justifiying converts for leaving the Roman Catholic Church. Rev. James A. O'Connor, the editor and publisher, was for many years a Roman Catholic priest. (Office, 142, West Twenty-first-street, New York.)

The Lepers of our Indian Empire. A visit to them in 1890-91. By Wellesley C. Bailey. (Shaw.) Here are amplified notes of the travels and observations of one who knew what to look for and understood what he saw. The various centres in which something is done to ameliorate the condition of the poor lepers are described, and a peculiar pathos attaches to many of the details of devotion on the part of Christian workers and appreciation of kindness on the part of the afflicted. There are several illustrations and a good index, and the book may be strongly commended to the attention of all who are interested in the subject of befriending lepers in the name of Christ.

The Christ of the Fourth Gospel. A miracle of truth or a miracle of falsehood. By J. M. Denniston, M.A. (2s. Nisbet.) This little volume shows that the Christ portrayed in St. John's Gospel is a miracle in Himself, with nothing in natural law or human experience to explain Him, the only reasonable account of Him being that by which He is introduced at the opening of the Gospel—"The word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth." The argument is cogent, powerful, and useful, and should not be overlooked by theological students. Those who are inclined to "harmonise" the Fourth Gospel with naturalistic or Unitarian views, should have this work brought under their notice.

Moses and Geology, the well-known work by Rev. Dr. Kinns, continues to enjoy a well-deserved popularity. The title-page of the new edition, just issued by Messrs. Cassell, states that the book is in its thirteenth thousand, and at the reduced price of 8s. 6d. it is sure to find many more readers. We have already spoken of the undoubted value of this large and handsomely illustrated volume, and we are glad to observe that the scientific chapters have been revised up to date, eminent specialists in various departments of learning having co-operated with the widely-read and patient author in his work of showing, as he assuredly does with convincing force, that there is no conflict between true science and divine revelation.

Messrs. W. Hunt and Co. have re-issued the excellent penny booklet, Christ Our Example in His Intercourse with the World, by Caroline Fry.

The Good Shepherd and His Lambs. (9d. Holness.) A collection of true stories, specially told with the object of pointing boys and girls to Christ. This illustrated book is deserving of a large circulation.

Interesting and instructive papers on the construction and care of the pianoforte and American organ, are to be found in The Keyboard, a new journal for musical amateurs. (22, Paternoster-row. 1s. Monthly.)

The Presbyterian Year-Book, issued by Mr. T. Ogilvie Smith (6d.), is really what it claims to be—a handbook of information about all the Presbyterian Churches in the world; well conceived and well arranged.

"Missed" is a brief, but loving, memorial of the late Mr. Clarke Aspinall, of Liverpool, by "A Lay Fellow-worker." The subject enjoyed more than a local fame, and these pages will interest those who knew him. (1d.) Liverpool: G. G. Walmsley, 50, Lord-street.)

Mr. G. H. Graham, "Temperance Worker" Office, Maidstone, issues some very useful serials. The Worker (2d. monthly) should be read by all who take an active part in temperance reform; and the Wide-awake Temperance Reciter (1d., monthly) should prove of special use to Band of Hope organisers.

Sell's Dictionary of the World's Press gets more bulky every year. The new issue contains over sixteen hundred pages, the advertisements being almost as interesting as the journalistic information is really valuable. (2s. Sell's Advertising Agency, 167 and 168, Fleet-street, E.C.)

Recent publications from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, include Prison Stories, by Charles Cook; packets of twenty-five assorted, 6d. Also three series by the author of "Evanescent Philosophies," called the Weston Series, in which plain words are addressed to plain people. Packets of twelve cost 6d.

Influenza, and How to Go Through It. By Clare Goslett. 3d. Simpkin, Marshall and Co. This is a practical pamphlet. It should have a wide circulation, and prove specially useful in rural districts, where medical advice and attention are not easy to command. After reading these pages, Christian workers will be in a position to give welcome advice to the poor and ignorant.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LORD'S DAY.

Dear Sir,—A correspondent in your paper of last week, says that the contempt shown in India, by some in authority, to the observance of the Sabbath, is "even contrary to the articles of war." If so, how is it that at Seaforth Barracks, near Liverpool, the men are allowed, by permission of their officers, to play quoits, football, and cricket on Sunday afternoons in view of the general public, many of whom are scandalised by such proceedings?

This looks as if, nationally, we were repudiating the keeping of the Sabbath. The first Sunday the soldiers had their cricket, a sergeant burst a blood-vessel and died almost immediately. This had the effect of stopping the playing at the time, the men themselves being a little afraid; but only for a time. I do hope that Christians will throw off selfish indolence, and use every means in their power to avert God's anger against us as a nation, by earnestly contending for the privileges gained at so much cost in the past, and with which our present and continued well-being is indispensably bound up.

Protest.

Waterloo, Liverpool.

A CALL TO HUMILIATION AND PRAYER.

Dear Sir,—We are glad indeed that three days have been set apart for humiliation and prayer, on account of our sin in connection with the opium traffic in China. But why—oh! why has our nation not long since recognised that the chastening hand of our God is upon her, and prostrated herself in the dust at his feet, who is righteous as well as merciful, just as well as loving?

The pale messenger of death is stalking through our land. The rich and the poor, the high and the low, are being cut down by his keen and relentless scythe. Even to-day, in palace and cottage alike, there are stricken and bereaved hearts. From prince and peasant there goes up the wail of anguish for loved ones torn from the fond embrace; and through the length and breadth of our land may be heard echoing the sad refrain—

> Oh, for the touch of a vanished hand
> And the sound of a voice that is still!

Yet England stands erect, and hitherto has proudly refused to acknowledge her sins, or come to repentance, or call upon God. When this was proposed the other week, you remarked that the writer forgot that this scourge is not confined to our country, but is widespread throughout the world. Be it so; but this does not affect the question in the least. If Christian England does not lead the way, who will? If she refuse to bow in the presence of the God she professes to love and worship when his chastening hand is laid so heavily upon her, to whom are we to look? A reason given in headquarters as to why a call to humiliation and prayer has not gone forth ere this, is lest it should create a panic in the land. But if by a panic is meant the people being thoroughly roused to a sense of their danger and of God's wrath, so justly merited, surely the sooner such a panic takes place the better, and the more speedily we may hope for a removal of the scourge. Jonah's preaching created a panic in Nineveh, but well was it for the city that it did.

Christ is coming—He is coming soon! Earnestly, patiently, persistently, is our gracious and long-suffering God seeking to gain the ear and the heart of our nation—yea, of the world; but we will not hearken. The dulled ear and the heavy mind refuse to awaken. Rapidly is the Eastern sky crimsoning beneath the beams of the rising "Sun of Righteousness." Soon, so soon, will He be here "whose right it is to reign." But a deep sleep has fallen upon us; an awful stupor seems to have taken possession of our senses, benumbing all our faculties. Oh! may God in his mercy arouse us ere it be too late, and the thunderbolts of Divine vengeance have fallen darkly and finally upon a doomed and horror-stricken world!

The Seamen's Rest, Marseilles.

The twelfth report of the Rest at 38, Quai du Port, Marseilles, declares its object to be the spiritual and moral wellbeing of some of the 140,000 sailors of all nations who annually visit this port. During last year the work was carried on in its several forms, comprising reading-room, Gospel services, personal converse, visits to ships and hospitals, and correspondence with the awakened and anxious. The visits of sailors to the Rest numbered five thousand, "and the daily effort of Mdlle. Keller among them have been accompanied with most encouraging results." Alterations in the building arrangements have been made, and the year has been marked, says the report, by unusual trials of faith, but also by the removal of the heavy debt with which it opened. Among the awakened is a former atheist, now so changed that his wife says she can scarcely recognise him as the same. Often after closing, the sailors beg to be admitted again to have their favourite hymn sung, "Come to the Saviour; make no delay." Communication may be made to Mr. Charles E. Faithful, at the Rest.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which, of course, are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 21.—TITUS II.

Special Exhortations (1-10).—The Apostle recalls men from the useless speculations, of which he had spoken in the foregoing chapter, to practical duties, which indeed are the best corrective. "Sound," i.e., wholesome, as so often. 2. "Sober," i.e., temperate (1 Tim. iii. 2). "Temperate," i.e., self-restrained (1 Tim. ii. 9). We must be sound in love as well as in faith, orthodox in heart. 3. The women are especially warned against slander and wine. Intemperance was very rife among the Cretans. Evidently the teaching was to be given in private (1 Cor. xiv. 34). 5. Instead of "keepers," read "workers at home," active and assiduous in attending to the duties of the home (Prov. vii. 11). Our doctrine is to be without corruptness as to matter, and with gravity as to manner, and is to mould our lives, so that we may be living examples of all we teach others. 8. Oh to live so that men may have no fault to find with aught but our doctrine. It is much to be able to face the world and know that it has no evil thing to say of us except in so far as we are the followers of Jesus. 9. These were slaves. They are counselled to do their work willingly and pleasantly, anticipating wishes before expressed, and hastening to do their duties with a smile. 10. Lay the emphasis on all, and see what a great life these Christian slaves were called upon to live. What could have carried them through it, but the recognition of the perpetual presence of Christ? And how wonderful that such lives are as jewels on the person of Christ.

The Basis of all Christian Morality (11-15).—"For the grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men." (R.V.) The word "appear" means shine out, as the sun from a veil of clouds. There has been the appearance of grace, there shall be the appearance of glory (13). 12. "Teaching" might be rendered disciplining. We are yet at school, and need the discipline of a wise, loving teacher, to the intent that, &c. (R.V.) There must be a constant denial of self if we would live as we should. All must pass through the strait gate. It is only in proportion as we say No to self that we say Yes to God. Soberly, as to ourselves; righteously, as to our fellows; godly, as to God. 13. The denial is to be irrevocable and once for all, the anticipation is to be perpetual. Note the contrast between the present, so transient, and the future so radiant and blessed. Such a hope blesses and ennobles the whole life. The words God and Saviour are here assigned to our blessed Lord. He is the great God, and also our Saviour. 14. What a gift was this, and it outweighed all of us, with all our sin. Notice the object that impelled Christ to this great sacrifice, not only to save us from the penalty, but to emancipate us from the thrall of sin. "A people for his own possession." The Lord's people is his inheritance, as He is theirs. The flame of Christ's love kindles on our hearts, and burns there as zeal.

MONDAY, FEB. 22.—TITUS III.

Rules for Christians.—1. "Principalities and powers" are magistracies and authorities. The words "good work" are very characteristic of this epistle. 2. When we come to see God's gentle goodness to all men we become partakers of it, and manifest it. "Not contentious, gentle, showing all meekness"; such is to be our character to all about us, whilst in defence of the truth we are to be strong and uncompromising. 3. The memory of what we once were, needing so much tender love, is the reason why we should bear with others. We are what we are entirely because of the pure benevolence and undeserved grace of God. 4. "His love toward man" is his philanthropy (Greek). 5. Works of our own righteousness are completely out of court in commending us to God, or winning salvation. It is all of grace and according to his mercy. We may therefore exercise an infinite patience with others. Nothing but love can save us or them. Regeneration and renewal, which are the exclusive work of the Holy Spirit, are set forth as washing, because these tend to the removal of the guilt-stains and the cleanliness of life, which are their necessary outcome. Regeneration is wrought once for all, renewing is progressive. 6. The Holy Spirit as to its measure is richly, abundantly; as to its channel is through Jesus Christ. Note how in this wonderful passage the Holy Trinity are combined in our salvation. 7. We are now heirs in hope, but soon to be in possession. 8. This either refers to works of Christian usefulness or to honest occupations. (R.V.) See also v. 14. 10. Heretical or schismatical persons should be publicly warned, and then avoided as unfit for Christian fellowship.

THE EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

TUESDAY, FEB. 23.

Philemon dwelt at Colosse (v. 2 and Col. iv. 17), having been converted through the ministry of the Apostle, and become his fellow-worker. His slave, Onesimus, had defrauded his master, fled to Rome, and there had been converted to God through the labours of the Apostle. From that moment he became his favourite attendant, and would have been retained but for Philemon's prior claim. This letter was sent to explain the circumstances to his former master, and to secure a welcome for the absconded but now penitent slave, who had become a "brother beloved." It is a model for Christian correspondence.

The Inscription and Greeting (1-7).—2. Apphia was probably Philemon's wife, and Archippus their son, who was minister of the church at Colosse (Col. iv. 17). 3. In the absence of a proper meeting-place, the wealthier members of the early Christian Churches were in the habit of placing their houses at the service of their fellow-members. 4. The R.V. joins "always" to thank. Be sure to thank always for all you can, and praise will fill the heart with prayer. They act and react. 6. The aim of the Apostle's prayers was that the impartation of Philemon's faith and love, flowing out in practical helpfulness to others, might lead them to recognise the good things which were in Christian hearts to the glory of Christ. 7. Before asking of his friend the great boon that was on his heart, the Apostle lays loving stress on the goodness which he had already shown to the saints, in refreshing their hearts.

The Request (8-20).—How many threads were woven into the one strand—that Paul had been the means of his conversion, that he was now an old man, prematurely so on account of many trials and much sorrow, and that he was suffering for Christ. This threefold plea must have been irresistible. 10. Onesimus had become his son, because converted through his means, and therefore Philemon's brother (19). 11. There appears to be a play on the name Onesimus, which signifies useful or helpful. 13. In receiving the runaway slave, Philemon was receiving the Apostle's heart. How could he be other than gentle and tender? 14. The Apostle would fain have kept the services of Onesimus to minister to his need, but it would not have been fair to his master that he should do so; without obtaining his consent. It was a most delicate way of showing how valuable Philemon would discover his services to be, now that he had become a Christian. 15. The "hour's" absence would be more than compensated for by the depth and intensity of his after service. May we not hope that the devotion of a life of consecration to our Lord may follow the hour's rebellion of bygone years? We were once absconding slaves, but are now brothers beloved. The Apostle did not ask for the emancipation of the slaves; that would come as the principles of Christianity became disseminated. In the meanwhile he sought that the relations of master and slave should be Christianised. 17. It is thought by some that there had been some business partnership between these two, and Paul wished his account to be debited to the extent that Onesimus had robbed Philemon. Is not this what the Lord Jesus says of us, "Put that to my account." All through this epistle we get a faint shadowing forth of what He must feel about us. 19. Similarly, we owe our own selves to Christ. It is a debt that can never be discharged. 21. We may well ask ourselves if we repay the confidence which Christ reposes in us, as Paul expected Philemon to repay his. Doing more than I say. Ah, how often has Christ had reason to mourn a misplaced confidence. 22. When he came he would be able to see for himself how Philemon had fulfilled his request. So Christ is coming again to reward us. Meanwhile, let us prepare Him a lodging. 23. Epaphras had been sent by the church at Colosse to inquire after Paul, and had perhaps been thrown into the same prison on suspicion; or the Apostle only refers to the faithfulness of his voluntary attendance on him in his trials.

THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

It was evidently written before the destruction of Jerusalem, and addressed to Hebrew Christians, who were located in some special place (xiii. 23), with an organised society and Christian ministers.

The writer is not certainly known. Luther thought that it was written by Apollos, and this view has been strongly advocated by Alford. The preponderance of commentators ascribe it to the Apostle Paul; and this was the opinion of the early fathers.

The object was to fortify the minds of Hebrew converts against the fascinations of Judaism, to which they were tempted to return, and the pressure of persecution which was brought to bear upon them. Hence the writer magnifies the transcendant glories of Christianity over those of the Mosaic ritual, and urges the dangers of apostasy in appeals most eloquent and terrible.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 24.—HEBREWS I.

The Dignity of Christ (1-4).—The name of God fitly stands at the commencement of this great treatise—the origin and fount of all. He spoke in the prophets, that is the true conception of inspiration. But no one prophet had all the truth. Each was a broken light. "Divers portions," Isaiah, Daniel, Paul, and John, each reflected truth at their own special angle—some in prose, others poetry, others prophecy. 2. Christ was the organ through which the creative purpose and power moved. 3. "The effulgence of his glory" refers to the essential oneness of their nature as a beam with the sun. "The image of his substance" indicates that Christ's nature was co-extensive with the Father's, as die with seal. He created, He sustains, He made purification for sin, He is exalted to the right hand of God. 4. He is not only greater than the angels as God, but He has become so as Mediator.

The Superiority of Christ over Angels (5-14).—The quotation of this verse leads us to see that throughout Jewish history, as in the reign of Solomon, there was ever a mystical and spiritual reference to Christ. Let us seek grace to read between the lines. 6. This is probably quoted from Psa. xcvii. 7, which in the Septuagint puts angels for gods. 7. Swift as wind, ardent as flame. Would that we might continue these in our service. 8. We may read the name of Jesus throughout Psa. xlv. 10. Psa. cii., from which this sublime quotation is made, is evidently true only of Deity, and its reference to Christ is a clear proof that He is God. Generally, the worker vanishes and the work remains, here the work vanishes the worker remains. Creation is the vesture of God. 11. "Thou remainest," is a sweet motto-text. 14. We do not always recognise the kind offices of the angels in safe-guarding us. They receive charge over us to keep us in all our ways, and we owe to their kind care many a deliverance. Let us not grieve their holy eyes and ears with sin.

THURSDAY, FEB. 25.—HEBREWS II.

The Result of the Foregoing Argument (1-4).—"Lest haply we drift away from them:" the insidious drift of life is more perilous than direct temptations to apostacy. 2. The Jews held that the law was given on Sinai through the ministry of angels (Acts vii. 53). If all acts of disobedience and transgression, under a system of which angels were the organs, were so immediately and terribly avenged, what must not the fate of those be who have deliberately sinned against the Gospel, communicated by the Son? 3. Salvation is a wide harbour, large enough to contain the names of a world of sinners; and if we neglect the harbour-lights, and permit ourselves to drift from it, there is no other refuge. 4. Signs illustrate spiritual truth, as the healing of the blind; wonders arrest attention; "miracles" should be rendered powers (R.V.). All these attested the truth of Christian revelation. To neglect is to reject; and to reject in the face of such signal proofs, is to court destruction.

Christ's Superiority as the Exalted Man (5-9).—"The world to come" is probably the world around us, the system by which we are surrounded, and of which we form a part. 6. In Psa. viii., David quotes from the original words addressed by God to Adam, who though lower than the angels in his constitution, was yet appointed as his vicegerent (Gen. i. 28). Obviously, that prediction had not been realised in man as such. 8. All creation seems to defy man. There are but few traces of his original supremacy left. 9. Turning our eyes away from man to Jesus, who took our nature, albeit that it was lower than that of the angels, we see that because of his obedience to death He is crowned with glory and honour, in which He sits at the right hand of God. It is important to notice that Christ's exaltation is distinctly ascribed to his obedience unto death. Every man had a share in the death of Christ as a right, and may inherit the blessedness of it as a privilege.

The Justification of his Humiliation as Suffering Saviour (10-18).—Throughout the ages God is engaged in bringing sons to glory: it is a long procession, of which Christ is Captain and Leader. Since the sons suffer He must suffer; only through suffering could He be perfectly equipped for his work. Only so could his oneness with us be approved. 14. The demands of the sins and sufferings of men justify the humiliation and death of Christ. Only by death could He destroy Him that had the power of death, as David killed Goliath with his own sword. 16. "He took hold" (R.V.), and He will never relax his grasp. 17. As a merciful and faithful high priest He has made a propitiation for sin, and now waits to succour the tempted. He is well able to succour us; let us appeal to Him in the hour of trial.

FRIDAY, FEB. 26.—HEBREWS III.

Christ's Superiority to Moses (1-6).—Christians are called to holiness, to brotherly love, and to heaven. Life should be one long consideration of Jesus. As Apostle He came from God to us; as Priest He goes from us to God. 2. Our Lord was appointed in his mediatorial capacity by God, and He was faithful. God's House probably stands for the congregation of faithful people. 3. But though He was "appointed," it must never be forgotten that He built all things as Creator. 5. At the most Moses was only a servant, but Christ is son. What an immeasurable distance there was between them! And if Moses received so much honour, what shall not be said of the glorious Lord? And if the doom of those who rejected Moses was great, how much greater will be ours if we reject Him.

The Testimony of the Desert Graves (7-19).—Unbelief springs from an evil heart. The heart goes wrong before the head. We fall away from the God of life. 13. We must care for each other, and exhort any who seem becoming hard, as travellers in the Arctic circle chafe those who give symptoms of being frost-bitten. Sin is very deceitful in its hardening process. 14. Our continuance to the end approves our oneness with Christ. 17. Those bleaching bones in the desert bear witness to the disastrous results of disobedience and unbelief, which are two sides of one attitude of mind. We disobey because we fail to believe. We disbelieve because we fail to obey. Such must be our fate if we yield to either. The weary, aimless wandering over the desert waste is a fit representation of the aimless, weary experience of many who were redeemed by the blood of Christ for something better.

SATURDAY, FEB 27.—HEBREWS IV.

Let Us Fear (1-10).—The promise of entering God's rest is clearly unexhausted; let us enter by the open door of faith. 2. "A Gospel" of rest (R.V. marg.). It has been suggested that the last clause should read, "Because they did not unite faith with hearing." 3. The rest is not future only, but here and now: "do enter." And it is unexhausted, because long after God had finished his works of creation He spoke of that rest as being yet future (Psa. xcv. 11). 7. It is clear, too, that that rest was unappropriated by the Israelites when they entered Canaan, because the reference about not entering God's rest was made long after the tribes had been settled in the land of promise. 9. If, then, the promise of rest was not realised in creation or in Canaan, it is clear that "the Sabbath rest for the people of God" remaineth, i.e., it is unexhausted, unexplored, and awaits our entrance. It is not material, but spiritual; not for eternity, but here and now.

Let us Give Diligence (11-13).—We enter God's rest as we obey and believe. But we cannot mock God with the appearances of these things. He pierces to our innermost secrets, and demands reality. And He waits, if only we will let Him, with drawn sword to pierce the secrets of our being, and cut away all that interferes with our entire devotion. 13. We are opened before Him, as the sacrificial victim to the priest. Oh, those searching eyes, that cannot look at sin, and yet regard us always!

Let us Come Boldly (14-16).—This is a beautiful contrast, full of comfort. If on the one hand we have good reason to fear the knife; on the other we need not dread the priest who holds it. He has passed "through the heavens," He is a great high priest, He is the Son of God; but He is touched with the feeling of our infirmities. 15. He knows sin, not by yielding to it, as we do; but by resisting it. 16. At any time we may go to that throne. It is ever full of grace, and we may always get mercy for the past, and grace for our times of need.

Personalia.

Rev. C. A. Berry is expected home this week, looking, it is said, vigorous and well.

Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Eddy completed on February 1 forty years' labour in Beyrout.

Rev. Robert Taylor has been warmly welcomed back, after his illness, by his attached people at Norwood.

Rev. Eustace Conder, D.D., who was to have preached at Mansfield on Sunday week, was prevented by illness.

Rev. David Kinnear, of Dalbeattie, is to be nominated as Moderator of the United Presbyterian Synod for next year.

Rev. Thomas Champness says that last year he received £6000 for the Joyful News Mission, without asking one penny.

Rev. E. S. Bickford, who has done twenty-seven years' good and faithful work in New South Wales and Victoria, is now on his way home to England for a brief visit.

Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson, who has been ill, is now recovered, and was able on Sunday week to preach on the life and labours of his close personal friend, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

Rev. R. Lang, who has for ten years acted at Salisbury-square, has resigned his post as secretary of the Church Missionary Society in order to enter on the incumbency of Old Warden.

Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke still, at latest accounts, holds his advanced post at Lokoja; but, owing to the Mohammedan agitation in view of the French advance in the Lower Soudan, the position has become an anxious one.

Rev. J. H. Rigg, D.D., is, we are glad to hear, now convalescent. It will be remembered that a few days ago he was unable, owing to an attack of influenza, to be present at the unveiling of his bust in the Westminster Training College, of which he has been president for twenty-three years.

Mr. Walter Douglas and his wife are now at Launceston, Tasmania. Their voyage to the antipodes was a very trying one, Melbourne being reached on October 12. After visiting their son at Hagley, near Launceston, they hoped to make for New Zealand in order to see their other three sons, but Mrs. Douglas suffered so distressingly from a bronchial affection that this arrangement had to fall through. Mr. Douglas is not equal to any great exertion, but he hopes yet to be able to preach occasionally. His address is—Care of Dr. Maberly, 215, St. John's-street, Launceston, Tasmania.

Distress in East London.—Rev. Stewart Smyth, vicar of St. Mark's, Silvertown, Victoria Docks, E., writes: "The influenza has caused appalling distress, striking down bread-winners—all dock-labourers and factory-hands—and killing the infirm and aged poor and a multitude of little children. The vicar, his wife, the Bible-lady, and city missionary are doing all in their power, but, if funds are not forthcoming, the effort will have to be given up."

International S. S. Lessons.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, FEB. 28.

JEREMIAH PERSECUTED.—Jer. xxxvii. 11-21.

GOLDEN TEXT: Jer. i. 19.

ZEDEKIAH, the son of Josiah, who succeeded to the throne after the brief reign of Coniah, was less guilty, but not less foolish than his three predecessors (2), yet he could ask Jeremiah to pray for him and his people (3). How many forget that wilful disobedience to the Word of God closes God's ear against our prayers (Prov. xxviii. 9).

Against the threatened invasion by the Chaldeans the confidence of the people was placed in Egypt, and this confidence was strengthened by the fact that already the Chaldeans had once withdrawn from the city when the Egyptians approached (5). It is needful to destroy our confidence in that which deceives us before we are led fully to trust in God.

JEREMIAH IMPRISONED (11-15).—He had faithfully foretold the city's doom, and earnestly and affectionately warned and entreated the people; but his messages had been disregarded. For this reason he sought to leave the city which he had tried in vain to benefit, and to retire to his own country (comp. 12 with i. 1). The attempt was discovered, and was regarded with suspicion. Many of the Jews, fearing the result of the siege, had deserted to the Chaldeans (xxxviii. 19, 20), and thus increased the fear of Zedekiah. Jeremiah was charged with similar desertion (13). They knew that he had predicted the overthrow of the city by the Chaldeans, and concluded therefore that he wished it, and would help in bringing it about. If they had known him better they would not have made such a charge. He was too true a patriot to wish for his country's doom, and wept bitterly over his own predictions; but he was too true a man of God not to believe what God commanded him to speak. If he sought to escape it was not that he might help the enemy, but rather that he might weep for the stubbornness of his own people (xiii. 17).

His denial was not believed (14), so they smote him and imprisoned him (15). In this fact see (1) the common experience of God's true witnesses. The more faithfully a man denounces sin and foretells its punishment, or even witnesses against sin by a godly life, the more surely will he suffer persecution (Jno. xvi. 33; 2 Tim. iii. 12). For examples see Joseph, Daniel, Peter, and Paul. Patient endurance of such suffering is well pleasing to God, and according to the example of Christ (1 Peter ii. 20-23). Cultivate this spirit of fidelity to God at whatever cost to yourself. An old writer tells of a certain pilot who, as he began his voyage, said, "Father Neptune, you may sink me, or you may save me, but I'll hold my rudder true." Be true to God by life and testimony, and leave consequences with Him.

We see (2) the folly and inconsistency of the wicked. The presence of Jeremiah in the city had been a torment to the people, as God's true witnesses always are to the wicked (Rev. xi. 10). Then why not let him go gladly? Evidently they feared, while they hated him. They punished because they hated him; but they would not let him depart, because they feared they might need him. Even Enoch, whose bold witness was disregarded, was missed when God took him (Jude 14, 15, with Heb. xi. 5).

HIS PUNISHMENT LIGHTENED (16-21).—The imprisonment lasted "many days" (16), during which it would appear that famine was beginning in the city (21), probably because the Chaldeans were already besieging it. This fact would help to convince the king of the truth of Jeremiah's predictions, hence his secret interview with the prophet (17). Why should he ask for any further message from the Lord? His request was like the appeals made to God when men on a sick-bed are prompted by fear. When the terror goes, the desire to hear God's Word goes too. This is Jeremiah's opportunity. A favourable message—a prediction of smooth things—may secure the King's favour. Will he speak it? The favour of God is more important to him, hence he repeats the message for which the people hated him. If "the wrath of the king" is to be feared (Prov. xvi. 14, 15), the wrath of the King of kings is even more terrible. Jeremiah's fear of God delivered him from fear of Zedekiah.

Having delivered God's message to the King, Jeremiah pleads his own cause. His imprisonment is unjust, for he is innocent of any crime deserving of it. (18.) As the prophet of God, what could he do but deliver God's message? And if the message was full of threatening, why should the messenger suffer? Compare again Joseph and Daniel (Gen. xl. 14; Dan. vi. 22). Besides which, the event was already proving his predictions to be true (19). In the end it will be seen that we consult our highest happiness in heeding God's warnings, however terrible, and in disregarding lying prophets, however smooth their message. Better be troubled by an unwelcome truth than deceived by a comfortable lie.

The prophet's sufferings were not ended (xxxviii.), but for a while they were mitigated. God secured him relief through the timid king. He who cares for God's kingdom and righteousness will never find God unmindful of him.

Evangelistic Notes.

Southminster.—Mr. John Gibbons, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a fruitful evangelistic mission here, and several persons have been led to decision for Christ.

Milborne Port.—A very fruitful mission has been conducted here by Mr. Wm. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist. Great interest has centred in the work, and many conversions are recorded.

Brookland (Romney Marsh).—Mr. Dykes has concluded a fortnight's mission in this village, and his labours have been blessed. He is conducting a similar mission at Boughton-under-Blean.

Mr. George Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society gave four addresses at Victoria Hall, Ipswich, on Sunday week, and is now conducting a three weeks' mission at Hammersmith, for which prayer is asked.

Mr. Henry Thorne has just concluded a ten days' mission in Totnes, South Devon. Numbers professed to find peace in Christ, and it is believed that the churches will be strengthened as a result of the mission.

Devon Evangelistic Mission.—Missions have just been held by Mr. W. H. Dawe in Newtonpetrock, and Shebbear (North Devon), and God has been pleased, in answer to united prayer, to grant much blessing.

Ireland.—Rev. J. P. Cushing, of Liverpool, has just conducted a week's series of Gospel meetings in the parish of Donaghmore, co. Down, with excellent results, and Mr. Peter Donnelly, a convert from Romanism, has conducted a three weeks' similar series in the Methodist Church, Portrush.

Mr. John Elliott has, during the past fortnight, been preaching in the Town Hall, Corsham, and God is blessing his Word. The pastor of the Baptist chapel has placed his large chapel and schoolroom at the evangelist's disposal for any week nights when the hall is not available. As the numbers are increasing the meetings are to be continued a third week, and prayer is requested for still greater blessing.

Dover.—One of the most interesting missions ever held in this town has just been closed by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith. Large crowds assembled at the services, and on several occasions persons were unable to gain admittance to the building. The mission has been the means of reviving evangelistic work in the town, and large numbers have received spiritual benefit.

Stratford-on-Avon.—Mr. W. A. Meaton has just concluded a successful mission here. A daily prayer-meeting, for half an hour in the middle of the day, was well sustained, as were the after meetings. The Divine life in believers has been quickened, and many have been reconsecrated to the Master's service. Many conversions, including some young children, have gladdened the hearts of all. A band of young men preached in the streets before each service.

MISSION WORK IN NEW BRIGHTON.—"The past year has been one of increased activity, the Divine blessing has rested upon the work done, the meetings have been better attended, and more interest has been shown by Christians." The new report further details the aims and successes of the Mission, showing that the Sunday-evening Evangelistic service has been larger than formerly, the Bible-class fairly sustained, that the special meetings brought blessing to many, and work among the coastguards continues. The Hon. Sec. is Mr. Thomas A. Leigh, Lyndhurst, New Brighton.

BELFAST PRISON GATE MISSION.—The annual meeting was held last Friday, and the report showed that during the year 420 discharged prisoners breakfasted in the Home, and to many of these aid was also given, 108 took the abstinence pledge, and those of them living in the city have been regularly visited by the ladies of the committee. A Bible-class is held in the Home every Sunday afternoon, and also every Thursday evening. The jail is visited each morning, and also the police court, and the magistrates assist the committee every way they can. Altogether the mission is carrying on an excellent work.

ROSS BIBLE CARRIAGE MISSION.—The tenth annual report details the work done during the past year, including the towns visited, books and tracts distributed, open-air services conducted, and Bibles circulated. A young man was saved through reading a book entitled, "How Can I be Saved?" The writer quotes from an atheistical paper a passage showing the progress of freethinking: "New members are being enrolled, persons of means and influence are joining the movement, funds are flowing in more rapidly, and every branch of the work is being developed." And adds the following facts: "A short time ago a lady was seen throwing from her carriage neatly made-up parcels as she drove through a fashionable resort. On examination they were found to contain infidel literature of the most blasphemous character." On these and other facts Mr. John Coates, Landseer House, Ross, founds an appeal for aid toward maintaining the free and extensive circulation of the Bible and all Christian literature which is fitted to meet and to counteract the poisonous influence of infidel tracts and books.

After Influenza.

The resultant weakness of this depressing complaint will surely disappear if a short course of Guy's Tonic be resorted to. Guy's Tonic increases the appetite, strengthens the stomach, regulates the liver, gives tone to the nervous organization, and by imparting vitality, strength, and energy to the entire muscular and mental systems, makes the feeble and delicate vigorous, robust, and strong. The weary brain, the languid nerve, and the prostrate muscular frame receive support and capacity for renewed exertion.

THE REV. E. CORNEILLE, writing from the Manse, Donegal, Ireland, says:—"I have derived wonderful benefit from the Guy's Tonic you sent me. After taking a first bottle I ordered a second, and since I have finished that bottle I have been free from indigestion. I have recommended it to several members of my congregation, and they have experienced great good from its use."

THE REV. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., writes on February 10, 1892, to the proprietors of Guy's Tonic:—"I have myself used some of your medicine with considerable benefit, and believe it to be a really excellent Tonic."

MR. W. H. GLEDHILL writes from Leeds:—"I beg to inform you that being a sufferer from what is generally termed Indigestion, have found great relief after taking a course of Guy's Tonic. I suffered severely from dizziness, headache, and a general feeling of weariness and uneasiness. I am pleased and very grateful to say these symptoms seem to have completely gone."

TO ANY ONE DESIRING to test our remedies, we will send, securely packed in a special box, a bottle of Guy's Tonic, together with a free sample box of Guy's Fruit Pills and complete "Guide to Digestion," containing simple instructions as to the Guy's Tonic Treatment, post paid, for 2s. 9d. Address all letters to Guy's Tonic Company, 4, Ludgate-circus, London, E.C. Guy's Tonic is sold retail of all Chemists, at 2s. 9d. per bottle, and Guy's Fruit Pills at 1s. 1½d. per box.

Temperance Notes.

There are eleven hundred Juvenile Temples in the United Kingdom, with 82,906 young adherents.

The Juvenile Branches of the Church of England Temperance Society number 3469, with 416,280 members.

Rev. Charles Garrett, in presenting the annual report of his Liverpool Mission, says the great enemy the Mission has to contend with is drink.

Mr. Alexander Guthrie reminds Christian electors that there must be no shrinking from duty, in dealing with the drink traffic. Prohibition will work wonders, and make reformation easy.

The first anniversary of the Woodford Temperance Union was celebrated at the Grove-road Mission Hall on Wednesday (3rd). Addresses were given by Messrs. W. P. Forbes, F. Cowley, and Rev. D. W. Barr.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, who has recently been investigating the causes of suicide, puts alcoholic intoxication first as the cause of that crime, because it disposes first to the crime and then determines towards it.

Mr. William Noble, at a great meeting held last week in the People's Palace, said emphatically that the impregnable rock of the temperance movement was total abstinence. Take that away, and the fabric came to the ground.

The Sheffield Women's Christian Temperance Association was addressed at the Montgomery Hall on "Save the Children," by Mrs. Ormiston Chant, who urged women to do all they could to keep strong drink out of the home-life.

It is said that the railroad managers of Holland have found it impossible to man the switches with men who can be depended upon to let liquor alone, and have accordingly substituted women, Not an accident, it is said, has occurred since as a result of carelessness.

The Boston Traveller, in an article on "Moderate Drinking," says: "We feel it our duty to say distinctly that no agency is so effectually baffling the efforts to save the young men of our land from moral and physical death as is fashionable drinking, assumed to be moderate."

We are glad to report that Dr. F. R. Lees is recovering in a very satisfactory manner from his recent illness. The veteran Temperance advocate has been brought safely through a dangerous crisis without the aid of any stimulant save a slight preparation of ammonia.

Mr. T. B. Fox, J.P., has contributed an excellent paper on this subject to The Western Temperance Herald for February, which recommends that Parliamentary candidates should be asked to support a repeal of the Acts which enable grocers and confectioners to sell alcoholic drinks.

Mrs. Eynon reports during January the formation of branches of the British Women's Temperance Association at Petersfield, Neath, and Abergavenny; and Miss Heddinott, during the same period, has addressed twenty-two meetings, gained forty-five pledges, and seventy-two new members.

A largely-attended meeting of the City of London Total Abstainers' Union was held on Thursday week, at the warehouse of Messrs. Copestake, Lindsay, Crampton and Co., Bow-churchyard. Mr. W. W. Thompson and Rev. G. Ernest Thorn gave addresses. On Tuesday a similar meeting was held at Messrs. Wates, Hinton, and Dew's, Falcon-avenue.

While wealthy men were losing money last year, and perhaps stinting their consumption of such luxuries as wine, the lower or spirit-drinking classes consumed more than ever. The Inland Revenue Office have compiled a statement showing that the quantity of spirits retailed for consumption as beverage last year was 30,744,209 gallons, compared with 29,410,431 gallons in 1890. This was also a great increase on the consumption of the previous year.

On Saturday, the first meeting of a series in celebration of the fourteenth anniversary of the introduction of the Blue Ribbon movement was held at Hoxton Hall, under the presidency of Mr. Wm. Noble, an address being given by Mr. J. Louis Fenn, of the National Temperance League. On Sunday Mr. J. W. Jones conducted the Gospel Temperance meeting, at which Mr. Noble spoke. On Monday Mrs. J. Christie Mackenzie presided over a united meeting of the men's and women's societies.

The Liverpool Ladies' Temperance Association celebrated its twenty-second anniversary on Thursday week at the Liverpool Town Hall. Councillor T. D. Lawrence read the report, which stated that during the year there had been 4357 visits, paid by missionaries and others; sixty-four special cases visited in connection with police-courts and meetings; 232 pledges taken; 185 visits to city police-courts; fifty-two visits to county sessions courts; forty-six girls and women taken to different homes; three women put into lodgings; two aged captains put into lodgings; one boy sent to Boys' Home; thirty-six situations found for women and girls; two women restored to their husbands; and eight girls restored to parents and friends.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The meeting of the London Diocesan Conference has been fixed for Tuesday and Wednesday, April 26 and 27.

Rev. W. Allan, of Bermondsey, contributes to The Record an account of Bishop Crowther's death, which appears to have been very sudden.

Rev. R. W. Randall, of All Saints, Clifton, has been appointed Dean of Chichester in succession to Dr. Pigou. He is an extreme High Churchman.

The Bishop of Bedford held on Friday week, in Poplar Town Hall, a Conference of working men in order to discover how best the Church may reach their class.

Throughout the southern parts of England missionary meetings (F.S.M.) have been very generally held during the past week and this, and a deep interest has been widely shown.

Rev. W. Howard Coates, entering on his new charge at Christ Church, Plymouth, preached from the words, "I am determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." This he said, God helping him, was his determination, and he had firm faith that it was the secret of success for any Christian minister.

Concluding a visit to the Three Towns, the Bishop of Exeter on Friday week held a special service in the prison, and during the dinner hour gave a short address to the employes in a biscuit manufactory. In the evening a special service was held at St. Saviour's. The sermon was preached by the Bishop, who based an earnest spiritual discourse on John xiv. 27.

By permission of Lord and Lady George Hamilton, a course of four lectures are being given at the Admiralty, Whitehall, at three o'clock, on Tuesdays, February 16 and 23, and on March 1 and 8, on "The Canon and Authenticity of the Gospels," by Rev. H. E. J. Bevan, Gresham Professor of Divinity. Applications for tickets may be made to branch secretaries, or to Rev. Blomfield Jackson, 29, Mecklenburg-square.

In Manchester Cathedral Rev. G. S. Reaney has opened an Evidential series of lectures, his subject being "If not Christ, What?" Take Christ, the great spiritual force, out of this century, and what an abyss remained! If the historic fact was a fable, if the spiritual force was a myth, if Christ be rejected both as a fact and force, what should take his place with men and for men? Whom should we put in his place? For a thousand years there had been no pretender to that high and lofty throne. If we did not accept Christ, then nothing remained but self, each man thus becoming the profoundest egotist and ranking himself the spiritual force of the day as greater than Christ.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The P.S.A. Movement has just been inaugurated in Coventry.

Rev. W. Hardy Harwood, M.A., the newly-appointed co-pastor with Dr. Allon at Union Chapel, Islington, commenced his ministry there on Sunday morning.

Rev. Dr. Newth, speaking last week at Harecourt Chapel, traced the office of deacon from Apostolic times, and showing that the New Testament dwells chiefly on what deacons ought to be, rather than do.

The manual of New Court Chapel (Rev. W. Pierce), which extends to nearly one hundred closely-printed pages, gives detailed reports of the numerous organisations of which this church is the centre.

Stapleton-road Sunday-schools, Bristol (Rev. J. James), have celebrated their twenty-fifth anniversary. In the schools there are 1822 scholars, and 101 teachers, nearly all of whom had been formerly scholars in these schools.

The London Missionary Society on Monday last held a meeting in East Parade Chapel, Leeds, the principal speakers being Rev. R. F. Horton (London) and Professor Armitage (Bradford). Mr. Horton urged the importance of keeping missionary work in the forefront, and advocated the training of children in a love of missionary enterprise.

The professors and students of the two London Congregational colleges, including about seventy young men consecrated to the Christian ministry, assembled on Friday week in their respective institutions, and were addressed on the missionary movement by missionaries and pastors, whose words produced a general and deep impression.

In connection with a special mission just completed at Sion Chapel, Whitechapel-road, E., the pastor, Rev. R. Mackay, who has recently returned from a visit to the Antipodes, gave a "treat" to over 400 poor children gathered in from the neighbourhood. Addresses were given by Mr. Walter Hazell, Captain Clarke, R.N., and others. On the previous Monday a special tea was given to over 200 "mothers."

According to the "Bishopsgate Chapel Illustrated Monthly," whose editor ought to be well informed, steps are being taken for the removal of the Fetter-lane Chapel to some growing suburb. "It is to be hoped," adds the writer, "that all difficulties in the way may ultimately be overcome. So close to the City Temple there is scant occasion for another church of our order, while in the suburbs there is a very urgent and pressing need."

By the sudden death of Mr. Wm. Gibson the church at St. Petersburg has been deprived of its senior deacon. He was without exception the best known and most respected person in the British community, and by his kindness and gentleness made himself a friend of all. The sailors trading to St. Petersburg will, when the season opens, miss a good friend, for his house was always open to them, and he was ever ready to assist them. He was the moving spirit in the effort to found a Sailors' Institute at St. Petersburg, and promised £100 towards the erection of a suitable building.

Dr. Allon, speaking in the Merchants' Lecture last week on "The Ground of Social Obligation," said that Christianity had been instrumental in putting down a thousand iniquities, and in quickening the social conscience, which was far more intolerable of the lesser wrongs which remained unredressed than it used to be to the greater wrongs which have been removed. Wrongs which were formerly unresisted would now cause revolution. This was simply because religion had nurtured a spirit of brotherhood. Never was the cry for the redress of wrong so clamorous and universal than it was to-day. Religion in a thousand ways nurtured the mind and heart, and with it the practical remedying of wrongs must come.

BAPTIST.

The church at Ilfracombe received last year forty-four new members.

The Ashford Baptist church reports 256 members and an income for the past year of £630.

The Sunday-schools in Wales had raised before the close of last year £2263 towards the Centenary Fund.

At a special meeting at Brown-street Chapel, Salisbury, £250 was subscribed in aid of the Baptist Missionary Centenary Fund.

On Sunday and Monday week, Rev. J. E. Shepherd celebrated the fifth anniversary of his settlement at John-street, Bedford-row.

Rev. George P. McKay, from Great Yarmouth, was publicly recognised as the pastor of Devonshire-square Church, Stoke Newington, on Wednesday last week.

Mr. J. D. Jones and Mr. Richard Hughes, brothers-in-law, were last week buried together at Carmarthen. They were fellow-deacons and co-trustees of Penuel Chapel in that town.

At the annual meeting of the Enfield Baptist Church (pastor, Rev. George W. White), held last week, it was reported that 91 persons had been received into membership during the year.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown wishes to remind former members and friends of the East London Tabernacle that next Monday (22nd) is the annual "Thanksgiving Day," when he hopes to hear from many and so maintain the happy fellowship of past years.

A building at Birmingham formerly used as a circus and lately as a chapel was put up for sale by auction the other day. The bidding reached £1190, but it was not sold, and the trustees now think of renovating it and using it again as a place of worship. It has been closed for twelve months.

METHODIST.

The Handsworth students have just held their missionary anniversary.

Special services in support of the London Mission have been held in Newcastle-on-Tyne, South Shields, Houghton-le-Spring, and Crook.

At Wakefield last week, Rev. Thomas and Mrs. Champness gave interesting addresses in connection with the missionary anniversary.

The Hull Mission is providing eight hundred breakfasts per week for its poor children. About 160 urchins gather in the breakfast room every morning; and of these 109 are fatherless.

Rev. Dr. Greeves, in his inaugural address to the students of the Westminster Training College, dwelt forcefully on the value of good reading in moulding the mind and directing the energies.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, speaking last week at Nottingham, remarked that "Missions depended not on resolutions that might be passed, or speeches that might be made, but upon the spiritual life and devotion of our churches."

On Sunday last a twelve days' mission, preceded by a week of special prayer, was commenced at Throckly, Newcastle, by Rev. David Knapp, to quicken the life of the Church, to win the unsaved for Christ, and to attract to God's house many who seldom cross its threshold.

A valuable endowment of £10,000, left by the late Mr. Hugh Henry Boyd, has been settled by the Educational Endowment Commissioners in connection with the Belfast Town Mission, and has been vested in four trustees, for the promotion of the religious and secular education of the Presbyterian poor of Belfast.

On Sunday last, two excellent sermons were preached in the Haverfordwest Wesleyan Chapel, by Rev. Dr. Maclean, Pioneer Missionary to the Blackfoot Indians, who, in the afternoon, gave an address to the Sunday-schools of various denominations. On the following day, Dr. Maclean lectured in the Wesleyan Schoolroom on "Life among the Cowboys," narrating, in a very graphic and fascinating manner, his own experiences in the Wild West.

Through the operation of the Methodist Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund, the chapels in London have been increased from sixteen to ninety-five. No fewer than one hundred cases have been assisted, and the total sum paid in grants and in loans without interest has exceeded £200,000. Three chapels are now in course of erection, and twenty sites are waiting for occupation. The fund needs £30,000 per annum merely to keep pace with the growth of London, and will even then be leaving untouched 450 chapels now in arrears, including fifty-five sub-districts, some of them of 60,000 inhabitants, where there is no Methodist service of any kind, and 2,000,000 of people in the heart of Christendom that never enter a place of worship, and are practically abandoned to infidelity and all the resultant social and national evils.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Richard Leitch has just closed a ten days' mission in the Dudley Church.

Rev. Duncan Sillars, late of Haverstock-hill, will enter on his charge at Merchiston, Edinburgh, on the 25th inst.

At the annual meeting of the St. John's-wood congregation evidence appeared of satisfactory progress during the past year.

On Sunday Rev. A. Connell, of Westbourne-grove, preached the monthly Gaelic sermon in Whitfield Church, Drury-lane.

The Presbytery have adopted the report of the committee placing Mr. Courthope Todd in charge of the Whitfield Church, to be worked as a mission.

Rev. R. M. Thornton reported last week to the Presbytery that the Foreign Mission Fund shows an increase of £2,300 for the year 1891 as compared with 1890.

The mission carried on by the St. Columba congregation in Kirkstall-road, Leeds—a rapidly-growing artizan district—has lately proved remarkably successful.

At a mission conference of ministers and delegates in Manchester last week, it was resolved that special efforts should be made to deepen the missionary interest.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Isaac Sharp has left India for Japan and China, Dr. Dixon still accompanying him.

The Manchester Adult School reports at its annual meeting encouraging progress during the past year.

E. W. Brooks and F. W. Fox have, since their return from Russia, been actively engaged in addressing meetings in various large centres, with successful results.

Six ladies connected with the Friends reside in Forster House, Tottenham, spending their time in visiting among the homes of the very poor, and assisting at the Medical Mission.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

It is said that the sum of £10,000 has been promised towards the re-establishing of a separate bishopric of Connor.

The agents of the Belfast Town Mission paid four thousand visits during the past month, although some of the staff were laid aside with influenza.

A training home to accommodate twelve ladies who wi

DORCAS THIMBLE

HORNER'S PATENT

STERLING SILVER

"THE QUEEN,"
May 8, says:—

"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these almost indispensable work table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being Silver, and the intermediate Steel; these three are all struck up together, forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

Treasurer and Chairman of Council—THOMAS B. MILLER, Esq. Chairman of Finance Committee—HENRY A. CAMPBELL, Esq.
Chairman of Hospital Committee—FREDERICK TREVES, Esq., F.R.C.S.

THE lives of the fisher-folk are risked—ay! and lost, too—in summer as well as in winter; but when the stern cold is on the sea, fierce gales raging, accidents happening, and, all too often,

"The air is full of farewells to the dying,
And mournings for the dead," it is well that the smacksmen, their lot, and their needs, should be specially thought of. The Christian must be anxious for their spiritual condition, and the philanthropist will care for their general well-being.

OBJECTS OF THE MISSION:

THE PHYSICAL, SOCIAL, MORAL, & SPIRITUAL BENEFIT OF FISHERMEN IN THE NORTH SEA & OTHER WATERS.

ELEVEN MISSION & HOSPITAL VESSELS ARE NOW AFLOAT. OVER 8,000 CASES SURGICALLY TREATED IN 1891.

Amount required for General Purposes, nearly £80 for every working day.

"A genuine effort of humanity."—Lancet. "One of the most remarkable philanthropic enterprises of recent times."—Nautical Magazine
"One of the most original and successful Missions of modern times."—Methodist Recorder. "A splendid Christian work."—The Christian.

IMPORTANT WORK FOR TEACHERS OF THE YOUNG.

220 Pages, Crown 8vo. Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Children's Meetings:

AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

By LUCY J. RIDER and NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.

FOURTH THOUSAND.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON says:—"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the blackboard; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Blackboards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water and what more can we say of Addresses?"—Sword and Trowel.

"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."
The Teacher at Work.

By REV. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

With Life-like Portrait. Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Superior Edition. Cloth Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"An invaluable work. The price is low at half-a-crown. It is the book which the present period needs. It is solid, plain, conclusive argument. To spread such a treatise as this will be a very gracious work, and the results must be beneficial."
Sword and Trowel.

"A very popular treatment of some important questions connected with the evidences of Christianity. The work is one of the very best we have seen for the people, and may be eminently useful also to young preachers and Sunday-school teachers."
Christian Commonwealth.

"It is one of the very best aids to faith we know; no young man sceptically inclined can resist its conclusions, if he will conscientiously read it through. A book to read and pass on with a prayer of hope."—Illustrated Missionary News.

"Dr. Pierson's style is simple, terse, manly and full of soul; and he has at his command a singular fertility of illustration."—Literary World.

"We affix our seal to the book as one of genuine and definite value."—The Rock.

THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST.

THE ESSENTIAL PREPARATION FOR ALL CHRISTIAN WORK.
A few words on ACTS I. and II.

By REV. BARCLAY F. BUXTON, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo., 40 pages. Paper cover, 2d., cloth gilt, 6d.
London: S. W. Partridge & Co., 9, Paternoster Row.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan & Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. R. A. Torrey, Superintendent of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago.

☞ Our advertising friends will kindly note that, commencing with the next issue, the Advertisement Department of The Christian will be under the management of Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, E.C., to whom all communications respecting advertisements should be addressed.

If, on the one hand, error is propagated by misinterpreting Holy Scripture, on the other hand both error and superstition abound, in consequence of systematic neglect to read the Book. A correspondent, who mourns the too prevalent ignorance, writes:—

One of the causes of modern departure from the faith is found in the general neglect of Bible study among professing Christians. Too terribly true is the statement I have heard enunciated by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, that "the Bible is the most awfully unread book in our day."

Could it be possible that unblushing Popery (no longer under the thin veil of Ritualism), and all the horde of sceptical blasphemies, doctrines of devils, and vain deceits of seducing spirits, would take root in our midst if the people were grounded in the most elementary truths and doctrines of God's Word? I think the practice of past days might well be renewed, and prizes given to the young for committing to memory portions of Holy Scripture.

Although ignorance of the type here specified abounds, we rejoice to know that on all hands faithful men are encouraging the people to study their Bibles. As sure as the heights and depths of the heavenly doctrine are explained to spiritually-minded people, the desire will be fostered for further knowledge, which only the Word itself can supply. And a Bible-reading Church will testify for Christ with a fidelity and power that cannot co-exist with a superficial and fragmentary acquaintance with God's ways and will, as described and revealed in the Inspired Volume.

Christian duty no less than Christian love demands that those who, in a Godly spirit and with befitting zeal, devote their time and powers to the direction of the work of our churches, should be relieved of anxiety as to daily needs. An esteemed correspondent writes to us:—

As a rule we do not half realise the solemnity of our relations towards our ministers, nor inquire how God views the matter. Under the Mosaic economy: "Unto the tribe of Levi Moses gave no inheritance; the Lord God of Israel was their inheritance"; and their maintenance was to be found in the offerings of the people to whom they ministered. Not only was the proportion to be allotted to them specified, but the people were directed to share with them all their joys and good things (Deut. xxvi. 11). Similarly, of the Christian ministry, it is written: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel shall live of the Gospel."..."Let him that is taught in the Word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." "If we have sown unto you in spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?"

True ministers of the Gospel do not seek earthly advancement; nevertheless, their temporal needs are assuredly their due. Our correspondent proceeds:—

Is not the neglect of the churches in this matter the symptom of a disease deep down in the heart? "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Our appetite for spiritual food would be largely stimulated if we were to make it our daily practice to pray for those who are set over us in the Lord.

The reproof and the appeal of our correspondent demand earnest and generous consideration. If the churches are too exacting, and if in many cases they require bricks without supplying straw, they must expect to be treated on the same principle as the Egyptian king, unless they consider and amend their ways, and, like their Father in heaven, let grace reign through righteousness.

But may not Christ be saying to many of these ministers, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth"? For "the same constituency which has seven thousand ordained missionaries on the foreign field has a hundred and twenty-seven thousand ordained ministers on the home field." Well, therefore, might the President of an American Missionary Union say, "Brethren, I would that one-half of our ministers would give themselves to the work of evangelising the heathen. It would bring to our churches an unparalleled prosperity."

One of the most important improvements in the R.V. is effected by the correction of an error of the A.V., in Eph. iv. 11, 12, verbally slight, but vital in its result. The Revised Version reads:—

He gave some apostles and some prophets and some evangelists and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ.

Has this ever been accepted as the reason why these gifts were given? To make every saint a minister, to perfect every one unto the work of ministering, not in order only to what we call the edifying of the saints, but to the building up of the body of the Christ—seeking the stones of the temple, which is his body among all peoples and nations and tongues and kindreds.

So far from gifted men training and perfecting the gifts of others, finding opportunities for their exercise, pressing them out into service, it is often the case that nothing can be done without "the minister." If he be unwell, or called away by some sudden circumstance, instead of having around him a band of men whose hearts God hath touched and whose mouths He hath opened, post and telegraph are put to work to find some one to occupy the pulpit, because the gifted absentee has not perfected the saints under his charge unto the work of ministering unto the building up of the body of Christ. And so, instead of the saints being perfected unto the work of ministering, all their ministering is done by proxy by the minister, who, if conscientious, is often overworked, and generally underpaid.

It is certainly noteworthy what prominence is being given, in widely-divided centres, to the great importance of missionary work in China. The February number of The Missionary Review of the World has no fewer than three leaders on the importance of winning China for Christ, each of which is of singular interest; and there is quite a consensus of opinion, there and elsewhere, that with faithfulness on the part of the Church of Christ there will soon be a mighty ingathering in China. Writing in the same journal, Dr. Gracey would fain prepare the churches for the harvest time in China, and, as Bishop Thoburn has said, "if this world is to be saved, there must come a time when the heathen shall be gathered in by the hundred thousand—by the million." Another writer points out that our timid faith may soon be shamed into bolder belief.

The new measure of the French government in regard to associations, copies of which have recently been put in circulation in the Chamberr, is a somewhat drastic one, as might perhaps be expected in the present condition of political feeling in France. It seems to be aimed primarily at the nunnery and the monastery, as it provides that every association, religious or otherwise, shall submit to the Government, not only its statutes and rules, but also an explicit statement of its resources. Moreover, it provides that the law shall declare, from time to time, the amount of property that a community shall have the right of possessing. Another clause invests the authorities with power for entering and inspecting at any time premises belonging to associations, that is to say, convents and other places of the kind. Perhaps, by-and-by, the need for legislation of this kind will be recognised in this country also, when we have learned to distinguish the difference between liberty and licence.

The Excise returns for the year 1891 are well calculated to depress all who have the moral and spiritual welfare of these islands at heart, for they show a very large increase in the consumption of intoxicating drink in England and Wales, Scotland and Ireland. In the United Kingdom, there was an increase in spirits of 1,333,778 gallons over the figures of the preceding year, and in beer, 430,488 barrels over the number for 1890. In Ireland there was an increase all round, as the returns show the national consumption to have exceeded that of the previous year by 51,204 gallons of spirits and 67,313 barrels of beer. We may, therefore, confidently look for a proportionately larger outlay in the repression and punishment of crime and the relief of poverty, for it is only a fictitious revenue which reaches the Chancellor of the Exchequer through the medium of the national sin.

From another point of view this growth of drinking is even more serious, for the Drink Bill for the United Kingdom last year was a hundred and forty and a quarter millions sterling, a sum equal to about seventy-five shillings per head of the entire population, children included; and no one can look thoughtfully upon this terrible expenditure, and its increase of a million and three quarters over that of the former year, without seeing behind it a large proportion of the "submerged tenth," or without seeing in front of it the evils and sorrows which the wasted millions otherwise might go far to remove.

Public attention has recently been directed to the painful disease of the jaws which is contracted by some of the women engaged in the manufacture of common lucifer matches. The disease was still more prevalent among these workers in days when matches were made in a small way in houses and living apartments; and, in spite of the many precautions which the Factory Acts enforce today, cases of this necrosis, or "phossy jaw," frequently occur. The manufacture of those matches which strike only on the box is not attended with these sad risks and consequences; and we would urge all who sympathise with such workers, and desire to mitigate this evil, to discountenance the use of the old-fashioned matches, which have, in some quarters, retained their popularity simply because they may be ignited by rubbing on any surface.

We have from time to time given details of the quiet but earnest mission work going on in Greece, amongst the most prominent labourers being Mr. Kalopothakes, the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society. While in the past some opposition has been shown by officials of the Greek Church, little actual violence has been offered to the Protestants. All the more regret will, therefore, be felt for the outbreak last week. A recent telegram says—

The Protestant church which was attacked on February 15 by the mob had only lately been erected, the cost of construction being defrayed by subscriptions in England and America.

The Evangelical pastor is a Greek subject, and lives in a house attached to the church. He has lost everything. The other minister who was present at the service, and was maltreated by the mob, is named Kalopothakes.

Many of the rioters were masked. After forcing an entrance into the church, they dragged all the chairs, fittings, and books, and also the harmonium, into the square, where they burned them in a huge bonfire. Petroleum was poured on the heap of furniture and other things, in order to make them burn well. The interior of the church is a complete wreck. Nothing remains but the bare walls. Two or three members of the congregation were pursued by the mob, and had to seek refuge in the British Consulate.

A Good Foundation.

Know ye not that a prince and a great man has—not fallen, but gone to be with Christ, which is far better? Died Spurgeon as a fool dieth? The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God; but Spurgeon sanctified the Lord God in his heart, and was always ready to give an answer to every one that asked him a reason of the hope that was in him, with meekness and fear. Neither as a man falleth before wicked men so did he fall; but God drew in his breath, and the spirit of his beloved son and faithful witness returned to God who gave it.

Very tenderly all Christians sympathise with the heroic-hearted wife, and with the sons, in their sore bereavement, and not less warmly with the sorrow-stricken church mourning for its pastor, revered and loved as few pastors have been revered and loved. But "not in cruelty, not in wrath, the reaper came that day." Forty years of unremitting service in a suffering body called for rest. Far better that the good soldier of Jesus Christ should be called to his reward in the zenith of his fame than that he should have continued in life with enfeebled body and weakening mind.

Removed, as he has been, in the wisdom of eternal love, he, being dead, will yet speak more impressively than before. The power of God in the Christian preacher and philanthropist has been felt and proved by thousands; but the power of God working in the hidden depths of his own spirit has been less appreciated and understood. The sounding of the deep within, the profound searching of his inmost spirit, the light let into the recesses of his being by the candle of the Almighty, the tears which were his meat day and night—these never can be known by the unthinking crowd; nor, on the other hand, the deep and intimate fellowship of the adorable God with his loyal servant and his faithful child.

These are days of shallow experience, but it is to be hoped that the death of this man of God in the midst of his days will lead to the study of the inner life from whence proceeded those unexhausted streams of truth. As an example of his deep convictions, the following is extracted from one of his early sermons:—

Had He been a changing God, ye had been amongst the filthiest of the filthy, and the vilest of the vile. Cannot you remember in your life seasons similar to those I have felt? I have gone right to the edge of sin; some strong temptation has taken hold of both my arms, so that I could not wrestle with it. I have been pushed along, dragged as by an awful Satanic power to the very edge of some horrid precipice. I have looked down, down, down, and seen my portion; I quivered on the brink of ruin. I have been horrified, as, with my hair upright, I have thought of the sin I was about to commit, the horrible pit into which I was about to fall. A strong Arm has saved me. I have started back and cried, O God, could I have gone so near to sin and yet come back again? Yet I am here unconsumed because the Lord changes not.

As illustrating the same phase of his experience in later years, this circumstance is told us by one who owed his spiritual life to him in the Park-street days:—

Mr. Spurgeon, and the family by whom he was entertained on one of his preaching visits, had retired to rest. In the small hours his hostess heard groans, which proceeded from his room. Her husband went to enquire the cause, fearing to find him in bodily pain. He found Mr. Spurgeon still undressed, prostrate on the floor, in evident distress, and anxiously expressed his fear that he was ill. "No, my brother," said the preacher, "leave me alone with God. I shall be right presently." It was not bodily pain, but painful exercise of soul. Men of God suffer thus. One day a member of the household of the saintly William Pennefather knocked at his study door. She was not immediately admitted, and when the door was opened she saw that his face was wet with tears. She asked the cause of his distress, and he replied, with broken voice, "My sins! my sins!"

It was these intense experiences which caused Mr. Spurgeon's tenacious grasp of what have been described as the doctrines of grace. Out of the deep and horrible pit he cried, and God answered him. The comforting Spirit showed him the righteousness of God vindicated and manifested in Jesus Christ crucified and risen, and the assurance of his own justification was as real and deep as his conviction of sin by the same Spirit.

Have we not somewhat forgotten 1859 and the years that followed? Then the foundation truth of justification was deeply laid, and souls who had been terribly convicted of sin rejoiced with great joy in their justification by union with the crucified and risen Christ. Their gaze was on Him and not on self.

After a time it came to be said that Justification is only the vestibule, and Sanctification is the temple. This may not be altogether incorrect, but the tendency of the illustration naturally is to depreciate Justification. This it has certainly done, and as compared with those days there is far less of deep conviction of sin, and less of that satisfying knowledge of Christ and his work, which we generally ascribe to the reception of foundation truths.

Consequently, houses are built upon the surface of the ground without a foundation dug down deep into the soul. It was this deep inward work which made Spurgeon such a mighty preacher. He could never preach without telling men how to be saved, because he had had such vivid experience of what it was to be lost.

In some good and earnest Christian work which we might specify, there is superstructure without adequate foundation—and "holiness" occupies more attention than the Foundation other than which can no man lay, which is Christ Jesus. Is it not thus that "holiness teaching" can, in some cases, go hand-in-hand with progress-of-humanity teaching; while regeneration is not insisted on, and the new creature in Christ Jesus is scarcely even heard of; and while such deep experiences as those recorded of C. H. Spurgeon are unknown—experiences which laid the foundation of and gave continuance and coherence to his faithful and fruitful ministry?

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PRAYER.

Mr. J. A. Stooke, of the C.I.M., Chefoo, writes:—"It has struck me that we need more definite, distinct prayer for the workers in China, Africa, India, and elsewhere. The 'wear and tear' upon the spiritual life of a missionary in heathen lands is an awful reality. We have our rock 'Christ Jesus' to hide in. Yet, the other fact remains, and may it send many to their knees, so that we may be more intelligently prayed for day by day, and week after week.

"Many, I am glad to know, are interesting themselves in foreign missionary work, through direct communication with those on the field. May I emphasize the importance of this branch of service, for I personally know it to be specially helpful? Might I also suggest special prayer for our children? As they grow up, the question what to do with them is a pressing one. Heathen surroundings are often very detrimental, but with care and years of watchfulness, the difficulties are greatly minimised. But after they have grown, the question causes no little anxiety to the parents' hearts.

"In the case of boys desiring to give themselves to the Lord's work, let prayer go up, not only that friends may be raised up to assist in their education at home, but also that only those be encouraged who really are fit for such exalted service. I know of two cases now for which prayer will be greatly valued.

"Lastly, there should be far more individual responsibility as to the sending out and support of workers for the foreign field. The cure for any seeming apathy in this direction would be the Heaven-directed prayer, 'Lord, what wilt Thou have me to give?' Individuals with means, and churches also, might find this plan a great means of grace. Prayer then should arise for more hearts to be moved in this way."

THE GOSPEL.

The Gospel is fresh, though age after age has passed and one system of religion and philosophy has died after another, because before the Gospel presents salvation it presents a Saviour. It is not to Christianity that we owe the blessings of our modern civilisation, ingathered by ungrateful and often unconscious hands, but to Christ. The Gospel is but the body of which the Living Word is the soul.

FAITH AND LOVE.

The Christian's love advances by equal paces with his faith, as the heat of the day with the shining of the sun. Faith, like Mary, sits at the feet of Christ to hear his sermons; and love, like Martha, compasses Him about with services. Faith is the great receiver, and love is the great disburser. We take in all by believing, and we lay out all by loving. Faith at first works love, and then it works by love; as the workman sets an edge upon his tools, and then carves and cuts with them. —*Wm. THE NEED FOR PATIENCE.

The nearer time approaches its end, the more need there is of patience. Let us strengthen our patience by confidence, and by a life consecrated to God. An early Christian bishop and martyr wrote in his last hours to the Christian Church at Rome, "Fare ye well in the patience of Christ until the end." The Apostle desired to send us the same blessed greeting in the words, "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God and into the patient waiting for Christ" (2 Thess. iii. 5).—The late Dr. Christlieb.

Is Christ's Coming Imminent?

BY HENRY VARLEY.

FIRST PAPER.

THE unwise and unscriptural attempt to fix dates for the great events connected with the Lord's second coming has tended to unsettle the minds of many believers in regard to the actual time of his glorious appearing. What is worse, it has led many to discredit the truth itself, and caused others to regard the subject simply as speculative, and to be avoided rather than intelligently studied and held fast.

To strengthen the faith of many of the Lord's people, and to aid those who have a limited knowledge of the Scriptures in regard to the glorious theme of Christ's coming kingdom, I put in order certain statements made by our Lord which confirm the fact that we, in the year 1892, are nigh to the end of this wicked and sinful age, and, therefore, near the coming glory of the Great King.

It is one thing to fix dates as to the day, month, or year of the Lord's personal appearing. It is quite another carefully to study as Daniel did by books (i.e., by Divine testimony) whereabouts upon the stream of time we are. Against the former we are distinctly warned (Mark xiii. 32). Concerning the latter our Lord counsels us to be on the alert, and not to sleep (Matt. xxiv. 32-33: Mark xiii. 37). There is nothing in the Scriptures, so far as I am aware, to justify the fixing of any day or date. Neither is there to justify neglect of the signs and proofs which the Lord Jesus has declared will precede his second coming to our salvation (Heb. ix. 28).

The prophet Daniel writes these remarkable words, "I, Daniel, understood by BOOKS the number of the years whereof the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, that He would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem" (Dan. ix. 2). It was not vain speculation, therefore, but the Divine will and guidance which Daniel dealt with when he looked forward to Israel's return from the Babylonish Captivity. The time was fixed and determined by God—viz., seventy years (see Jer. xxiv. 11, 12)—and the prophet was sure that the Divine will would be accomplished.

In the same definite way Daniel dealt with the existing conditions of bondage. He recognised that "as it is written in the law of Moses, all this evil is come upon us, yet made we not our prayer before the Lord our God, that we might turn from our iniquities, and understand thy truth (Dan. ix. 13). Indeed, the whole passage (verses 10—14) shows conclusively that the key which unlocked the position—viz., Israel's bondage in Babylon—was to be found in the writings of Moses.

MOSES AND MODERN CRITICISM.

Whatever modern criticism may advance concerning either the date or the authorship of the Pentateuch, it is obvious that Daniel believed that the testimony given by Jehovah to Moses nearly nine hundred years before the Captivity, and found in Leviticus xxvi., was the key to the whole situation. No more striking reproof was ever administered to the rationalising critics of our time than is found in verses 11 and 12. Daniel thus writes for Jehovah: "Yea, all Israel have transgressed thy law even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice; therefore the curse is poured upon us, and the oath THAT IS WRITTEN IN THE LAW OF MOSES the servant of God, because we have sinned against Him. And He hath confirmed his words, which He spake against us, and against our judges that judged us, by bringing upon us a great evil: for under the whole heaven hath not been done as hath been done upon Jerusalem" (Daniel ix. 10-14).

Following the admirable precedent given by the prophet, we search the books, and deal with a higher authority even than that of Daniel or Moses. The Lord Himself, instructing his disciples concerning the great interval of time which would elapse prior to his coming again and the reinstatement of Israel in the national position as his earthly executive, said, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES are fulfilled" (Luke xxi. 24). Now, the expression, "the times of the Gentiles," as really give a fixed, though protracted, date as the forty years' wandering in the wilderness, or the seventy years gave a definite period for Israel's captivity in Babylon. The question therefore arises, Can we be assured of the precise meaning of the phrase, and the exact number of the years herein defined and marked off?

We at once turn to the testimony given by the living God to his servant Moses in Leviticus xxvi., bearing date 1490 B.C. Here the threatenings and judgments are found concerning Israel, to which Daniel referred. Let it not be forgotten that they were made known 884 years before the judgments determined began to come to pass.

JEHOVAH'S SOLEMN WARNING.

We carefully notice that four times over—viz., in verses 18, 21, 24 and 28—the Eternal God repeats the solemn words of warning. The judgments are progressive, intense and protracted, and they culminate in the overthrow of the cities of Israel and the long-continued desolation of the land (see verses 31 to 38).

This prophecy from Jehovah, to whom is known "the end from the beginning," is now assured fact and Israelitish history. The twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus is to-day a concise statement of that which has happened unto Israel during the past 2500 years. The expression SEVEN TIMES denotes not only the intensity of the Divine judgments, but the lengthened period known to us as "the times of the Gentiles." Now, according to the mind of God revealed to Moses (Numbers xiv. 34), to Ezekiel (iv. 6), and to Daniel (ix. 24—26), a day stands either for a year, or, as in Nebuchadnezzar's personal experience, for an ordinary day.

In the two former cases cited the day represents a year. Thus interpreted A TIME represents 360 years—i.e., according to the measurement of the prophetic year, which is 360 days. "Seven times," therefore, give 360×7—a total of 2520 years. Now, in the light of Daniel's prophecy, our Lord's "times of the Gentiles," and Israel's history we are confronted with the fact that 2520 years was the period fixed by God for Israel's chastisement, judgment, and national rejection. It was to this term of years our Lord referred when He used the words, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles UNTIL the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled."

No one can fail to see the force and importance of this statement when read in the light of Daniel's "time, times and a half," as the great bisecting period of the seven times (Daniel xii. 7). No doubt the Hebrew words translated seven times in Leviticus xxvi. mean, primarily, intensity and fulness in regard to the threatened judgments. Conditioned, however, as those judgments were upon Israel's repentance or hardening of heart, it is obvious that their force and meaning in relation to time must be looked for, not in Leviticus, for there the time is veiled and hidden, but in Daniel, and from our Lord's words. Jewish history says the threatened SEVEN TIMES of Leviticus xxvi. meant in regard to fulness of time 2520 years

COMMENCEMENT OF ISRAEL'S JUDGMENT.

We are not in doubt as to the time of the commencement of Israel's judgment at the hands of Jehovah. We know that Nebuchadnezzar carried Jehoiakim and Israel away captive into Babylon, either in the year 605 B.C., or close to that very date. The date is, without question, substantially correct, and from that time onward no king of the line of David has ever sat upon the throne of Judah or Israel. Now, if we take the period 605 B.C., and add to the year 1892 A.D., we reach an aggregate of 2497 years, or, by this computation of historic fact, we are within twenty-five years of the close of the SEVEN TIMES fixed by the living God. as the period for Israel's judgment and the setting aside of Israel from her national position.

Now, it is remarkable that from the time that Zedekiah was carried away captive to Babylon no king of the house of David has reigned in Jerusalem. The fact is before us that the date of the beginning of the Babylonish captivity was the time of the commencement, at the instance of God, of Gentile supremacy in regard to government. The taking away of sovereignty from Israel was contemporary with its delegation into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar. Of this protracted period Hosea writes: "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image (or statue), and without teraphim. Afterward shall the children of Israel return to seek the Lord their God and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days" (ch. iii. 4, 5).

We are thus confronted with the fact that the times of the Gentiles" began when God's judgments upon Israel commenced. Daniel ii. proves this to a demonstration. The truth is that that which was foreview and prophecy in Leviticus xxvi. and in Daniel ii. has become history to-day. The great image which Nebuchadnezzar saw in vision was the figure given of God to illustrate the character, course, and duration of Gentile rule and supremacy during the 2520 years of Israel's judgment and national rejection. Well, therefore, might the Apostle of the Gentiles write to the Church of God in Rome: "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in" (Rom. xi. 25).

THE FOREVIEW OF GENTILE GOVERNMENT.

Inspired of God, Daniel gives the course and end of the times of the Gentiles. He portrays in the progressive development of the great image four distinct kingdoms. The King of Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar, was the first. "Thou art this head of gold" (v. 38). The Medo-Persian was the second. The Grecian was the third. The Roman, in two phases, imperial, and subsequently divided into ten kingdoms, the fourth. Therein is the complement and full development of the great image.

Deterioration in quality marks its progress. The gold gives place to silver, the silver to brass, the brass to iron, the iron to iron mixed with potter's clay. Instability, unfitness, and incompetency pertain to the great image, inasmuch as the living God declares that when the bound and limit of "the times of the Gentiles" is reached, the whole colossal image is to be suddenly and by supernatural power dashed to pieces.

The words which the living God gave to Daniel are conclusive: "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth" (Daniel ii. 34, 35).

Such is God's testimony concerning his rejection and judgment of Gentile authority and government, and we know that the time appointed for this supreme and tremendous crisis draweth nigh. Clearly the events are of sudden and Divine working. There could be no such thing as the gradual falling of "the stone." Thus is it written: "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shall dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel" (Psalm ii. 9).

THE FIFTH UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY.

The fifth monarchy gives the sovereignty of the Lord Jesus Christ over the whole earth, and it follows the close of the fourth kingdom. It is not contemporary with, but succeeds the breaking to pieces of the image. These are the words of the living God: "The stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth" (v. 35).

It is remarkable to observe how in the expression, "The times of the Gentiles," our Lord refers to and endorses the testimony which He gave to Moses and the prophetic statements spoken through Jeremiah, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea, and Zechariah. Nor this only, but the Lord has put into our possession an accurate determining measure, which proves that the end of Gentile rule is within twenty years, and that the treading down of Jerusalem, together with the persecutions and rejection of Israel, continue until "the times of the Gentiles" are run out. These conditions are fulfilled before our eyes.

Without fixing any date, therefore—for "of that day or hour knoweth no man"—we are instructed that the corrupt and dreary period of Gentile sovereignty and supremacy is all but over. The members of Christ's body, the Church, may, indeed, "lift up their heads, for their redemption draweth nigh." We are as certain of this as though, having started for Australia, we had been out from England thirty-nine days, the voyage usually occupying forty. Under such circumstances we should consider the voyage to be practically over, the land may appear in sight within twenty-four hours. In like manner we know not that the end of the world has come, but that the consummation of this "adulterous and sinful age" is at hand. Gentile government and existing earthly sovereignties are about to be "dashed to pieces" by the advent in overwhelming and supernatural judgment of the Lord Jesus Christ (Matt. xxiv. 29, 30).

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.

"This then is the message, that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." Taking these words as his text, Mr. Williamson, C.C., treasurer of the Billingsgate Mission, delivered, on Monday week, an address to a large company of Billingsgate fish porters and others, gathered together in the hall of the Billingsgate Christian Mission. After prayer by one of the men, Mr. Williamson told how he was "led to a knowledge of Christ" through the medium of this Mission, and the reading of a little book entitled "Immediate Salvation." This, he declared, was at a time when he was as far from being a "son of God" as the most depraved sinner, although to all appearances he was a Christian man, for he was a constant church-goer and a Sunday-school teacher, and he had secured for the use of this Mission the old rooms in Billingsgate Market, facing the waterside.

After, however, attending a few of the Mission services, God's Spirit came into his soul and showed him that his life had been a sham, and that if he was to claim sonship with God he must give up the world, whilst at the same time he was a worker in it. And then, having related his own experience, he urged those of his hearers who had not accepted "the gift of God," to do so that day, and to fight God's battle amongst their fellow men in Billingsgate. He pointed to some of the depravity which exists in the neighbourhood, and to lives which are being wasted in the effort to obtain wealth and enjoyment in this life, whilst the most important matter of all, salvation, is being entirely neglected. In the darkness which surrounded them, he said, he wanted the message to go out that "God is light," and he asked his hearers to be the message-bearers.

LAW CLERKS' CHRISTIAN UNION.—For many years previous to 1890 a number of law clerks asked why they could not start a Christian Union for the purposes of prayer and evangelistic effort. With the help of Mr. H. C. Nisbet, the esteemed secretary of the Lawyers' Prayer Union, the "Law Clerks' Christian Union" was inaugurated in April, 1890. Clerks above the age of 15 "engaged in the legal profession, or in any office or employment connected therewith, who, professing faith in the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ, according to the Holy Scriptures, and in obedience to his commandments, desire to witness for Him in their daily lives, and wish to join the Union for the purpose of mutual encouragement and united prayer," may become members. The annual subscription is 6s., which is employed in paying the expenses of the hall, social teas, &c. Mr. J. C. Allday, the honorary secretary, 35, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, will gladly send particulars on receipt of a stamped envelope.

THE "JESUS DOCTRINE" IN CHINA.

Rev. S. B. Farthing, Baptist missionary in China, in the February issue of The Missionary Herald, states that some time the year before last, among other inquirers, he had two men who were not content with being saved by the Gospel themselves, but bought Gospel books to distribute among their friends. They returned to their home at Chiao Cheng, a county-town forty miles from Tai Yuen Fu, and established a service for their neighbours in order that they might impart to them the knowledge of the true God. The two men were baptized last spring; and reports of their own meetings showed constant progress. The numbers attending in May were seventeen, in July forty.

As early as it was deemed wise Mr. Farthing visited Chiao Cheng. The blacksmith's house, to which he was directed, was the place of meeting for the inquirers. The idol niche was empty, and the plaster, on which had been set forth the high-sounding titles of the god, had been scraped off. Some little distance from the idol niche was a horizontal slip similar to what is usually seen above the idol, with the words, "The holy instruction of Jesus." Beneath this was a statement that all were welcome on condition that they neither spoke idle words, nor brought their opium with them, nor discussed the affairs of others, but came with sincere hearts to speak of the love of Christ and the things of heaven. The rest of the wall was placarded with Gospel tracts.

After the first Sunday service, conducted by Mr. Farthing, there was an earnest cry, "Establish a Mission cause here. We should welcome it." But the expense of rent, fuel, and light for the place of meeting, how did they propose to supply that? The following appeal was drawn up by the people themselves, Mr. Farthing adding a number of texts, that it might be clear that they were acting upon New Testament lines. "We, some forty Chiao Cheng men, having been enabled, by the help of God, to break off the opium habit, and to put our trust in the Christian doctrine, would like a mission cause established, so that we, who are brethren by bonds of love, and possessed of but one heart, might frequently meet together for mutual help and exhortation, all of which could only be to our highest profit. Our prayer is that God may increase our faith, love, and zeal, and help us by the preaching of his truth so to believe as that we all, by his grace, may obtain salvation. Therefore it is that we joyfully subscribe in order to aid the Mission."

The response to this from the over twenty persons present was sufficient to provide rent, fuel, and light for one year. It was hoped that the gifts of those who were not present would meet the expense of modestly furnishing one room as a chapel. Such incidents as this read like new chapters to the Acts of the Apostles. Mr. Farthing may well cherish the hope that a mission begun in such a manner will prove a centre of important work in the near future.

Sailors at Rio de Janeiro.

In July, 1890, the needs of the thousands of English-speaking sailors visiting Rio de Janeiro were laid on the hearts of a few Christian gentlemen, who paid for outfit and passage of Mr. Edward Wesson, a young man who gave up a lucrative employment in London, and went out in dependence on God. Without introduction or local influence of any kind, he has so won his way that he has now opened a Sailors' Home and Institute (with reading room, &c., and thirty beds) where there are Bethel services held twice on Sundays and during the week.

Mr. Wesson has lately been imprisoned, at the instigation of the crimps and lodging-house keepers, for keeping an unlicensed lodging-house; his efforts have considerably affected their unrighteous gains. The work is now causing much anxiety to its originators, who earnestly ask for the prayers and practical assistance of all who have the best interest of our sailors at heart. Any information will be given by the Hon. Sec. Colonel Hobbs, Carlisle.

IN THE PUBLIC-HOUSE.—A vicar in the North gives the following instance of the courage of a woman worker in carrying her Master's message under circumstances that might cause an inward tremor in the breasts even of one of the sterner sex:—In our densely-populated parish, with a very large number of public-houses, our C.P.A. woman worker is not only going from house to house visiting the sick, but is visiting every public-house, interesting the publicans and their customers as far as possible in Gospel truth. A few days ago she was speaking for three-quarters of an hour in the lowest public-house in our parish.

THE CHINESE MISSION IN LONDON.

Rev. George Piercy sends the following account of a group of Chinese now under his instruction, but soon to leave this country:—"They are twenty-two in number, sent by a leading firm in China to await the completion of a large new steamer recently built at Glasgow, and already they have been here six weeks. I have had a great deal of pleasant intercourse with them. They landed on a Sunday morning, and in the evening seventeen of their number were at my usual Sabbath evening's service in West India Dock-road. This at least shows their social desires. We had an interesting meeting, and at once we were in touch with one another.

"I hardly need say they are a picked lot of men, superior in many respects to the great mass of Chinese who come to London. Some have been almost daily at the mission-rooms, and have made marked progress; while on all occasions of religious service and teaching they have been most attentive. The Chinese missionary from Australia now so eloquently advocating the suppression of the opium trade, Mr. Cheok Hong Cheong, gave us a Sunday evening, and preached to his countrymen who gathered in the mission hall, and found them very ready hearers.

"I have great confidence that in the hearts of some of this special crew, truths have been lodged that will not be easily uprooted. In a week they will be away to Glasgow, followed by prayerful solicitude on the part of those who have met them here, and I would also ask earnest prayer on their behalf. We wish also that our Mission to the Chinese in London may be specially remembered on Friday evenings, when we have a prayer-meeting for it, and for the mission of Mr. Lethaby to Kerak. In 1891 there were 3903 visits paid by Chinese to the mission rooms. We look for a blessing on this work." Communications should be made to Rev. George Piercy, 276, Burdett-road, E.

"FORWARD"—A MISSIONARY CALL.

"Go ye"—'twas the Saviour's order,
Standing 'neath the opening sky—
"To the world's remotest border, Preach the Gospel far and nigh."
Ours it is the great salvation,
Thus to spread at home—abroad;
Perish then all hesitation,
Forward, in the name of God!

"Go," nor fear the toils and dangers
Of a bleak or burning zone;
Cast, perchance, 'mong savage strangers,
All defenceless and alone.
"I am with you,"—blest assurance,
True on Afric's darkest sod—
Braces for sublime endurance:
Forward, in the strength of God!

Venturing on bold advances,
Hail, ye souls which throb and glow!
As ye trust your frail finances,
In his hand who bids you go,
Seek the lands whose woes constrain you,
Now by Christian feet untrod:
Go, your King can well sustain you,
Forward, in the faith of God!

Jesus, multiply the numbers
Of thy consecrated host;
From her long inglorious slumbers
Wake thy Church to seek the lost;
Turn the tide of wasting treasures,
Till, upon its bosom broad,
Love shall launch her liberal measures,
Big with enterprise for God.

"Go ye"—'tis thy word, Oh, Master;
Help us gladly to obey;
Speed our lagging footsteps faster,
Great the task and brief the day;
Saved from sin and sealed for glory,
Free us from our brother's blood;
Let us, through the Gospel story,
Claim earth's every tribe for God.

FERMOY SOLDIERS' HOME.—Miss A. Williamson, who originated this Home, still has charge of it—not Miss Sandes, as was recently stated in error.

A NEW MISSION STEAMER.—A Yorkshire friend of sailors has offered to the Missions to Seamen a mission steamer valued at £3500, for the use of their chaplain on the Tees, in boarding the ships and light vessels in the reaches of that river, and ministering to their crews.

Moses, the Man of God.

Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's-park Chapel.

THE VISION OF GOD AND ITS EFFECT.

Exodus xxxiv.

We are justified by the highest authority in deriving spiritual lessons from this incident in the life of the great Lawgiver. The Apostle expressly refers to it when he says that we all may, with unveiled face, behold the glory of the Lord, and be transformed. That blessed vision which of old was given only to the great leader of Israel, is now within reach of each individual believer. The Gospel has no fences to keep off the crowds from the mount of vision; the lowliest and most unworthy of its children may pass upward where the shining glory is to be seen; we are not living in the morning when the rays of the sun reach only the elect spirits that tower above the rest, but in the noon when every tiny flower and hidden nook lies in full view of the meridian sun. "We all...

I. The Desire to see God Carries with it the Pledge of its Gratification. During long years the desire had been growing in the heart of Moses to see the face of God. "Show me thy way that I may know Thee"; "I beseech Thee, show me thy glory." Prayers like these were constantly on his lips. And sometimes with him, as with saints of later days, the yearning must have become almost too intense to be borne. No invalid in the dark cold winter days so longs for the summer, no true heart so longs for its mate, no young bride just widowed so longs for the everlasting reunion of heaven, as do some saintly hearts long for God. "Oh that I knew where I might find Him!" "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh cry out for the living God." "My soul thirsteth for Thee."

This instinctive craving of the soul for God has driven men to idol shrines, and philosophic academies, and ornate rituals, in the hope of slaking their bitter thirst, doomed at last to turn wearily away, and cry, "Oh, thou unknown God, whom we ignorantly worship, give us to know, to see, to understand Thee." And if this has been the experience of those who have not tasted of the river of revelation, how much more must it be that of those who have drunk deep draughts of its ravishing bliss, such as have only whetted the thirst for more.

But these longings are certain to be fulfilled, because God is faithful. There is no stronger argument for immortality than this; it must be, because all men forecast it. There is no stronger argument for retribution than this; it must be, because men's consciences demand it. There is no stronger argument for the Being of God than to say, it must be because the heart of man craves infinite love, the mind of man infinite truth, the spirit of man infinite communion with spirit. And in the same way we must infer, that the very presence of these intense yearnings for Himself, for face to face fellowship and intercourse, are the herald symptoms, the premonitory signs, that within our reach there is the possibility of an intercourse with God which up till now our hearts have not conceived.

If we resist these desires, or quench them by studied neglect, or allow them to expend themselves, as the sailor who should refuse to hoist his canvas to the favouring breeze; if we are too occupied by the trivialities of life to arouse ourselves to apprehend that for which Jesus has apprehended us, then we shall be left to the valley of yellow sand where the majority of men have pitched their tents, and are satisfied to live. But if, on the contrary, we garner every opportunity, and cultivate each faculty, and keep our faces ever toward the mountain of communion, we shall infallibly find that the heart which yearns for the vision shall not be left without the vision for which it yearns, and that the yearning is the unconscious awakening of the soul to the fact that it is standing on the threshold of the highest privilege possible to man. It is thus that a babe awakens to a mother's tenderness, and a maiden becomes conscious of the great destiny to which an unexpected love, which has stolen so mysteriously upon her, beckons. Oh, these mysterious risings of the water in the river where the barges lie, bearing them up on their arms, rattling their chains, straining their cords, and bringing them an assurance of the swell and fulness and glory of the great ocean which calls to them to launch forth on its broad expanse and fathomless depths! And the Lord said unto Moses, "I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken, for thou hast found grace in My sight. Be ready in the morning, and come up in the morning unto Mount Sinai."

II. The Gratification of our Desire depends on our Fulfilment of certain Conditions.—(1) We must learn to obey. This was the great characteristic of Moses. He was faithful in all God's house as a servant. His proudest title, by which he is known even in heaven, is "the servant of God." "They sing the song of Moses, the servant of God." And the repeated refrain of these books is the phrase, which sounds deep and often, as the toll of the Inchcape bell over the waves: "as the Lord commanded Moses, so did he." God could always depend on him. He was a man after his own heart, who could fulfil all his will. And it was to him, rather than to the disobedient hearts of the people, that God revealed Himself.

And this is consistent with the words of our Lord, who said, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me, and I will manifest Myself unto him." Clearly obedience is the stepping-stone to vision. We must be servants ere we can be friends. The path of literal obedience, albeit that it is rough and steep, is the alone path to the mountain-summit, with its marvellous revelation. Is it not so always? The discoverer must obey nature before he can expect to reach the vantage-ground from which to survey the harmony and helpfulness of her mighty laws, and the mystery of her secret processes.

Do not be disobedient to heavenly visions; never turn aside to your own preferences from the narrow path of unswerving loyalty to the voice of God, speaking in his word, and in your heart, and in circumstance; dare to do right, though you stand alone amongst the recreant hosts, and you will thus fulfil one prime condition of the vision of God.

(2) We must be willing to pass through the thick cloud.—"God called to Moses out of the midst of the cloud, and Moses went into the midst of the cloud." Thick banks of dense cloud, dark in their earthward aspect, though insufferably bright on their inner side, shut out the light of sun and the spectacles of earth, and shut him in with God. But he had not seen the vision had he not been willing to pass through the cloud and to stand beneath the shadow of the Divine hand.

The traveller who would pass from the wintry slopes of Switzerland into the summer beauty of the plains of Italy must be prepared to tunnel the Alps. The garden, the cross, and the grave, are the only way to the Easter morning. The walls must be toned to a neutral tint on which masterpieces of painting are to be exhibited. The eye, injured by the glare of the marble, must become accustomed to the soft shadows of the cathedral aisles ere it can discern the exquisite beauty of the great eastern window. And it seems indispensable that we should pass into the shadow of bereavement, temptation, and distress, if we are to emerge into God's marvellous light and estimate its brilliance.

> Not first the light, and after that the dark;
> But first the dark, and after that the light.
> First, the thick cloud, and then the rainbow arc;
> First, the dark grave, and then the resurrection light.

(3) We must dare to be alone.—Let the ground lie fallow, alone through the year with its musings, and it will most quickly recuperate itself for its losses; and when the soul is let alone, allowed to confront God and itself and its destiny, it becomes strong and radiant, and able to see. The insulated cloud alone contains in its bosom the mighty thunderstorm; that which is stranded on the mountain slope is soon robbed of its electricity.

When we read those solemn words, "Be ready in the morning, and come up in the morning, and present thyself unto Me at the top of the mount, and no man shall come up with thee; neither let any man be seen throughout all the mount, neither let the flocks or herds feed before the mount," they seem to echo down to us in other but similar tones, "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and shut thy door, and pray unto thy Father in secret." Jacob must be left alone if the Angel of God is to whisper in his ear the mystic name of Shiloh; Daniel must be alone if he is to see the celestial vision; John must be banished to Patmos if he is deeply to take and firmly to keep "the print of heaven."

Valuable as are the prolific opportunities for Christian culture and service which surround us, they will be disastrous indeed in their effect if they rob us of the time that we should otherwise spend with God, or give us a distaste for lonely heart-fellowship. Let the first moments of the day, when the heart is fresh, be given to God. Never see the face of man till you have seen the King. Dare to be much alone on the Mount.

III. When the Conditions are Fulfilled the Vision is Sure.—It may not always come as you anticipate. Perhaps Moses, as he entered the cloud, expected that the Almighty would pass before him, riding upon a cherub, flying upon the wings of the wind, girt with rainbow and storm, while the thunder rolled as drums in his march. But, lo! he seemed to stand in a ravine, upon a ledge of rock, shadowed by a hand, whilst through that mountain rent passed the Divine procession, and a voice, still, sweet, penetrating, told that God was Love.

See the progress of revelation to the adoring soul. In Horeb, Moses had stood in the outer court to learn that God is changeless. In the giving of the Law he had stood in the effulgent glory of the Holy Place to learn that God is righteous. Now he was admitted to the inner shrine to learn that the Lord God was merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth.

No; the answers to our prayers for spiritual vision have not always come as we thought. When men said Lo! here, and Lo! there, it was all the while within growing into ever distincter beauty. The glory of the Only-Begotten was not shown in destroying men's lives, but in gentle and unselfish ministries, full of grace and truth. When Philip asked to behold God, Jesus told him that anointed eyes could see Him in the humanity with which they were so familiar.

But, however it come, come it will. None of those who wait for Him shall be ashamed. He will satisfy desires which He has Himself implanted. The King will be punctual to enter to see the guests who have complied with his conditions. As to Fletcher of Madeley, to Catherine of Siena, to President Edwards, to Dr. Payson, and to hundreds besides, so to you, when least expecting it, will come the beatific vision, perhaps constraining you to cry, as John Tennant did: "Hold, Lord, it is enough, or the frail vessel will break beneath the weight of glory."

IV. Such Visions Leave Unmistakable Traces.—The face of Moses shone, and did not his heart and life shine also? Could it have been otherwise? Linen in which the housewife has laid rosemary and lavender will smell fragrantly; ordinary iron placed near a magnet becomes magnetic; those that are in king's courts catch a refined and courteous mien; the friend of wise men gets wisdom; the members of a closely-knit family contract by association some tiny gesture, a peculiarity which betrays their oneness; it is proverbial how on the faces of an aged couple there is seen a strong resemblance, so that each reflects the other. And it is impossible for us to be much with God without becoming godly, i.e., Godlike. "Beholding... we are changed." "We are like Him, when we see Him as He is."

The old legends of the saints tell of those who, by long meditation on the crucifixion of the Lord, received in their very flesh the marks of his wounds. There is certainly a spiritual counterpart of this in the long, fixed gaze of the soul on the vision of God, by which the lineaments of the Divine beauty pass into the life, and light it up with a loveliness which is not of earth.

It is not enough to pay transient visits into his presence. We must remain there. We must lie to take in his grace. We must be exposed, as the photograph to the sun, for the light to do its perfect work. To become like Christ cannot be a pastime; it must be the serious labour of a life. Its one secret is to abide always in the conscious realisation of Christ's presence, to do all things as beneath his eye, and to be ever looking up from the work to win his smile, or to catch some symptom, slight as the movement of a hand, to indicate his will.

V. Such Traces are not perceived by those who present them.—"Moses wist not that his face shone." He was glorious in all eyes but his own.

There is a law known to medical men as Holland's law, which affirms that whenever attention is directed specially to any one organ of the body, the action of that organ is more or less disturbed. If, for instance, we begin to think of our heart, counting its beats, and listening to its throbs, we disturb its rhythmic action. There are few who can let the physician feel their pulse with perfect composure, and he is generally obliged to make some allowance for the effects of this self-consciousness. So with the functions of digestion, and respiration, and thought. These great and vital processes of the body go on most healthily and satisfactorily, when they are not made direct subjects of attention. And in these respects we may trace a close analogy between the physical and the spiritual life of man. A counterpart of Holland's law pervades the physiology of the spiritual life. We shall do best, and make quickest progress, when we know it not.

It is well sometimes to compare ourselves with what we were, and with what we might have been; but if we look away from the light to concentrate our thoughts on our frames and feelings, questioning whether the glow on our faces is what it was, we shall be doing the one thing of all others most likely to retard our spiritual progress. Look not at thy face, but at Christ's. Muse not on thy love, but on his. Look unto Him and be lightened.

True Christian excellence is as unconscious of its beauty as Moses was; whenever it becomes self-conscious it loses its charm. Beware of the man who talks about his graces. There is such a thing as being proud of humility, and making capital out of our nothingness. The man who boasts of a shining face is a counterfeit and a cheat. The possessor of the genuine article never talks about it, never thinks about it, and would be almost overwhelmed to hear of any such thing being ascribed to him. The charm of a little child is its utter unconsciousness of self, and that is the charm in true God-like-ness. It is like the bloom on a peach, the dew jewels on the morning lawn, the stillness of the surface of a mountain pool.

The angels must be very fair, who have ever lived in his presence. But they never think of it; they have never sought beauty as an aim or end in itself; they have just lived as near Him as they could, and, unconsciously, they have become like Him. Oh that all would betake themselves to the mountain, with its steep ascent, its clouds of darkness, its flames of purifying fire, its long, still hours of fellowship, not with the object of becoming saintly, but drawn by the irresistible attraction into the secret of God's presence, and then, though they will be the last to know it, their faces, too, will begin to shine.

The Outlook in Ireland.

(FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

As an indication of the growing spirit of independence in Irish Roman Catholic minds, I give an extract from a Roman Catholic journal. The Irish Daily Independent has commenced a series of papers on "The Situation," in which deadlier blows are delivered at Papal supremacy in Ireland than have ever been dealt even by Protestant arms. Take the following as a specimen:—"But it will be said, how do you, who are only a pen, a voice, a nothing, dare to challenge the action of the Hierarchy? Is it not presumption of the most audacious kind to criticise or withstand the formal, official action of ecclesiastics of the first rank, done in performance of what they lay down as their duty?...In the concrete, we reply with two words, 'Cardinal Cullen.' This eminent man had in his day as a Churchman no superior and few equals. To suggest equality in any Irish ecclesiastic of the present day would be preposterous. Yet in public affairs he betrayed the best interest of the people. He broke down, by the exercise of despotic power, the Tenants' Defence Association. He swept out of public life every honest politician, clerical and lay, of his time; made alliance with the infamous Sadlier, and the still more infamous Keogh. His policy was the proximate cause of the ruin of millions. He went shamefully, shockingly, ruinously wrong. So wrong that it was long ago written that 'Since Oliver Cromwell landed on the shores of Ireland no greater calamity happened her than the advent of Cardinal Cullen.' The sentence was never challenged, because it was true."

Is not the preceding significant language? In Ireland, Cromwell's name has been used as a bogey with which to frighten children. The "curse of Cromwell" was supposed to be the deadliest imprecation coming from an Irish heart. Yet here we have an Irish Roman Catholic journal declaring that Cardinal Cullen deserves to be bracketed with Cromwell.

The same journal—and although only a few weeks in existence, it already commands a large circulation—advocates the withdrawal of the national schools from the managership of the priests. In fact, it advocates the principle of parish school boards. Already, its teaching is bearing fruit, as the following item of news will show: "We gather from provincial advices that in the case of the most important schools, perhaps, in Munster, the locality has refused to recognise the right of the parish priest and manager to appoint a teacher. The issue is by no means uninteresting, as the people, who are amongst the most spirited as well as the wealthiest in the South of Ireland, have subscribed largely and generously to provide the necessary apparatus for the furnishing and equipment of a new school, which, by the way, we notice has been named The Independent. A public meeting was recently held to protest against the manager's attempt to ignore the wishes of his parishioners, and to claim for parents the right to determine where and by whom their children shall be educated." At a time when the Government is disposed to hand over immense sums of money to the Roman Catholic clergy for educational purposes, it is significant to see the Roman Catholic laity combining for the purpose of withdrawing the control of the schools from the priests.

Meanwhile, the priests, or a considerable number of them, are playing into the hands of their opponents. A parish priest in County Kerry has been indulging in the practice of sending scurrilous and highly offensive postcards to every one who differs from him in politics. To the editor of a local journal he writes on a postcard as follows: "'Twould be no great loss if your vile sheet never again appeared. Out upon you both, vile wretches." The remaining half-dozen sentences are unfit for publication. The same meek minister of the Gospel dubbed as an "audacious blackguard" a newsagent who sold papers politically distasteful to the writer. The editor of the local journal, already referred to, published several such postcards, and charged this parish priest with being their author. In a letter marked "private," the incriminated cleric says: "With regard to these postcards you published, I acknowledge them," and he adds, "this letter is not for publication, but a private note to yourself." The editor, needless to say, published the whole correspondence, but the parish priest remains in his position, a light upon a candlestick, one of those men who, according to Mr. Stead, is an example of sanctity and culture to his flock!

At the Cork Criminal Sessions, recently, another priest made a similar exhibition of himself. A man was charged with having assaulted the police with a shovel during a recent political fracas in Cork. Father Buckley, of Buttevant, came into court to champion the patriot who had used the shovel; and he simply turned the whole proceedings into burlesque. When the Recorder mildly told Father Buckley that his performance was very irregular, the rev. gentleman delivered himself of the following speech: "I place myself and my friend entirely in the hands of Mr. Laurence. What are we to do now? I will ask you a question: 'What are the seven things a man would rather give than take?' They are: Kicks, good advice, a toothache, castor oil, a mother-in-law, and to be informed by letter from your Bishop that you are to be removed from Buttevant to Valdevoray. I suppose we leave this court without a stain on our character"! The report tells us that Father Buckley then left the court, but soon returned "with a package of grapes, some of which he presented to the Recorder and to the solicitors engaged both for the prosecution and defence."

Bishop Nulty, of Meath, seems to be losing his senses over Parnellism. There is at present a vacancy for the position of Coroner in Bishop Nulty's diocese, and he has publicly announced that the voters would be guilty of grave dereliction of duty if they did not return the clerical candidate. Speaking from the altar recently, Bishop Nulty, as usual, made a political pronouncement. He said: "Parnellism is not yet two years old, and it has already done more harm to faith than the brutal persecutions of three hundred years. These persecutions had the effect of binding still closer the priest and his people, whilst Parnellism has produced an estrangement and a coldness between the priest and some of his people."

It is interesting to know that the experience of Christian workers in Ireland enables them to support Bishop Nulty's testimony. There is a greater readiness to listen to the truths of the Gospel. The cowering, superstitious dread of the priest, the great barrier to successful Christian work among Irish Roman Catholics, has entirely disappeared in the more enlightened centres, and is fast disappearing even in the most rural parts. Copies of the Douay New Testament are freely bought up and read. At the close of the recent "Keswick" Convention in Dublin, several Roman Catholics—some having travelled from remote country districts—sought out Rev. Thomas Connellan, and definitely took their stand on the Lord's side. One of them, a young man of great promise, has written an account of God's leading in his case, which will appear in the March number of Mr. Connellan's magazine, The Catholic (Mecredy and Kyle, Middle Abbey-street, Dublin). Another Roman Catholic priest has passed over from darkness into light; and in due time will, no doubt, let his light shine before the eyes of his fellow-countrymen. For long years, God's people in Ireland worked and prayed, and there was not much visible fruit. A change has come over the land. "Behold, there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea like a man's hand." "Oh give thanks unto the Lord; for He is good; for his mercy endureth for ever."

The Evangelists' Home.

The fourth published report of this institution states that candidates for admission are required to be entirely surrendered to Christ; the distinctive teaching would seem to be upon the lines of entire sanctification. Rev. Joseph Odell, resident and principal of the Home, Moseley-road, Birmingham, rejoices in the freedom vouchsafed to him by the last Primitive Methodist Conference, and deems the encouragement of the churches and the abundant blessing of God, in reference to the work, a sufficient warrant for going on with it. Our friend is certainly all alive with enthusiasm, and the brief statements of the men who are at work in several of the counties show that they all partake of the same Methodist fire. Brief articles upon the missionary spirit, the larger ministry, &c., invest the pamphlet with more than ordinary interest.

WELSH CITY MISSIONARIES.—The London City Mission has now four missionaries specially engaged among the Welsh residents in the metropolis, and the Lord Mayor of London being this year a Welshman, it was but natural he should invite the friends of the Welsh Auxiliary to a gathering at the Mansion House. This meeting took place on Friday last, and after a warm plea by the Lord Mayor himself, addresses were given by Messrs. F. A. Bevan, D. Thomas, Dr. Owen Edwards, and others.

Protestant Paris.

BY. J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

I.—Native.

To attempt, within the confines of a couple of short papers, to give a complete account of all the Protestant agencies in a vast city like Paris, would be but futile; so a bird's-eye view must here suffice to convey a general impression of the whole. The early struggles of the Light in France against the darkness of the Papacy need no re-telling; they are matters of Christian history of which the Church is proud. The Reformed Church of France dates its origin as far back as 1512, when the heretics of Maux arose within the Romish pale, but its first distinct organisation was formed in 1555. It is this body which is probably the best known in England, especially through one active representative, Rev. Théodore Monod. There are in Paris eighteen churches under its direction, in all of which the Gospel is proclaimed. "Is this Pastor Monod's church?" I inquired one Sunday morning at the door of the sixteenth century convent church of St. Mary, once overshadowed by the grim Bastile. "No; this is our church," replied the official addressed, one with a sash over his shoulders which gave him the appearance of an "odd-fellow." But seeing my disappointment, he added, "M. Monod preaches here." So I entered. In the little man with whom I chatted afterwards, in velvet cap and "bands," one at first hardly recognised the figure of the Keswick platform; but the voice, and the true note it uttered, were still the same.

The Lutheran Body was originally a German exotic, and from 1626 to 1806 took refuge at the Swedish Legation; but in the latter year, under Napoleon's toleration, it was allowed to stand alone. Till 1842, however, it only possessed one church in Paris, but it is noteworthy that for many years it maintained the only Protestant school in the city, established in 1847 in connection with an orphanage, &c., still prospering. Since that time the numbers of this church have been steadily increasing, and a good work is being carried on.

The Free Church came into existence after the Revolution of 1848, and owes its being to the refusal of its members to accept the State aid accorded to the others, with its consequent responsibilities. This is but a small body compared with those already mentioned. It also is Evangelical.

The Methodists last year celebrated their centenary in France, though in Paris they have only been at work since 1820; they opened their schools there in 1840. This effort was at first semi-English, originating from Guernsey, but the establishment in Paris of an English minister under this denomination was as late as 1833. Methodism in France is essentially and complete harmony prevails between parent and offspring. Later on a branch of this work, which partakes more of the nature of a foreign mission, will be considered under that head.

The Brethren established meetings in France in 1830, and are fairly represented in Paris.

Baptist churches, branches of the American Union, were first established in the capital in 1850. Of late they have received an important accession in connection with the work of M. Saillens, formerly carried on under the McAll Mission, but now distinct. As this is almost entirely French—with the exception of the assistance rendered by Mr. Barley, of Mr. Spurgeon's College, and an English lady or two—it may be considered now as a native agency. There are seven preaching halls, under the direction of three pastors, three evangelists, a colporteur, and other workers. Since the beginning of this year there have been 130 baptisms in connection with this church, which now embraces some 320 members.

As the Salvation Army in Paris only counts two foreigners upon its list—Commissioner and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn—it, too, may rank as a native organisation. It is difficult to place in one category or the other some of these more recent undertakings, which have been organised from without, but which have rightly become naturalised in course of time. For ten years the Army has been fighting at this centre, from which radiates not only the war in France, but also in French Switzerland, in which some 450 officers are engaged. In Paris itself, they muster 120 soldiers, divided into four corps. At present they carry on no other work than preaching, though, as a shelter opened last winter proved a success, the experiment is likely to be repeated. The meeting I attended, in one of the most central positions of the city, partook of the usual characteristics. The room, which was large, was freely adorned with tricolors and flags of all nations, and filled by a well-dressed audience, admitted on the payment of twopence halfpenny each. Processions are permitted, but not with music, though the would-be players carry their instruments, and employ them on arrival in their own courtyard.

One more completely French organisation is the Y.M.C.A., which for nineteen years enjoyed the hospitality of the Anglo-American branch. It was founded in 1852, by Mr. Geo. Williams, and now counts some 500 members and associates, some of the latter being Romanists. A generous American has combined with their French supporters to enable them to purchase, and add to, new premises, which are to be fitted with every convenience. Their income enables them, as it is, to pay a high rent for a very good flat, comfortably furnished, with a well-patronised table d'hôte. The energetic secretary, M. Van der Beken, means to make the thing a grand success, and it looks as though he were doing so.

Under the auspices of the bodies mentioned, there are quite a number of charitable institutions, schools, &c., too varied for enumeration here. The late Pastor Delille's work, carried on now by Pastor Hirsch, is a most encouraging and worthy enterprise, and so is Mdlle. Dalencourt's Mission to Women; and there is a special society for priests converted from Romanism. As a result of a joint mission undertaken during the Exhibition o 1878, a Comité Auxiliaire d'Evangelisation de aris was formed on the lines of the London City Mission, and, though practically a branch of that society, is native in organisation. It does supplying labourers to eight distinct bodies, and tends by its nature to maintain harmony among them. The largest mission in connection with the native churches is the Central Evangelisation committee, founded in 1846, which continues to fight on bravely.

The Paris Bible Society was established in 1818, and the Paris Religious Tract Society in 1820. In 1883 the Paris Sunday School Union was formed, all these three societies being linked with the corresponding ones in London. Space will not permit of any detail as to their steady progress, and the blessing which has followed these united efforts.

France may well be proud that her soil saw the starting of the Evangelical Alliance, which has since encircled the globe. This was at Lyons in 1844, and in 1846 and 1855 important Conventions were held by it in Paris. Its bond of union is one not to be despised, and its basis is that of most of the organisations I have noticed. Temperance work is represented by the Blue Cross Society, affiliated to that of Switzerland, with its active propaganda, doing a work as needed there as here. It is now approaching the close of its seventh year.

Several able Protestant newspapers are published weekly in Paris. Prominent among them are Le Signal, an unsectarian and pushing sheet, now about to be enlarged and to embrace a wider field, with special attention to foreign missions; Le Christianisme, the organ of the Reformed Church, full of interesting matter well edited; Le Témoignage, organ of the Lutheran Church, a smaller paper well got up; and En Avant, the War Cry of the Salvation Army, also a very creditable production. For general readers and young people there are several fortnightly or monthly illustrated publications, and L'Espérance, of the Y.M.C.A. A monthly, published further south, Le Huguenot, has reached a circulation of ten thousand. It is a pleasure to be able to state, rather on the authority of labourers on the spot than on a slight personal acquaintance with them, that almost without exception these publications are strictly evangelical and practical. There is, however, the same tendency, as is noticeable at home, in certain circles, though not in those mentioned, I believe, to adopt the looser and broader notions of Christianity, which would make the strait gate wider, and to maintain those retrogressive ideas falsely represented by their holders as advanced. A literary society and a college or so flying the Protestant flag make these points their boast.

Our Paris brethren are not unmindful of the Grand Commission, and maintain their representatives in several foreign fields—notably in Western Africa and Tahiti; but the churches seem to do but little more than support themselves, even with State aid for some, and most of the home missions have to rely on foreign support. The total of Protestant Church members in Paris is estimated to exceed eighty thousand, of whom a half at least belong to the Reformed Church, the President of which is Rev. L. Vernes, himself an earnest worker.

CHICAGO BIBLE INSTITUTE.

Mr. Moody has issued an inspiring report for last year. We read: The students enrolled in the men's department represent twenty-six denominations. One hundred and fifty are Americans, natives of twenty-eight different states. Of the remainder, twenty-one are from Canada, thirty from England, four from Ireland, three from Scotland, two from Wales, three from Sweden, two from Syria, and one each from Norway, Denmark, Germany, Switzerland, Persia and Alaska. They have been engaged in eighty-seven secular occupations before entering Gospel work. Eleven of the students have been ministers or evangelists who came to us for further study, and ten have been either Presidents, Vice-Presidents, Secretaries, or Evangelists in the Y.M.C.A. One student has gone this year as a missionary to China, one as a printer to a mission in Guatemala, one to Africa, and another is probably going. Of the men enrolled since the year came in, twenty are now preaching as evangelists, fourteen as regular pastors, four as assistant pastors, five are in city mission work, five in Y.M.C.A. work, four are S.S. missionaries, and one is in the employ of the American Missionary Association among the Dakota Indians. Eleven have gone into other schools and colleges.

THE BIBLE IN ITALY AND RUSSIA.—The increasing circulation of the Scriptures in Italy is significant. In 1888 the returns in connection with the Bible Society's work were over 139,000 entire Scriptures and portions. In 1890 the figures were close on 154,000, and the agent's report just received shows a further increase in the issues for last year of 13,000 copies. This is welcome and important intelligence. The returns from the Russian Agency are also good, amounting to over half-a-million copies. Of this the northern countries have taken 360,000, and the southern and Asiatic 154,000. There are few countries in which the increasing popularisation of the Bible means more than in the Italy of Victor Emmanuel and the Dominions of the Czar.

CHRISTIAN CONVERSATION.

Extracted from a sterling article by W. Scarnell Lean, M.A., in the current issue of The Friends' Quarterly Examiner.

Christian conversation may imply either (1) conversation carried on in the spirit of a Christian on any topic, or (2) conversation between any persons on subjects especially germane to Christian faith and practice. Under the former head it is the tone of the conversation that is Christian, or is at least not un-Christian; under the latter head it is the subjects taken up that are peculiarly Christian... We may recognise how easily we may pass, by an almost imperceptible transition, from conversation on ordinary topics, conducted in the spirit of the Christian, to conversation on topics more closely connected with our religious faith, by calling to mind such a subject as the manifold works of God in nature, or, again, the providence of God in history.

We need not look round for a far-fetched suggestion of any of these topics that lie close beside a Christian's personal experiences. No apology is needed for introducing them if only it be done reverently. Nevertheless, there is an instinctive shrinking, in some most deeply religious minds, from obtruding the highest themes uninvited upon others...If our life is in Christ, ought not the word of Christ to dwell in us richly? If our affections are set on things above, how can we be silent about them? And yet many a true Christian has been most reticent as to his spiritual state and that of his constant associates. Is there not a cause? Is it not that, firstly, the very magnitude of the themes, when justly gauged, brings in diffidence; and, secondly, that a sort of manifest coincidence of inclination, on the part of two or more who are conversing, is desiderated as the fit condition for opening up more sacred subjects? There is at least an advantage in delicacy of feeling and in courtesy in the way of first presenting what we may consider of supreme importance to others, who have their own views as to the themes that are acceptable to them.

No one, however enthusiastic and ready to confront all risks in speaking out courageously in the cause of Christ, will be anything but pleased if the way opens easily for the utterance of what is on his heart. And any one may covet the faculty of availing himself in an easy, natural way of such openings. A conversation on a period of history once brought up the name of a certain Roman Catholic; this suggested the Virgin Mary, and a youth said he could not think why she should be worshipped. His friend remarked on the attractive idea of womanly and motherly tenderness, and, following up this thread, passed on immediately to speak of the still greater and better tenderness of Jesus; and the youthful listener at once assented, and his heart was open then and there to anything his friend could wish to say of the character and work of his Saviour.

Are we ever in danger of being spoiled for speaking of the excellencies of Christ by a habit of talking much of the foibles of others? Conversation on persons is, on the whole, more dangerous than conversation on things, though it is generally more lively, and therefore more tempting. Remarks unfavourable to the living may be made in the hearing of their acquaintances, who may be put unpleasantly upon their defence, feeling as though they themselves had been disparaged.

In all Christian conversation, as in all the intercourse of life, whether we regard the tone of our words and the motive-power of our actions, or the more or less elevating nature of the subjects to which we must necessarily give our attention, few helps towards maintaining a high tone without affectation will be greater than the recollection of the Saviour's presence, and the definitely avowed aim to refer everything for final judgment to his approval. This will still prove its power to bring the warm glow of his love into our hearts, whether in days of sunshine or in shade, just as it did to the two disconsolate disciples on their walk to Emmaus, when the friends of Jesus were but few.

"TIED" PUBLIC-HOUSES.

Mrs. Buss, wife of the Vicar of Shoreditch, in a letter on the drink traffic, says:—"The country is groaning under the infliction of a pauper tenth, created almost entirely, directly or indirectly, by the drink traffic, which is on a par with the opium trade of India in its disastrous results on the moral and physical welfare of the people. The public-houses are crowded together in the poor districts of the towns, frequently numbering seven to one of shops furnishing the necessaries of life, most of them being 'tied houses.' The value of this class of property may be estimated by a glance at the list of public-houses and hotels submitted to auction in London from January to November, 1891. The prices of 102 of these range from £10,000 to £20,000, while thirty-two reach enormous sums—between £20,000 and £60,000, much of the property being situated in poor neighbourhoods.

"By the tied-house system the owner or lessee of the licensed premises is a brewer or a brewery company. The publican to whom the licence is granted is not a bonâ fide tenant, but a servant or manager, holding under an agreement by which he is dismissible at a moment's notice. He is compelled to buy his liquor from the brewer or company under which he holds, and mostly pays six shillings or eight shillings more for each barrel than the price at which it is sold to free houses. The brewers charge the publican a much lower rent than they pay in order to get a low assessment, thus throwing an unfair burden of taxation on other ratepayers. If the house has been so ill-conducted that complaint is likely to be made of it at the Licensing Sessions, the present occupier is turned out a few weeks before, and 'a most respectable man, your worship,' substituted. The Bench will only hear as evidence what has occurred since the new servant has been put in occupation, and the house gets its licence renewed to carry on for another eleven months the demoralisation of its neighbourhood.

"The licensing laws are strict on the subject of the houses being used for criminal purposes, or permitting drunkenness, or serving the police on the beat, or supplying children under thirteen years of age with drink, but they are evaded at all points. (1) The police are encouraged by the publicans not to report cases, and are discouraged by the authorities if they do report them. (2) If the public report irregularities of this kind, the brewers' lawyers stop the complainant at once by legal formularies. The result is that the drink traffic is fixed on the nation as a tyranny, more disastrous in its effects than was the slave trade.

"The costly scheme of national education is being rendered in a great measure nugatory by the drunkards' children roaming the streets till after midnight, learning the vice of the night side of London, and being, of course, totally unfit for next morning's school. Five hundred children were last year taken up in London alone under ten years of age drunk and incapable, and a group of boys and girls were lately seen coming out of a public-house at closing time, one child in a pinafore being too tipsy to stand without support."

THE BERLIN Y.M.C.A.

It will be encouraging to many, who are anxious about the success of our Y.M.C.A., to hear of the wonderful results which our brethren in Berlin have had, by the blessing of God, in their work amongst young men.

On January 28 they celebrated their ninth anniversary. The rooms of their splendid building in the Wilhelm-strasse were crowded; many high officers and ladies and gentlemen of all ranks came to show their interest, and Count Andreas von Bernstorff took the chair. From the report of the General Secretary it appeared that during the last year the rooms of this Association were used by 128,000 young men (daily average 350); 1017 new members were received, 900 of these being strangers in Berlin. The extensive work of the Association, which includes a large Sunday-school, classes for lads and boys, visiting employment-agency, &c., is done by 18 paid agents, and 150 volunteer helpers. During the last year 651 strangers have been provided with lodging; 80 lectures for instruction, and 400 religious meetings were held. Eleven members have entered the home mission, six went to the foreign field.

Arrangements are made to have special meetings for students, soldiers, bakers, and others The meetings for waiters are most interesting. Their only convenient time to come is midnight, but they come even at such an hour and listen with much interest.

Those who know the spirit of this Association know the prayers, the faith, the devotion of those who have charge, and do not wonder that God has blessed it so richly. Z.

DR. BAEDEKER IN RUSSIA.

Writing from St. Petersburg on Feb. 15, Dr. Baedeker says: "I have spent ten days in Finland, and had the privilege of visiting several large prisons, accompanied by Baroness Wrede. The authorities very readily granted me permission to preach to the prisoners. In Russia, also, the permit for visiting the prisons has been renewed to me for another year; thus a large field for the spread of the Gospel is still open to me.

"Of the believers in Petersburg several have gone into the famine districts to minister food to the hungry, and to give the word of life to famishing souls. I believe that the many prayers of God's children for Russia will yet be abundantly answered, and that out of the famine-stricken provinces a rich harvest will be gathered for the Lord. The accounts of deep, unparalleled distress are terrible, but already there is the little cloud, like a man's hand, promising 'showers of blessing.' May God's servants not be faint-hearted, but pursuing.

"I have been able to secure channels of communication, and continue to send supplies to the needy and oppressed Stundists. My intention is (D.V.) to remain here till Feb. 24 (O.S. 12), and then to go to Riga, where letters will reach me care of British and Foreign Bible Depôt. I hope also to visit Warsaw and other cities in Poland before recrossing the Russian frontier.—Yours in the Master's service."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS AND GAMBLING.

At a representative meeting of the Society of Friends for Sussex, the evil consequences of gambling, whether at the gaming table, on the racecourse, or the Stock Exchange were considered. In a minute passed they say: "The gambler is a weed in the garden of society: money paid and received in industrial and commercial callings, represents honest labour—the conversion of raw material into the necessaries of life and their distribution. In gambling, the money merely changes hands, not only without profit, but with ruinous waste of time and thought; it may enrich the few, but it beggars the many. The winner, moreover, is often none the better for his gains, for what is won by chance goes as lightly as it comes. More than this, those who addict themselves to gambling, whether winners or losers, suffer a loss far greater than that of gold. Gambling sours the temper, and intensifies the natural selfishness of the heart.

"When this fatal besetment has taken possession of a man, it leaves him no time for the pursuit of true happiness, no room for genuine sympathy with his neighbour, no inclination for the service and love of God. Gambling leads to commercial ruin and loss of character. It has spoiled many a fine business, driven many a promising young man into the clutches of the money-lender, and plunged many a family into poverty and woe. Some maintain that so long as a man stakes only what is his own, he is safe. But this is not so; the habit of gambling is in itself evil, and it is well known that when this infatuation is once admitted, the mind becomes heated and blinded, and the restraints of prudence and all other checks are cast aside. There is no safe rule but to refrain altogether. For those for whom the net is spread, and those who are already entangled in it, there is but one availing helper, the Lord Almighty, who bids us all who have foresaken Him to return, 'for He will have mercy upon them,' and all who are in temptation to 'Call upon Him for He will deliver them.'"

The Home Teaching Society for the Blind were £200 short on December 31. We trust more friends will rally around this beneficent mission. The Secretary's address is 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.

THE STORY OF THE LOST SHEEP.

Told By Himself.

How glad I am to be at home again! At first, when the Shepherd brought me back, my ninety-nine companions looked askance, but when they saw how much He loved me, they gathered round me in the fold. "Do tell us," they said, "where you have been, and all that happened to you. How came you to go astray?"

"Foolish! foolish me!" I answered. "It was a mirage, you know. We were browsing on the slopes outside the city on the day I left you. It was a lovely morning, and I lingered behind the rest. 'Take care!' our Shepherd said to me, 'do not leave my side.' And then my wicked heart rebelled, and I thought, I am quite clever enough to take care of myself, thank you. So I hid behind a bush until the flock passed on, and though several times I heard the Shepherd calling, I would not obey, for my heart was lifted up with pride.

"Then it was that I looked around, and in the distance among the hills I saw what seemed like pastures of wondrous beauty; sweet hill-sides clothed with greenest grass, gentle streams of water, shady nooks, and noble trees! It did not look so very far away, and I thought, 'I will go at once; I will enjoy myself. I will leave this stupid humdrum life for a little while, and when I come back, how envied I shall be by all the other sheep.'

"Foolish, foolish me! I did not know it was all a mirage, and not real at all; so I set off at a run. Soon I had left the pasture-lands, and was in the desert. My eyes were fixed on the prospect in the distance, and at first I did not heed the sand. But the heat of noon began to make me tired, and the sweet pastures did not seem much nearer than they were. It was too late to turn back, however, so I still walked on. 'I shall soon be there,' thought I, and, oh, won't I enjoy myself then! On I went. It was hours since I had left you, and I began to feel very hungry and thirsty.

"Presently the way became rougher. Instead of soft sand, rough, rocky ground lay in my way, and I had to climb. Every moment the hills grew higher, and among them thorny bushes began to frighten me, for I could not avoid them, and they scratched my face and tore my wool. I stopped and turned. Where was I? I knew not. Where was home? I could not tell. Where was the pleasant prospect that allured me in the morning? Fading in the distance, even as the sun's bright rays were fading. The day was going; I was alone, and—lost!

"Somewhere I thought I heard the sound of running water. It was my only hope; I started up to reach it. Over rocks that grew more rough at every step; through shrubs that threw their thorny branches across my path, I plunged again. It was sunset, and my strength was going. On, on, on! And the mirage faded, and the cruel thorns caught in my wool and tore it, till the blood flowed freely from my face and from my sides; and my feet almost refused to move, every step became so painful; and, worst of all, I heard a lion's roar across the hills. O foolish, foolish me! Why had I left my Shepherd, and disobeyed his kind commands?

"Suddenly, the sound of the water became more clear, and I knew it was not far off. My hopes rose, and I hastened on. But darkness fell, and I did not see that close before me was an awful precipice. So at the moment when my wicked heart began to whisper of satisfaction after all, I stumbled, and fell blindly down the hill, jagged rocks and thorny plants tearing and wounding me as I fell.

"There I lay, bleeding, dying! Water was close at hand, but I could not reach it; across the stream I thought I saw a patch of tender grass, while I was perishing of hunger and thirst and wounds. How bitterly and vainly did I reproach myself! I saw my folly, and knew that I had sinned. Then I swooned away.

"I awoke, and it was day. It was day, and I was dying. No hope, no help appeared, and every moment seemed an hour.

"Ah, then it was I heard our Shepherd's voice! He called my name again and again, and the voice drew nearer and nearer. Oh, how my heart beat fast lest He should miss me even then! With my last strength I uttered a feeble bleat. He heard it, and I saw Him come.

"But, oh! how shall I tell you what I saw? His face was pale, his locks were wet with night-dew, and from his hands and feet and brow his blood was flowing down. A deep gash in his side laid bare a dreadful wound, and I knew that these were marks of deadly conflict with the lion I had heard. He stooped, and his blood fell upon me like a cleansing shower. His face beamed looks of love, and from his lips came words, not of anger, but of joy. 'I am so glad I have found you!' was all He said, and then He bore me away to the river. He bathed my wounds, and bound them up with his own garment; He gave me water for my thirst, and fed me with his own hand. And then He laid me on his shoulders and brought me safely home. He told me of his love, and pardon, saying many times, 'Fear not; I have called thee by thy name; thou art Mine.'

"'Dear Shepherd,' I said, 'keep me close to Thine own side henceforth, and suffer me not to stray.' 'Nay,' He answered, 'thou shalt be my lamb. I will gather thee with my arm, and carry thee ever in my bosom.'

"Happy, happy me! I was lost, but my Shepherd found me; I was wounded, but He healed me; I wandered, but He brought me back—never, never to stray again, for He will keep me!"

* * * *

Dear children, can you see the meaning of all this? You are that lost lamb, for "all we, like sheep, have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way." Sin and the world's pleasures are only a mirage. Away from Jesus, the path grows harder and rougher every day, and more difficult to retrace. But He is the Shepherd who seeks us in our sins. He came all the way from heaven to do so. He says, "I am the Good Shepherd; the Good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." And again, "I lay down my life for the sheep." The lion is Satan, but Jesus conquered him at the cross. The Good Shepherd seeks you now by his Holy Spirit; yes, even by this message. Trust in Him, and you will be his own dear little lamb.

CHILDREN'S MISSION AT MERTON.

It is with feelings of much pleasure and deep thankfulness to God that we look back on our happy ten days' mission just conducted by Mr. T. Lewes Sayer. Our parish is long and straggling, and therefore somewhat difficult to work in the matter of parochial missions. To obviate these difficulties, we held some of our meetings at the Mission Hall, and some in the girls' school near St. Mary's Church. The meetings were well attended from beginning to end, in spite of the weather being cold and stormy, so thoroughly interested were our young people in the bright and happy services that, neither rain, mud, nor snow seemed to keep them away. Our short prayer meetings were hearty and most helpful. God's blessing, which was earnestly asked for, was most graciously bestowed upon the mission work. Many, we feel sure, both amongst children and workers, realised the power of his presence. But what is still more joyous to record, several, we know, have been won for Christ, and given their hearts to Him for ever.

SILVER STAR SOCIETY.—Earl Compton has accepted the presidency of this home mission agency, and attended a meeting held on Wednesday last week, at which several friends delivered addresses of encouragement to the workers. The hon. sec. is Mr. Walter S. Robbins, 23, Carlton-road, Manor-park, Essex.

AN OLD CHIEF'S CONFESSION.

A remarkable letter from Bishop Ridley, telling of Gospel progress in Metlakahtla, gives the following words, burning with native eloquence, in which an old "chief of chiefs," a determined enemy of the Christians, lately avowed his new-found faith before heathen and Christian Indians:—

Up rose Sheuksh grandly, and though the Christians are too numerous to apprehend any serious attempt to curtail their liberty or power, yet they anticipated an attempt to do so. He stretched out his arms, as if to display his sturdy person and the robe that had figured in many a heathen orgie.

"I wear," said he, "the outward sign of former ignorance and of ancient customs, that never changed until the white man's faith was preached. I thought I ought to keep them, for I am not wiser than the ancients who kept them and did great deeds. I loved them. So did you. I have struggled to maintain them. I have defied the Queen's officers. They threatened me as late as this last springtide with prison and disgrace. I told them I would not avoid them. I also resisted the Bishop, and suffered not his teachers to land. I concealed not the wish of my heart. You know to what lengths I went. Most of you approved my doing. But the end has come. Let the waves tell the story of our fathers. Our children's lips will form no fit words. Where do dead things go? This goes with them."

Here he threw off his scarlet robe and the other insignia of a heathen chief. "I am naked, but can clothe my body with the white man's clothes." This he there and then proceeded to do.

"What will cover my heart? I can wrap nothing round it. God sees it, and He knows all the past and the present. He knows I am ignorant and sinful. He has this summer made me know it. I am now dressed like a Christian. Those tokens of the dark past I will never touch again. What shall I do next? I am too old to go to school. I cannot read. I am like a child, knowing little, but wanting to learn. Will Jesus Christ have me? Will He help me? I will never turn back. I give myself to God. Now pray for me—pray, pray! I want to know what will please Him. I must know. Begin at once to pray!"

HEALING THE SICK IN PALESTINE.

Mr. Meredith writes from 143, Clapham-road, S.W.:—"Our medical missionaries and nurses are doing as much as possible to relieve the griefs of the poor in Palestine, but they write and wire home that an experienced doctor must be sent out at once, or they cannot keep up with the work. In answer to prayer, we have an experienced doctor offering to sell his practice and go out. He would visit, periodically, the villages and towns, to prescribe for the numerous cases introduced by our missionaries and nurses, and others, as time would permit. If possible, he will take out extra nurses with him.

"Shall we send him? Any friend, lady or gentleman, willing to become hon. sec. of a 'local association' may have collecting cards for this purpose. Drawing-room meetings would be a great help; or we can send a lecturer, with magic-lantern slides of 'a visit to the Holy Land,' to any part of London or suburbs on due notice. Our work is extending, and our funds are all gone, so that we do not feel free in going into more expense unless the means are forthcoming."

Christian Endeavour Societies and Foreign Missions.

A missionary pamphlet, by Margaret W. Leitch, of Ceylon, entitled "A Great Opportunity," has been sent to each of the sixteen thousand young people's societies of Christian Endeavour in the United States, in the hope that the attention of the young people may thereby be more and more awakened to the crying needs of unevangelised lands. Associated societies in different parts of America are already supporting missionaries working in connection with various denominations.

The appeal of this booklet, characterised by warm Christian earnestness and Scriptural consistency, should do much to increase existing interest, as well as to excite in the hearts of many a desire to go forth with the heavenly light into dark places of the earth. In a brief introduction, Dr. A. T. Pierson directs attention to the many open doors: "The cup of God's preparation overflows. The open door of the ages is before us. The whole world invites and challenges occupation." The office of the United Society of Christian Endeavour, from which copies of the pamphlet may be had at 1 dollar 80 cents per dozen, is 50, Bromfield-street, Boston, Mass.

The Bible for the Heathen.

Dr. Griffith John, of Hankow, in sending us the following letter, says:—"You have done a real service to missions in this country by publishing Mr. Foster's letter on ministrations for the Chinese. My son-in-law, Mr. Sparham, is sending you another on the same subject. The views expressed so well by him correspond with mine exactly; and my views on this subject are those held by ninety-nine missionaries out of every hundred in China. I have yet to meet the first exception."

Sir,—I have read with keenest interest the letters that have appeared under the heading "The Bible for the Heathen" in your highly-valued paper. As I write from Central China, and mails at best travel slowly, it is inevitable that my remarks should be rather after date. Yet, inasmuch as this is a burning question, and a grave misapprehension seems to exist in the minds of many earnest Christians in England which it is a matter of the utmost importance to remove, I should be glad if you could find room for these few lines.

1. Though we desire that certain editions of the Scriptures, or portions of the Scriptures, should be issued with annotations, we have by no means lost faith in the Bible as the Word of God. The missionaries of China are to-day, as a body of men, in fullest sympathy with the men of the Reformation, and would, if necessary, gladly suffer for the Word of God as their forefathers did. The great aim that we have before us is the bringing of the millions of China under the direct influence of Scripture truth. The more one studies the religion, ethics, and customs of the Chinese, whether as written down in their books or shown forth in their lives, the more is it borne in upon one that an intelligent and wide-spread knowledge of the Word of God is the deepest need of China. This being so, one can but speak in terms of enthusiasm of the work that the Bible societies are doing; and most of the missionaries in the field willingly render them aid, some of the most experienced men devoting time to translation, many undertaking the superintendence of colporteurs, and almost all endeavouring to sell Scripture portions on the streets or in the chapels and hospitals. Did space permit, it would be easy to show that the very men who are rendering most valuable aid in these ways are the ones who plead most earnestly for annotated Gospels.

2. I will now endeavour to explain why we ask for annotations. In all Bible work we have before us two classes of readers: Christians and heathen. To the Christian Chinaman having a good general knowledge of Christian doctrine, attending services and Bible-classes, and having more or less intercourse with a native or foreign teacher, and above all realising in his own soul the truths of the spiritual life, the Bible is just what it is to ourselves, a priceless boon. For this class of reader notes and comments are by no means a necessity. A good reference Bible, with plain maps and strongly bound, is what is needed.

Commentaries have their place, but I know many Christian men in this province of Hupeh who have never opened a commentary and yet have a good working knowledge of the Gospel and Epistles, who might indeed put to shame many of our home Christians. But the Christians in China number only some thirty-five thousand men, the heathen three hundred millions.

For one man within the church there are nearly ten thousand without. The great bulk of the Gospels, &c., circulated in China fall into the hands of these heathen people. Without note or comment a single Gospel is to these almost always unintelligible. This is the conclusion to which, one by one, almost all of us are sorrowfully forced.

The Gospel of Mark is considered the most suitable to put into the hands of a heathen, because of its simplicity and brevity. Yet, when bookselling, I have heard the remark, "I will buy any tract or book you have, but I don't want the Gospel of Mark. I bought a copy some time ago, and I can't understand it. I don't want Mark." One is saddened to hear a remark of this kind, but you have only to turn to the first two verses of Mark i. to understand it. For within these two verses you have the expressions—Gospel, Jesus Christ, Son of God, Prophet, Isaiah. To the ordinary reader each of these terms is, in itself, of necessity incomprehensible, and when so many such terms come together, the ordinary reader is apt to give up in despair, thinking that the whole book must be beyond him, and the more so as the most profound treatises in Chinese generally commence with some very simple or very familiar sentences.

This is not a matter in which a good translation removes the difficulty. A passage such as this, which to us is so full of meaning, to the intelligent heathen reader is either a jumble of meaningless characters, or he attributes utterly erroneous meanings of his own. Take the expression for God. The classical term Shangti, Supreme Ruler, is perhaps that most frequently used by missionaries. But it is a term also used, blasphemously indeed, for the Tavist divinity Yü Hwang. I have almost shuddered at times to hear our Blessed Lord spoken of by a heathen man as the Son of Yü Hwang. Then take the term Chen Shen, favoured by some missionaries, which simply means "True Spirit." This, strange to say, is the very term used in certain parts of China for the Buddhist saint Cheu-sz. Tien Chu, Lord of Heaven, is the term used by the Romanists, but similar misconceptions arise in connection with it. A mandarin was conversing with a Roman Catholic priest, and assured him that he understood it quite well. "We in China style our Emperor the Son of Heaven, you in France call your Emperor the Lord of Heaven!" I might multiply examples in connection with the misunderstanding of other terms referred to above had I sufficient space. But a short, simple note in the margin of the Gospel would remove the perplexity at once, and there would be no difficulty in so wording such notes that all evangelical Christians would at once assent to them, while the intelligent heathen reader, understanding, would read on and learn the wondrous story of the Saviour's life.

3. But it may be asked, Why look to the Bible societies for such editions? It is clear that they are needed, but the tract societies should furnish them. We ask the Bible societies to furnish these editions:—

(a) Because what we need are not long comments, but such brief notes on theological terms, the names of Jewish customs, &c., as are needed to make them intelligible.

(b) Because the Bible societies' colporteurs are in many cases pioneer missionaries, travelling in districts that have been seldom or never visited by a Christian teacher and distributing the Scriptures among raw heathen. These agents are among the most heroic of the missionary band in China. The strain of mind and body to which many of them are exposed home friends know little of. Not a few of them feel keenly the fact that after all their endeavours, although they have placed the Scriptures in the hands of many hundreds of men, yet the form in which the Scriptures are given is not that best calculated to appeal to the heathen reader. Hence we find that many of these devoted men are those who plead most earnestly in favour of annotated Gospels. The tract societies in China employ no colporteurs.

(c) The Bible societies are always glad for their agents, whether European, American, or Chinese, to preach or explain the Scriptures that they circulate, and we rejoice to know that not a few of these brethren do this work very thoroughly, especially when the books are being sold by ones and twos by the way-side. But often a large city is visited, then Gospels and Testaments are sold by the score or hundred—for they are foreign books and so cheap! In such cases there is no chance of explanation, and the Gospel or Testament is often taken, glanced at, and then put on the shelf. One is constantly hearing of cases where a New Testament has been kept for years, until a tract has been met with or some teacher has come who could expound it. Such work is not unproductive, but it is not so productive as it might be, were there a few notes elucidating the various points of difficulty.

Besides, while many agents are well able to expound the Word, some, whether from insufficient knowledge of this difficult language, or, in the case of the native colporteurs, from insufficient knowledge of the Bible as a whole, may give inadequate or erroneous explanations. It would surely be better that there should be a few marginal notes, carefully prepared by old and well-experienced missionaries, and sanctioned by the committees of the Bible societies in China, which might give lucid and accurate statements, instead of leaving all to the vague, and possibly erroneous, statements of an earnest, but only partially-instructed, Chinese Christian.

My earnest prayer is that the Bible may ere long become the one Book in every home in China, that it may be reverenced, loved, and studied, as it is among the hills and valleys of our own loved land. My firm conviction is that the circulation throughout the land of annotated Gospels would hasten this day. A similar conviction has been expressed by men so universally known and respected as Revs. Dr. Nevius, J. Hudson Taylor, Dr. Griffith John, and the late Dr. Williamson. Hence, many of us pray most earnestly that God would move the Bible societies to sanction the publication of the editions that we so much need.—I am, Sir, yours in the Master's service,

C. G. Sparham.

PASTOR A. G. BROWN'S WORK.

"God First" is the title of the booklet in which Pastor A. G. Brown records the work carried on last year under his direction. The opening address is based on the testimony of John to Christ, as expressed in John i. 15. In a letter to his helpers, Mr. Brown acknowledges the abounding grace of God in continuing to use and own the efforts put forth in his service. He glories in the old Gospel, and says, "After five-and-twenty years the atoning sacrifice on Calvary is still our trust, our joy, our theme. The precious blood is yet more precious. The priesthood of Jesus has become a more delightful theme, and the personal return of our Lord is a brighter hope than ever."

The various Homes in connection with the mission work have been centres of practical Christian testimony. The "Christian" buildings on Bow-common have from the first been an unqualified success. "It is quite full, being tenanted by Christian people—chiefly widows—who have a set of three rooms for 2s. per week. It has, during the year, paid its own expenses, and we have been able to add the £32 3s. to the reserve fund. Each of the Mission Halls is a centre of active Christian work, with many societies of its own. One of them, attended by none but poor, has its clubs, bank, &c., and raises no less than £300 in the year in the way of self-help. Nearly twenty, also of the poorest, have from this Mission come out for Christ, been baptized, and joined the church at the Tabernacle during 1891. There are many others also ready to follow suit, of whose conversion we have no doubt. This Mission is the nearest to the Tabernacle, and therefore, we see more of the fruits, but the others are all doing well."

The missionaries, apart from their spiritual work, which stands first, are indispensable in the administration of relief to the poor. The record contains some very interesting incidents. Here is a case of superstition:—"Hie! can you let me have an old Prayer Book?" called out an old man. "No, old gentleman; but I can let you have a Bible, if that will do." "Well, sir, I will tell you what I want it for. Do you see, I suffer with nightmare, and I thought if I had an old Prayer Book under my head, it might cure me, for it wakes me up, and I get no sleep after." "Perhaps the Bible will do." "I will try that." I took him one, and said, "That is the Word of God, but you must read the 3rd of John before you put it under your pillow." "Thanks, sir," and holding it with both hands under the back of his head, he said, "That will do it." Seeing him the next morning, I asked him how he got on. "Oh, my! never had such a beautiful night for years. That did it. God bless you!"

Another story, which aptly illustrates "God first" is: Said Mr. H. to his wife, "I believe you love Jesus more than you do me." She answered, "Yes, John, but I give you the second place, and by-and-by, when you know Him, you will love Him best too."

We trust our friend will have another year of service equally happy, and continue to enjoy the same encouragement from sympathisers far and near.

BURNHAM.—Mr. Charles Lazenby, of the Evangelisation Society, is conducting an evangelistic Mission at Burnham Congregational Church. Much interest has been aroused by the services, and several conversions are recorded.

WORK AMONG JEWS.—The eleventh anniversary of the London City Mission to the Jews, 119, Leman-street, Whitechapel, was held on Friday evening, when the little hall was crowded. In the unavoidable absence of Prebendary Calthrop, Mr. J. Dodsworth presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. M. Brown and J. B. Barraclough, and in German by Dr. Benoly and Mr. Shaper. The Jews, amongst whom were many poor refugees, listened with attention. The room proves much too small, and efforts are being made to secure a larger one. The missionary (Mr. Oppenheim) finds that the distress amongst the Jews is still very great; illness and misery abounding on every side.

MR. BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.,

CITY CHAMBERLAIN AND ADVOCATE OF THE OPPRESSED.

"WHATSOEVER thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." The faithfulness and devotion to duty implied in this inspired counsel were eminently exemplified in the veteran City Chamberlain who so lately passed from our midst. It has been said that, in business and official affairs, "conscientiousness and thoroughness were among his chief characteristics. He always held that whatever was worth doing, was worth doing well." But while, on the evidence of those who knew him best at the Guildhall, this was true in relation to his public duties, it was no less true of his Christian service, in connection with certain great and pressing evils, into which he threw himself. That is to say, his Christian work was marked by the same thoroughness and determination which characterised his official labours. His was no half-hearted advocacy of the cause of the weak and wronged; what he undertook he did in the spirit of one who meant to go through with it.

BENJAMIN SCOTT was born in 1814, the year before Waterloo, and his father being an officer of the Corporation of the City of London, it was but natural he should train his son for the same service. Hence, on leaving school (at Totteridge), young Benjamin, at the early age of thirteen, entered the Corporation offices. Inasmuch as, with one brief interlude, the whole of his subsequent career was associated with the Guildhall, it becomes necessary we should rapidly review his public labours, ere passing on to what is of more immediate concern to our readers.

As a mere boy, then, he entered, in 1827, the Chamberlain's office, in the capacity of junior clerk, and with this particular department he continued associated during his long and honoured career, save for the break just alluded to. Steady perseverance and attention to the minutiæ of his duties soon won the lad promotion, and step by step he ascended until, on the death of his father, he had conferred on him his father's post of chief clerk to the Chamberlain. On the Chamberlainship becoming vacant, some years later, by the death of Mr. Brown, Mr. Scott sought the honour of filling it, but his time was not yet, and another was elected. A few years afterwards came a break in his connection with the Guildhall, for, resigning his post of chief clerk, Mr. Scott devoted himself entirely to philanthropic and Christian work, founding, a little later on, the Bank of London, of which he became secretary, until, in 1858, on the death of Sir John Key, he was unanimously elected City Chamberlain, a post he held from that time to the day of his death, that is, for thirty-four years, being annually re-elected.

A well-informed journal, The City Press, reviewing his official career, says:—

> Of his work in connection with the management of the finances of the Corporation we cannot speak in terms of too warm praise. Perhaps to the public at large the Chamberlain will be best remembered by the eloquent—may we not say silvery?—speeches that he was wont to deliver on the occasion of the presentation of the honorary freedom of the City to notabilities who were deemed worthy of the distinction thus conferred upon them. No one who has heard Mr. Scott on such occasions is likely, we think, to forget his quiet but persuasive eloquence. A memorial of his services in this direction is to be found in the "Roll of Fame," the handsome volume which was published a few years since, and which contains the speeches delivered and the replies that were made at the numerous presentations in which he was privileged to take part.

This "Roll of Fame," it is interesting to observe, begins with Lord Chatham and ends with the Earl of Shaftesbury.

An old City journalist notes that, "Although Mr. Scott was essentially a man of business, and much of his time was devoted to the moral and mental improvement of his fellows, he was nowhere so happy as in the bosom of his family. He has often told me how much he enjoyed the three months' vacation which the Corporation gave him when his health broke down a few years ago. He went to some secluded country place, far away from the din and bustle of the great City, and here, surrounded by his grandchildren, he lived over again the days of his youth."

Mr. Scott was in Ireland in the great revivals of 1859-60, and was not only himself much blessed, but also took some part in the work. This was a joyous period of his life.

But apart from, and in addition to, his laborious public labours, Mr. Benjamin Scott was an earnest Christian worker in his own chosen sphere. Himself, as those most closely intimate with him attest, a godly and faithful follower of Jesus, he helped, as in him lay, many good institutions; but for many years his own energy and effort were thrown chiefly into movements for the redress of national wrong-doing, such as the legalisation of vice and the opium traffic, while he was also chairman of the committee for the suppression of the wicked traffic in British girls for the purpose of continental prostitution. The truth is, he appears to have drunk deeply of the Puritan spirit, abhorring all that seemed contrary to the mind and will of God, as well as opposed to public morals; and he shrank from no personal sacrifice necessary in order to raise his protest against the wrong done, and bring to bear his influence in stirring others to similar action.

A typical instance of his self-denying and unsparing labours in any such cause is afforded by his book, "A State Iniquity: Its Rise, Extension, and Overthrow." Here we have a concise yet complete history of that remarkable, and, by God's blessing, successful crusade against the C.D. Acts, in which Mr. Scott bore a memorable part. Nor, in becoming its historian, is there any vestige of self-glorification, for it is noteworthy, to those of us who closely followed the movement, that while Mr. Scott figured conspicuously in the conflict, he counts for but little in the record thereof. The "campaign in favour of purity, liberty, and righteousness" being ended, and victory having been won, it was felt (he tells us) that some history of the twenty-years' war should be penned, to remain as a witness against any possible restoration of the iniquity, and as a help and encouragement to any who in time to come might be called to engage in the "strife between truth and falsehood, right and wrong."

An interesting personal allusion is given on page 203, where the author relates how the City of London Committee of Repeal originated. It seems that at a public dinner in 1877 Sir W. McArthur, M.P., sat next the author (Mr. Scott), and the conversation turned on scenes witnessed in France during the great Franco-Prussian War, when both had visited Metz, and had witnessed for themselves the deplorable results, in the encouragement of vice, of the regulation system in force. Sir William informed Mr. Scott that the same system had been "stealthily introduced" into English garrison towns. The outcome was a firm resolve to form a City Repeal Committee with a view to energetic action. A meeting was called at the Cannon-street Hotel, a strong committee was formed, which issued a stirring appeal, and helped not a little in the final stages of the conflict. The first victory came on that memorable April 20, 1883, when the House of Commons gave, as the London press said, "the death-blow to the system," by passing, Mr. Stansfeld's resolution condemning "the compulsory examination of women." Shortly after a Bill was brought in by the Government, but, proving unsatisfactory, was dropped; and in 1886 Mr. Stansfeld brought in a Repeal Bill, which was passed, and received the Royal assent on April 15—the date, as Mr. Scott remarks, of his own birthday. "Thus," he writes, "fell in Great Britain the Giant Iniquity—the State recognition, regulation, and sanitation of a degrading vice."

Into another great movement, against another national wrong, the City Chamberlain also threw his energies and eloquence. In the anti-opium agitation he took a leading part, and, indeed, as our columns told but the other day, was to have presided at a great meeting in Exeter Hall, to protest against "The Wrongs of India." But at the meeting a touching letter of apology was read, and within a few days after he had passed away. The end of this movement is not yet, the victory has still to be won; but doubtless, ere long, the history recapitulated above will be repeated, and God, in his own time and way, will crown with success the efforts of his faithful ones, who lament that England's fair scutcheon should be blurred by so foul a blot as that of the opium traffic.

Mr. Scott took also an active part in the successful efforts made to preserve Bunhill Fields—the resting-place of John Bunyan and other Puritan worthies—from desecration by being built over.

The sturdy spirit which characterised Mr. Scott finds apt illustration in a pamphlet he issued last year, while the International Congregational Council was sitting. This was a fourth edition of a lecture given in 1866, on "The Pilgrim Fathers neither Puritans nor Persecutors," and it was avowedly re-issued for the purpose of "making our distant Congregational workers aware of their heroic ancestry." Like all his other writings, it displayed great industry of research, and an intense desire that the descendants of the Puritans might know and serve in a simplicity of faith like that of their fathers.

A series of lectures to working-men on Underground Rome, which awakened considerable interest, were afterwards issued under the title "The Catacombs at Rome,"* a work we have read again and again with deepening interest, describing, as it does so well, three Romes—Rome Pagan, Rome Christian, and Rome Papal. Romanism, the author shows, with pitiless logic, to be but "baptized Paganism." All the time, while Rome's abominations have been flaunting themselves as "derived from the usages of the primitive Christians," the Catacomb carvings have been bearing silent but unchallengeable witness to the Scriptural simplicity of the faith and practice of the early believers.

Mr. Scott's personal faith shines out beautifully in the following sentences, occurring near the close of this delightful volume:—"I have made plain, I trust, that these fundamental corruptions (those of Rome) consist in a derogation from the honour of the Lord Jesus Christ, and a usurpation of his rights, by setting aside his teaching and infringing upon his various offices—that of Priest, by substituting an unauthorised priesthood; that of Saviour, by supplying a supplementary sacrifice; that of Mediator, by adding a host of unnecessary intercessors; and that of Prophet, by withholding the inspired Word of God."

At Weybridge, where Mr. Scott had a country house, he laboured largely in Gospel and open-air services, as also in the strengthening and encouraging of the Congregational churches, for he was, it must be noted, a staunch Nonconformist, although ever ready to work heartily with all who sought the good of their fellows, and by all such he was warmly respected and highly valued. He and Mrs. Scott worshipped at Horbury Congregational Church, Notting-hill, and for several years he held office there—until quite recently, when failing health induced him to resign, much to the regret of his brother deacons.

His Will, which has been published in full, contained two points worthy of note—1st, he directed his funeral to be of the simplest and most inexpensive kind, having a strong objection to pretentious show; 2nd, he made no charitable bequests, having, he explained, given in his lifetime all, he felt, he could possibly afford. As many workers know, he was a willing and hearty giver when the object commended itself to his judgment.

Friends will be glad to know that Mr. Bassano has published a large portrait of Mr. Scott, which has been much admired by all who have seen it.

MR. RABINOWICH'S MISSION.

The new report of the London Council for aiding the work of Mr. Rabinowich has been drawn up by Rev. Theo. J. Meyer. Acknowledging in Rabinowich a man especially raised up and fitted for a special work, the Council have not interfered with the direction of the Mission, but have simply endeavoured to give counsel where needed. The most important event to record in the Kischineff work is the opening of the "Somerville Memorial Hall." Illustrations of the building are given in the report, copies of which may be had from Mr. J. E. Matthieson, 47, Phillimore-gardens, Kensington, W.

We give a few extracts from the report: "From his 'hired synagogue' the Lord led Rabinowich into this suitable and comfortable place, made room for him" (Gen. xxvi. 22). The hall is in itself a powerful preacher. It has shut the mouths of all adversaries—Jewish and Christian—who denied the solidity of the Kischineff movement, who asserted that it was superficial and would soon die a natural death. There it stands in a prominent part of the town, an evidence of the solidity of the movement, bearing on its front, in the Hebrew and Russian languages, the words from Acts ii. 36: "Therefore let all the House of Israel know assuredly that God has made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ."

Of late, Mr. Rabinowich has dwelt more than formerly on the work of the Holy Spirit, and our need of Him, for repenting and believing. Many of his discourses have been printed as tracts, in Hebrew and Judeo-German, and disseminated in all parts of Russia. "Add to this the daily conversations with Jews calling upon him,—an extensive correspondence with inquirers in all parts of Russia, and we shall, with gratitude towards the Lord, have to acknowledge that our brother is doing a great and noble work,—a work which, perhaps, is too great for the strength of one man. We thank the Lord who has hitherto sustained him, giving him grace and strength, and we trust that, in his own good time, He also will raise up a suitable help for him in this great work."

Owing to legal and political difficulties, Mr. Rabinowich is not allowed to baptize his converts; hence the hope which he and many friends fondly entertained, of seeing at Kischineff a Hebrew Christian congregation arise has not as yet been fulfilled; but on the other hand, he has opened the way for the Gospel into circles which, ten years ago, were considered to be almost inaccessible. "Even if he were nothing but a John preparing the way for Jesus, this would be a thing to be highly thankful for. But he has not been that only, but direct blessing in the conversion of souls to Christ has not been withheld from him. Owing, however, to the cause already alluded to, a good many Jews who, through his instrumentality, were brought and converted to Christ, have been obliged to seek elsewhere admission into the visible Church of Christ."

Last year, he had the joy of seeing his wife, who has for some time been a believer, baptized as a follower of Christ. Writing with reference to the joyful event, he says: "Thanks to the Lord, who enabled her to go without the camp bearing the reproach of the Messiah, together with her husband and six children, and to walk together in newness of life by the power of the resurrection of Christ."

JEWISH POVERTY IN EAST LONDON.

With all the sufferings of Israel in Russia and elsewhere, we must not forget the woes of the thousands of Jews of our own great city. The prevailing poverty in the East-end of London is terrible, if not unprecedented. Many poor Jews are wandering about the streets in search of work, or, what is more likely to be found, the face of a friendly missionary from whom they can beg a little help to take home to their families. Numbers of families who before were able to struggle along are now plunged in distress, and have had to endure the recent bitter weather as best they could with scanty clothing and fireless homes. Large numbers of single men, too, wander idly about the streets day and night.

The shelter recently opened by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, though small, is distributing an average of 120 meals a day. The little room just opposite the London Dock gates, where many immigrants arrive, is crowded twice a day with hungry sons of Abraham. The meals are given at ten and three, the Gospel being preached in the meantime. It is touching to find that many of the married men with families, although they are offered tickets, will not come to the shelter for a meal; for they say, "We cannot bring our families, and how can we eat while they sit hungry at home?" Much help, therefore, needs to be administered by visiting, and the workers of the Mission are doing everything they can. The meals at the shelter cost over one pound a day. The attendance consists principally of men.

Jewish women, however, feel hunger as well as men, and anything undertaken for them needs to be done separately. The Mission, therefore, organised a tea for Jewish women last Thursday evening at the "Old Mahogany Bar," in Wellclose-square. Many of the poor women were half-afraid to pass through the Jewish neighbourhood on their way to the hall, as the Jews persecute them for attending Christian meetings; but in spite of this 250 turned up and partook of a substantial tea. After tea Rev. Mr. Wallfisch preached the simple Gospel to them, taking as his subject the life of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was illustrated by dissolving views. The greatest attention was paid, and many, with tears in their eyes, expressed their gratitude at the close. "Feeding the hungry" is a pleasant occupation, but especially so when the recipients are of the same nation as those whom our Lord fed when on earth, and from which He Himself sprang.

MR. BEN OLIEL'S JERUSALEM MISSION.

Rev. A. Ben Oliel, writing from Jerusalem, says:—"After labouring in North Africa, Turkey, Spain, and Italy, the Lord has brought me to Jerusalem, to tread in the footsteps of the sainted Levi Parsons, Pliny Fisk, and Dr. Barclay, of the United States; and God is reviving afresh in the churches of the States a holy zeal and devoted interest on behalf of the Jews and Jerusalem. I trust the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Churches in the States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, &c., and the Unions and Mission Boards of other denominations, will respond more fully to my earnest appeal for united testimony in the Holy City, thereby manifesting our essential oneness in the vital doctrines of the Gospel, in face of Latins, Greeks, Armenians, Copts, Moslems, and Jews; and proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ to the latter, to whom God is opening to me a wide door of access among the Sephardim—Spanish Jews.

"I want helpers of both sexes for schools. The Missions of our Episcopal brethren have volunteer assistants in many of their stations, and particularly here in Jerusalem. Two that were coming for this winter—a devoted American lady from Switzerland, and a Wesleyan brother from Ireland—have been deterred by quarantines. May the Lord raise up and send others from all churches and lands to this Christian Union Mission. The field is large; there are forty thousand Jews in Jerusalem, and over one hundred thousand in Palestine. I am overwhelmed with work, I cannot overtake fully as I would, though devotedly assisted by my beloved wife and two eldest daughters and son."

The Revival in Scotland.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE MISSION IN GREENOCK.

The circumstances are so diverse in different places that it is very unfair to draw comparisons in gauging the results of a widespread movement such as that which is now in progress throughout the length and breadth of Scotland. God is not to be charged with arbitrary action because less immediate fruit is apparent in one place than in another. The Spirit's working may be hindered by "some little rift within the lute" that does not appear on the surface; some very small hindrance may choke the channel of his inflow in a community. Without setting the Greenock meetings over against those previously held in any other centre, it can, however, be thankfully said that they were full of great good cheer and encouragement to the evangelists. They began on Sabbath week, and the working force was strong—Messrs. Moody and McNeill as preaching, and Messrs. Sankey and Burke as singing, evangelists, besides other able helpers in both departments, not to speak of the local pastors and friends. Ten meetings were held in the town during the day, and it is estimated that on these occasions a grand total of some 17,000 persons must have heard the reviving of the life-giving message. How many effectually responded it must be left to the great day of reckoning to discover; but it is no great stretch to be assured that the slain and the wounded of the Lord were many.

Mr. Moody and his companion had to pass on to another place at the end of two brief days, but Mr. McNeill continued his powerful ministry all the week, and will prolong his stay in Greenock this week also, as intimated elsewhere. He has had the happy privilege of gathering many sheaves for the Master, as the outcome of his own labours and those of his fellow-workers, who could do little more than scatter the seed before departing for other fields. As the days and weeks go by, it becomes more and more evident that Mr. McNeill has found his niche, and that if health and years are granted him he will prove to be one of the most useful servants of God that this generation has seen; his gifts of clear, piercing vision and of popular address are such that, like Wesley, Whitfield, and Moody, he ought to have the world for his parish.

AMONG THE MINERS.

Scotland is comparatively a small country, but among its people there are to be found plenty distinct types. In their tour from north to south, our American friends have been passing through very varied strata of human society. They encountered the fervid, superstitious Highlander; the more cultured and, perhaps, more cynical folk of Inverness and Moray; the hard-headed, but by no means cold-hearted, Aberdonian; the shrewd and stolid Fifer; the horny-handed artisan of the banks of Clyde, and many others whose characteristics are not sufficiently marked to allow of classification. The greater part of last week was spent among the miners of Lanarkshire, the places visited being Wishaw, Lanark, and Bellshill. The evangelists must often have been reminded, these bygone days, of Pittsburg, the great mining centre of the State of Philadelphia, in their own country. Tall, black, ugly chimneys are the conspicuous features of the landscape, telling of many thousands who toil from week to week in manipulating the mineral wealth of Central Scotland.

If report be true, the mining population of these parts are more at home in matters spirituous than spiritual. Facilities for over-indulgence in drink are disgracefully plentiful, with the usual outcome of intemperance, crime, and indifference to the higher interests of the life of the soul. Not that there has been any lack of eagerness to attend the special meetings—far from it. Indeed, the success of the work, from that point of view, has been a drawback. The available places of concourse have been much too small, and the unwholesome air engendered in small churches not well ventilated has caused Mr. Moody no small discomfort. He has

on this account. Still, he has gone on bravely, preaching the old Gospel with might and main, and keeping many other friends at work as well. When at Wishaw, Mr. Sankey received by cable from America of the death of his eldest sister. This is the third bereavement that he has had to undergo when absent from his own land on the King's service. During former visits to our shores he had to mourn the loss, by death, of mother, sister, and his father. It has not been easy to sing with this burden of sorrow freshly resting upon him, but strength and grace have been given to go on with his work, and this added proof of the nearness of the unseen and eternal world has not diminished the pathos which our friend throws into the tones of his consecrated voice. The lamented death of Dr. Donald Fraser, that came as a heavy shock to his many friends north of the Border, was very feelingly referred to by Lord Kinnaird at Wishaw.

THE SAD NEWS

STORM-STRUCK AT COATBRIDGE.

There have been many outstanding incidents in this Scottish campaign that will come up at the call of memory in future years. But probably no meeting in the whole series held between Campbeltown (in the south-west) and Castleton (in the extreme north-east) will be better or more frequently remembered by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey than their first service at Coatbridge last Sabbath morning. In the matter of weather, and considering the season of the year, they have, on the whole, been singularly fortunate. The Aberdeen week was severe—so far as frost and snow went—but not to the extent of interfering with the attendance. The visit to the far North had been accomplished before the heavy snowstorms and the subsequent floods that have made the opening of the year memorable and have caused loss of life, delays in travel, and no small destruction of property. At last it seemed as if the snow-king had overtaken them. Towards the end of last week the lowest readings of the thermometer were recorded in Scotland that have been known for a number of years. Saturday evening in Coatbridge was clear and starry, and the fullest effect was given to the big, belching tongues of flame at the iron works, that light up, after nightfall, the lower end of the town. During the night the wind rose and the temperature fell, and morning dawned on a perfect hurricane of driving snow. A stranger looking out on the main street about 9 a.m. would have been struck with surprise to see a seemingly endless stream of people, mostly of the poorer orders, judging by their dress, with a large proportion of young boys and girls, wending their way along, bravely battling with the fury of the elements. A little inquiry would have revealed the fact that these were Roman Catholics, bound for early "mass." It appears that out of the thirty thousand people in Coatbridge some eight thousand are Romanists, and they are so well indoctrinated into the tenets of their faith that no rain that ever fell, or wind that ever blew, will keep them from "mass." It was something of a revelation to witness such a sight in an age supposed to be specially one of religious indifference.

The question that arose in one's mind was this: Would the Protestants struggle through the awful storm in as great numbers for the meeting with Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey in the Coats Parish Church, fixed for 9.30 a.m.? In order to answer his own question the writer sallied out and made for the church; to get there, he passed about the worst quarter of an hour he has ever experienced in the line of snow storms. The church stands high on the crest of a steep hill, and the battle with the snow-laden gale up from the main street of the town was one that will certainly never fade from memory this side the river of death. Almost as "breathless all" as was FitzJames when he arose after the duel with Roderick Dhu, one reached the church, to find scarcely a vacant seat; and the building is seated for a thousand.

Nobody seemed more surprised than Mr. Moody. After Mr. Sankey had grandly sung two solos, and two brethren had offered prayer, his brother evangelist stood up in the pulpit and made a little preliminary speech, such as seldom falls from his lips. "Mr. Sankey and myself," he said, "never had a greater compliment paid to us all the twenty-two years we have been working together than we have had this morning. We thought that if there were a hundred people present it would be a great deal, but we never expected to find such an audience as this on such a morning, that had come here through

A YOUNG AMERICAN BLIZZARD.

I have been led to understand that this was rather a dead town, but there must be a good deal of life in it somewhere. When I saw the storm I said to myself that we were going to have a great blessing. There will be only a few people here, who have come together to get quickened, and God will bless us."

A TALK ABOUT AFTER-MEETINGS.

Then Mr. Moody plunged into what he called a social talk about after-meetings, and how to reach those who are not Christians. He said he believed that if there were in all the churches one live Gospel address every week, followed up by an after-meeting, the disciples of Jesus Christ would be largely multiplied in Scotland inside of twelve months. To be a whole year with hardly any accessions to the church on profession of faith is not the normal state in which the church ought to be. The annual report was lately issued of one of the leading churches in an American city. The minister is one of the ablest men in the American pulpit to-day. The building is in one of the most expensive parts of the city, and probably the yearly expenses of the church, with the cost of the choir and interest on the money for the building, will be not less than £5000. It is reported that during the past year eighteen had been added to the membership on profession of faith—one and a-half every month. Yet they state that they have had a successful year! In the great American cities the churches are losing hold of the people, and the reason is that there are very few evangelistic addresses where the Gospel is put plainly before the people.

Mr. Moody proceeded to urge that, while Sabbath morning in the churches should be devoted to the feeding of the flock of God, the afternoon or evening address ought to be of a strictly Gospel character, and should be followed up right on the spot by an after meeting. He told of a young minister in a wealthy American church who said to his people, after he had been with them about six months, that he thought he ought to resign. They asked the reason; he said that very few attended the evening service; he wanted an entire change in the methods of conducting that service, and he was afraid they would think his plans

TOO REVOLUTIONARY.

On being pressed to specify, he said he wanted the elders (some of whom were millionaires) to act as ushers at that service; the young men to go out into the streets and distribute invitations to the passers-by, and all the pews to be free. The congregation liked their minister and did not care to lose him, and so his plan was agreed to. Inside of three months the building could not hold the people that came on Sabbath evenings. There was half-an-hour of a praise service, then a Gospel address and an after meeting, and there had been conversions right along ever since. Other churches took up the idea, and nearly every church in that city is now crowded on the Sabbath evening.

Mr. Moody proceeded to urge that Sabbath evening is the only time when the churches can get hold of working men, who, as a rule, get up late on Sabbath morning. A minister once preached against after-meetings, saying that the seed, when sown, should not be disturbed. But (replied Mr. Moody), if it is not harrowed and rolled in by personal effort, most likely the enemy will carry it off. Many a man convicted of sin has all his impressions dissipated as soon as he gets outside, for want of some one to converse with him, and bring matters to the point of decision. It is folly for a minister to tell the anxious on a Sunday evening to come on the following Friday evening and meet the session in the vestry. That is enough to scare any anxious soul. As to after-meetings, Mr. Moody pointed out that all who desired to become Christians should be urged to remain, except those who were obliged to go. After a few short prayers, let the Christians be asked to speak to those near them. If those in our churches were only trained to do this work, they would soon discover its importance and would know the luxury of it. The evangelist went on to show from the methods of John the Baptist, of Christ Himself, and of the early apostles, how Scriptural is this method of personal inquiry and personal dealing after the Gospel message has been declared. After Christ spoke to his followers he asked them whether they had "understood these things." When some modern preacher had expatiated on metaphysics, or the higher criticism, it would be a good thing if he would stop and ask his congregation if they had understood the things he spoke of. Surely the great object of preaching is to make people understand. At Pentecost Peter was not allowed to finish his sermon; before he got through the people broke in with the cry, "What must we do to be saved?"

Mr. Moody next referred to the importance of dealing with different people according to their peculiar state of mind. Scarcely any two men or women are converted in the same way. It is therefore very necessary to deal with the anxious singly. There are in Scripture passages exactly suited to all sorts of cases, however varied they may be. The closing part of Mr. Moody's lengthy talk was devoted to an interesting exposition of the way of dealing with different sorts of inquirers. Those who lack assurance should be taken to the Epistles of John. Backsliders should be dealt with from the book of Jeremiah. For those who are self-righteous or not really convicted, the third chapter of Romans is a very suitable portion of Scripture; while those who are broken down should be taken to the third chapter of John's Gospel. Romans x. is the passage for any who are not ready to confess Christ. The Law is only good for showing a man his lost condition; when he sees that, take him to the Gospel. Christians were earnestly entreated to study up their Bible, so as to be able rightly to divide the word of truth in dealing with different states of the soul. Great stress was laid by Mr. Moody on the absolute necessity of the doctrine of the Atonement. He had yet to discover a man who hid the cross of Christ, and was successful in winning souls. Moral philosophers of the present day must not suppose that these old doctrines are worn out; there can be no greater mistake. Some very telling things were also said about the folly of unconverted men stumbling over the doctrine of election; that is a thing that an unconverted man has no more to do with than with the Government of Japan. When once a man has obeyed the Gospel and is inside the Church of God he can get comfort from this doctrine, but till then it has no relation to him. It was a very long talk, indeed, that Mr. Moody gave to the Coatbridge Christians, but he probably thought they deserved to get good measure after having braved such a storm. If they carried away for future use half of what he gave them, they will not be badly equipped for service.

The after proceedings of the day were full of the deepest interest. In the Dunbeth United Presbyterian Church in the afternoon Mr. Moody preached to a great crowd. He commented very strongly on the drink question, speaking from some facts that had been supplied to him as to the great prevalence of whisky shops in the town. Certainly no words he used could be too strong on this point. At the same hour there was an overflow in the East Free Church, where Mr. Sankey took part with several ministers.

In the evening there were two other great meetings; one for men only in the Theatre Royal, addressed by Mr. Moody, and one in the Middle Free Church, where Rev. Sholto C. Douglas preached a powerful but very long discourse on the folly and danger of "supposing Christ to be in the company," founded on Luke ii. 44. Mr. Sankey sang at both meetings. Early in the day the snowstorm had ceased, and a partial thaw set in which turned the streets into broad expanses of slush.

MR. McNEILL AND GLASGOW BUSINESS MEN.

Every mid-day this week from Monday to the Friday inclusive, Rev. J. McNeill is addressing business men for half-an-hour in the Merchants' Hall, George-square, Glasgow, in the very centre of the city. The beautiful hall was crowded on Monday with an audience in which ministers and evangelists were freely intermingled with the throng of sharp-looking men of business. Mr. J. Campbell-White and other friends well known in the evangelistic and commercial world were on the platform. Mr. McNeill gave a splendidly pungent, powerful, and practical talk on the healing of the blind beggar, as recorded in John ix. Next week we hope to give notes of the address, and his other addresses during the week will appear in succeeding issues. Mr. McNeill preached to an immense congregation in the parish church, Gourock, on Sabbath morning, and continues his mission all the week at Greenock afternoon and evening, being assisted by Mr. Burke as Gospel singer.

Popish Protestantism.

We have recently had a mission in Bournemouth worked from St. Peter's as the centre, and including two other parishes, of which St. Ambrose, of Westbourne, is one. The energy with which it has been worked is worthy of a better cause. One announcement was quickly followed by another, and accompanied by personal invitation. Missions in connection with the Church of England are often heartily supported by all evangelical Christians, but unhappily this mission does not appear to have been conducted on such lines as to deserve the sympathy of evangelical Nonconformists, nor even of Protestant Episcopalians.

The first large bill bore a very suspcious look. It was headed with a cross, and the mission preacher was announced as Rev. Father Maturin. St. Peter's was favoured with the ministrations of this reverend father, while another preacher did duty in Westbourne, who was described as mission priest.

The appearance of these missioners in the public streets has excited no small amount of comment among Churchmen as well as Nonconformists. They have been described as men in petticoats, and, however undignified the description may sound, one cannot but feel how accurate it is. They certainly remind one more of Romanism than of a Protestant Church.

As in the "missions" of Father Ignatius and Rev. Luke Rivington, a great deal of sound evangelical truth is stated and many evangelical hymns are sung; but Mr. Rivington became a Papist, and Ignatius is Papist in all but the name. With the Apostle we rejoice when Christ is preached, by whomsoever preached; but Romish perversions of truth, sandwiched between Gospel truths, do their deadly work.

In connection with the Mission a number of "St. Bartholomew's Church Tracts" have been circulated. Two of these have come under my notice, and it is impossible to read them without indignation, surprise, and grief. Indignation against those who are using a Protestant Church for disseminating teaching so decidedly Romish; surprise that intelligent people, with an open Bible, should be ready to receive or even to countenance such teaching; and grief concerning those whom this Mission is so calculated to mislead and to injure. When the blind lead the blind, we know where both must be found at last.

"When a good man dies, where does his soul go to?" Such is the title of one of these tracts. It is difficult to see in it anything else than the Romish doctrine of Purgatory put into other words. The writer shows an utter ignorance of the Gospel, and the present deliverance from judgment, which is the portion of all who are in Christ. He assumes that the decision as to whether we are saved or lost will not be given till the Judgment Day, and as that is yet future he suggests how absurd it would be to think of a man now in heaven being brought out at last to be tried before the Judgment. If the writer were not grossly ignorant of the doctrine of Justification through the righteousness of God revealed in Christ, and of the important difference between the Great White Throne and the Judgment Seat of Christ, he would never have used such an argument. Is he as ignorant as he appears? or, is he seeking to take advantage of the supposed ignorance of the people?

Among other reasons why the soul does not go to heaven immediately, he affirms that it is not fit for heaven, and that the perfecting and purifying work must continue in the other world. He cites Scripture in proof of it—here is his solitary passage (Phil. i. 6), "Being confident of this very thing that He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." Again, we must marvel either at his own ignorance, or at that which he supposes in his readers. Has he never read Col. 1. 12: "Giving thanks unto the Father, who made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light"? Does he not know that his interpretation of the text he quotes is directly contradicted by verse 23 of the same chapter? And that such a method of interpreting Scripture is directly condemned by Article xx. of his own church? Surely evangelical Church people will not, without protest, allow such teaching as this.

The other tract is entitled, "Is the Bible, and the Bible only, the religion of Christians?" It will be noticed that the title itself is an alteration of Chillingworth's famous phrase. Why was the word "Protestants" omitted and "Christians" put in its place? Is it not because Protestantism commands no sympathy from the writer? The further one reads the more it appears that the aim of the tract is to undo as far as possible the work of the glorious Reformation. The question of the title is answered in the first sentence of the tract. "No; certainly not." What, then, is necessary besides the Bible? The answer is—the Church, which alone can interpret the Bible. A few sentences may be quoted. "The Church teaches, the Bible proves. God has given us the Church to be our guide." "It is not really honouring the Bible to put it into the place of the Church." Here is one of his illustrations of the usefulness of the Church as an interpreter of the Bible. A man who had been born out of wedlock read Deut. xxiii. 2, which says: "A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord." He concluded that he could not be saved, and gave up Holy Communion. This writer adds: "He forgot that, being a baptized man, he himself was already a member of Christ, the child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of Heaven. If he had gone and asked his clergyman about it he would have been set right at once." Surely a much less important individual than the clergyman might have corrected so glaring a mistake. We venture to think that a youthful scholar in one of our Sunday-schools could have set the man right.

We give a few other illustrations of the manner in which the tract insults the intelligence of its readers. Against those who would oppose the advance of Ritualism by saying "The Bible does not say that you are to burn candles in church," the writer replies, "It does not say that you are to burn gas either." This is supposed to be an answer to the objection. To strengthen this foolish argument the writer adds, "There is no text which says we are not to murder our grandmothers, but no sensible person doubts that it is forbidden by the Sixth Commandment." Who but those utterly destitute of intelligence could receive such imbecility as argument?

The true position of the writer appears in the following sentences: "We cannot value the Bible too highly if we value it properly. It is, next to the Sacraments, the most precious gift God has given to the Church." Note the words italicised. So the order is—first Church, next Sacraments, and third the Bible! And here is a definite advice as to how to use it: "Every Christian ought to read at least a few verses of one of the four Gospels every day of his life." Why the four Gospels only? Why not the Epistles, and the Old Testament, as fulfilled and interpreted by the New? Is it because Sacerdotalism has no chance of existence when the whole Bible is diligently studied?

Other sections of the Church are thus described:—"All the different sects receive the Bible from the Church, for none of them is more than three hundred years old. When their founders separated from the Church, they took the Bible with them." Is this statement made ignorantly, or is it a deliberate breach of the Ninth Commandment?

Is it not time for evangelical Christians of all denominations to unite in a protest against such errors being taught in a Church which has been called, "The Bulwark of Protestantism"? Surely another Reformation is becoming necessary.

West End Branch Y.M.C.A.

Sir T. Fowell and Lady Victoria Buxton held an evening reception at Burlington Hall, Savile-row, on Thursday week. Owing to a recent attack of influenza, Sir Fowell Buxton was prevented from personally presiding, but his place was filled by Mr. Victor Buxton, who gave, in his father's name, a cordial welcome to all present. He then went on to urge the claims of Christ, a Leader who could never fail, and who alone could inspire perfect confidence and bring peace to the soul.

Canon Fleming followed, speaking of the great work being carried on by the Y.M.C.A., so entirely suited to the needs of the young men of the present day. As to its unsectarian character, he said that neither the Nonconformists nor the Church of England could claim the organisation as their own, but that its members belonged to the true Church Catholic, the Church of Christ. He then urged the advantages of being constantly at work, and of uniting every-day work with some work for Christ—in fact, making it all Christ's work, inasmuch as it is done for his glory.

A BIRMINGHAM PARISH.

The parish of Aston, Birmingham, has an evangelical vicar, Rev. E. A. Knox, who labours by many means to make good proof of his ministry. There are two churches, each well attended, and seven mission services for adults, in various buildings and rooms, every Sunday evening. There are two "lay" readers, one of whom has been at work for many years. There are five cottage meetings weekly, conducted by laymen, who are joined together in a little "Home Workers' Union," the members of which undertake to be directly engaged in spiritual work. Some are in training for open-air services, it please God, for the summer months, either give addresses or assist in the singing.

Nearly fourteen hundred children are under instruction in eight Sunday-schools, which are of various grades, some for boys attending the Grammar School, some for the different Board schools, while one, newly opened, is for perfectly ragged children, into which some 150 children have already been gathered. For work among men and youths there is an early morning school, in which the religious character is steadfastly maintained. This numbers about one hundred adults every Sunday morning. There is also a working men's Bible-class with an attendance of about fifty, and a Lads' Brigade for youths between fourteen and seventeen, which has its Bible-classes and Sunday service. This brigade is formed chiefly of the roughest lads of the parish. Better-class youths have a club, with Bible-class, gymnasium, and debating society, all on the model of the Young Men's Christian Association, though not at present affiliated to it.

For girls there is a branch of the Girls' Friendly Society; but the work in this direction sorely needs extension. Only one room is at all available, and that a most unsuitable one, only free for meetings once or twice a week. Parts of the parish are mapped out into districts, visited by nearly eighty men and women, who keep the clergy informed of cases of sickness and distress. They also distribute tracts. Most of these districts are small, for while there is a desire eventually to cover the whole ground of the poorer neighbourhood with district visitors, there is a still greater anxiety for each visitor, as far as possible, to be able to form a real acquaintance with the character and needs of the people in his or her district, so as, to some extent, to be to each a real friend.

The most urgent needs of the parish are rooms to work in, there being only two rooms perfectly rent free, and these only accommodating 150 and 300 people respectively. Specially there is needed a Home for factory girls, in which work might be carried on on the lines of the Y.W.C.A. A site has been procured and partly paid for, but without help from outside this most pressing undertaking cannot even be begun.

MR. C. INGLIS AT BRIDGWATER.

A gracious visitation of blessing has been experienced at Bridgwater, in connection with the United Mission conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis. Not for many years has there been such a widespread interest in the things of God. The largest buildings in the town have been crowded nightly, and hundreds have stood all through the services, so eager were they to hear the Gospel. Every night five open-air meetings were held at the same hour by the different denominations, and bands of Christians sang through the streets. Many came in from the villages round, some walking twelve miles to attend.

The after-meetings will not be easily forgotten by the hundreds who stayed behind, many of whom were under the deepest conviction of sin. The inquiry-room was often filled with the anxious, and all the ministers of the town were busily engaged till a late hour, pointing inquirers to the Saviour. A large number of names were taken of those who professed conversion, and it has been very cheering to see wives rejoicing over husbands, parents over children, and teachers over scholars brought to decision for Christ. The afternoon Bible-readings were attended by all classes, the Memorial Hall being filled. God's people have been greatly blessed, and many lonely workers encouraged. The unity among all denominations has been so marked that even people in the town have had to say—"See how these Christians love one another." Mr. Inglis is now holding meetings twice a day.

MARCHMONT HOME, ONTARIO.

The work carried on by our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Bilborough-Wallace, at Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ontario, continues to prosper. The new report says:—

The labour and responsibility of placing 282 boys and girls in as many different homes, watching over them, corresponding with them, &c., has not been light; we have often been tired in the work, but never of it, the joy of the Lord has been our strength, and it has brought its own reward. We have had a large number of young children this year, some of them only two and a-half and three years old. These have nearly all been specially nice (but we always think the last the best), such bright, clever, affectionate little things, it seemed sad to see so many deprived of the natural love and sheltering care of their own parents, but He who has said, "leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them," has graciously provided loving hearts and homes, and they are now enjoying the individual love and sympathy that are needed to develop them, and are shedding joy and brightness into many a hitherto childless home. We are glad the prayerful interest in our missionary boy continues, and our prayer is that many more may be led to follow his example and take the Gospel to the regions beyond.

In April, last year, we returned from England with our 182 children, the largest party for a number of years, and all was soon bustle and excitement at the Home. This large number means hardwork and plenty of it; they have all splendid appetites, and require three good meals a day, and a bed at night. Thank God, they are all well and strong, and old enough to look after themselves, so we have very little trouble with them, and only need to keep them busy or amused and out of mischief. They soon begin to scatter, and we have the pleasure of receiving letters from them giving their first impression of the country, their new homes and surroundings.

Seven parties of boys and girls, lads and lasses, numbering 282 have been received into the Home this year; we have sought to sow in their young hearts the good seed of the kingdom, and much prayer has been offered on their behalf. We now leave all with Him who has promised that his word shall not return to Him void, asking those who may read these words to unite with us in the prayer, that the Holy Spirit may so richly and abundantly bless what has been done, that when the Master makes up his jewels, not one of these little ones may be missing. The address of the Home is Marchmont, Belleville, Ontario.

ON the DEATH of MADAME COILLARD,

ZAMBESIA, S. AFRICA.

..... Her mortal remains repose under that great tree in the forest where we had once made a picnic, and under whose branches, when she was able, we used to sit reading, talking, meditating. "What a delightful spot! How calm! how reposing! You will let me be buried here when I die, will you not?" And there she reposes.—Letter from M. Coillard, in the "Journal des Missions," Paris.

Far in the land where Afric's sun is burning,
She lies at rest,
The clay to earth, the soul to God returning.
Vain are our tears, vain our hearts' sad yearning,
He knoweth best.

Long years of toil, endurance, high endeavour,
Lost souls to save,
Long years of weeping, hoping, praying ever—
Till Death's cold clasp her strongest tie should sever—
And then the grave.

No marble slab her lofty virtues telling
Marks her release;
But one, whose heart with anguish deep is swelling,
Prepares with loving hands her humble dwelling,
And all is peace.

They laid her near the tree, whose branches weeping
Shadow the mound.
And there, in faith, though eyes be dimm'd with weeping,
Her life's work done, they leave her calmly sleeping,
In holy ground.

And o'er the tomb, in fondest recollection,
They sing and pray;
And to the heathen preach Christ's resurrection,
How she will be restored to their affection,
At his bright day.

Oh, lonely missionary, comfort taking
Beneath the rod.
The heathen shall be Christ's! The day is breaking;
A little while, and then the glad awaking,
At Home with God.

University Notes.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

The work among the tramps and the open-air services at the Martyrs' Memorial are diligently prosecuted by the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union. The Daily Prayer Meeting continues to be well attended.

The Y.M.C.A. continues to increase its membership, and is now at full work in the new buildings. The Pleasant Sunday Afternoons attract about two hundred men, and it is hoped they will lead many to Him who can make every day pleasant.

The Oxford University Missionary Union holds a weekly meeting during term, and has arranged for a very interesting list of speakers this term. Surgeon-Major Pringle and Rev. H. E. Fox, of Durham, addressed the first two gatherings.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference recently paid his annual visit to Oxford. Dr. Stephenson gave an address to a body of Wesleyan undergraduates banded together as the Wesley Guild, and preached twice to very large congregations.

On Tuesday, February 16, two more meetings were held in connection with the February Simultaneous Meetings, when the same deputation attended, and Surgeon-Major Pringle presided. The inclement weather affected the attendance, but made no difference to the power and blessing which many felt throughout the meeting.

Canon Christopher's Missionary Breakfast is always the first of the series of annual gatherings of the C.M.S. in Oxford. Sermons were preached in several churches, and on Monday, Feb. 15, public meetings were held at Wycliffe Hall and in the Town Hall. The speakers were Mr. Miles MacInnes, M.P., an old Balliol man, as chairman, Rev. H. E. Fox, of Durham, and Rev. H. C. Knox, a C.M.S. missionary at Fuh-Chow, China, as deputation. The addresses were on a high level of interest and spiritual power; seldom has the testimony at these meetings been so uniformly striking and good.

CAMBRIDGE.

A library has just been opened to students at the Divinity Schools; a large selection of books from the late Bishop Lightfoot's library forms the chief portion of the contents.

On Sunday afternoon Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke to men only in the Andrew-street Chapel. The subject dealt with the need and necessity for a higher Christian standard and life.

On the same evening a series of lectures on "Recent Controversies" was begun in the University Church. "Father" Wood, of St. Clement's, was to have spoken but for sudden illness, so his place was taken by Rev. F. Watson, who treated of the "Essays and Reviews."

At a meeting of the Committee of the Cambridge Inter-Collegiate Christian Union, on February 15, it was resolved that the open-air services, held during the summer term in "the Backs," should be discontinued, and the Alexandra Hall meetings be continued during the summer term on Sunday evenings.

The University sermon on February 14 was preached by Rev. A. W. Robinson, of Allhallows, Barking. The preacher attacked the Broad Church idea of "the imitation of Christ" as insufficient in itself, and appealed to love for humanity. He maintained that though social catchwords are useful, yet the great doctrine of forgiveness of sins must be the foundation of practical Christianity.

A great revival of missionary enthusiasm is in progress in the city. The S.P.G. made an effort at its annual meeting recently, whilst the weekly assemblies of the University C. M. Union show a keen interest. On Monday, last week, Dr. Wheeler, of Jerusalem, gave a stirring address in his medical mission work among Jews in the Holy City. He earnestly appealed for a fellow-worker, and also for money to build an efficient hospital, the small one now in use being totally inadequate. On the same evening was held the annual meeting of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, at which Rev. J. Schor spoke.

Rev. Handley Moule, in his Bible-reading on Haggai i. on Sunday, 14th, spoke of the need of doing all for edification. He touched on the spending of the Lord's Day, frivolous conversation, &c. His fourth sermon, on Psa. xxxii., was delivered in the evening of the day named. "In a time when thou mayest be found" (6) may be translated, "In a time when Thou hast found out them." It was a time of "finding out" when Nathan came to David; for Hezekiah, about the ambassadors and his own pride; for Peter, when, after months of leadership, he found out himself; for Saul, as described in 1 Tim. i. 16. This verse practically says: "My being led round to the peace of God again is for a pattern to every one that shall be touched by God." "The floods of great waters." The man whom God has touched has come to touch Him.

The Book World.

Voices From Nature (1s. Holness). An admirable book for the young, showing how Nature speaks of God, and associating Gospel truths with facts which little folks can easily apprehend.

Gleanings in the Hebrews is the title of a series of thoughtful studies by James Sprunt. Such as cannot read scholarly expositions will find these simple chapters suggestive. (2s. George Stoneman.)

The Subject-Testament, by William Foster, is a useful manual, arranged to facilitate the study of the many topics of the New Testament. The classification—historical, doctrinal, practical, and prophetical—has been well devised; and the textual references have been selected with care. (1s. Simpkin, Marshall and Co.)

The Nurse's Dictionary, compiled by Honnor Morten, describes the principal medical and nursing terms and abbreviations, instruments, drugs, diseases, treatments, &c., encountered in the ward or sick-room, and is likely to prove of special use to novices in the work of caring for the sick. (The Hospital, Limited, 140, Strand, W.C.)

Pastor Archibald G. Brown's Memorial Sermon on the late Mr. Spurgeon has been published by R. Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. (1d.) It forms No. 6 of the new series of discourses by the minister of the East London Tabernacle Church, and is based on 2 Kings ii. 3. It will occupy a place peculiarly its own among the many pulpit utterances called forth by the departure of the great evangelical preacher.

Quelques Pensees is a volume of selections from the works of the Countess Agénor de Gasparin. Many of the thoughts are gems of the first water; all are worth reading, most of them provoke admiration, some compel earnest reflection. A few poetical and prose fragments complete a volume which is specially valuable because the photograph of the talented author appears as a frontispiece. (3 fr. 50. Paris: Calmann Levy, 3, Rue Auber.)

Old England is the title of a goodly volume of historical sketches by E. A. W. In free and parish libraries it is sure to be a favourite, for the pictures are large and numerous, and the letterpress is always clear and pointed. Another recommendation of the book is that the author gives no fanciful interpretation to those great events which patriots and Protestants should at the present time bear well in mind. (3s. 6d. W. Hunt and Co.)

The Indians of Canada: Their Manners and Customs. By John McLean, M.A., Ph.D. 3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly. This eminently readable work has reached a third edition. Nine years spent among the Blood Indians of the Canadian North-West have given the author opportunities of learning much that is interesting to young and old. He tells his story admirably, and after describing the life of the people shows what has been done for their evangelisation. We heartily commend the volume.

Messrs. Horner and Son are steadily carrying forward their useful series of Penny Stories, the ninety-third having just been issued. The circulation of these capital books has been enormous, each tale having been printed to the number of from 100,000 to 350,000 copies. The very handy Threepenny Library is also being added to at short intervals. Each book contains two or more stories, illustrated, and stitched in attractive colours. We trust these bright and wholesome publications will continue to enjoy the popularity they so richly deserve.

The Hidden Hand. The striking pamphlet on Romanism bearing this title has been issued in an enlarged form. On the cover there is a representation of the golden cap of mystery extended by a priestly hand. The pages give fearful facts concerning the apostasy and wickedness of the Papal system, and an additional chapter is devoted to the cause and remedy of Ireland's sorrows. There are no compliments to Rome or halting statements as regards error in this pamphlet, which should be widely circulated at the present time. (3d. Marshall Brothers.)

The Christ of The Heart and the Christ of History, and Other Sermons. By Rev. Z. Mather. (5s. James Clarke and Co.) These are carefully-prepared discourses, which, as we gather from the preface, the author did not like to consign to the flames. Coming across passages favouring the delusive doctrine of universal salvation, we conclude that the mission of the book can be only hurtful, and that it would have been well if the author had destroyed his sermons, rather than to send them forth to inspire false hopes in the breasts of unspiritual men.

Pain, its Mystery and Meaning, and Other Sermons. By Rev. J. E. Foster. (Nisbet and Co.) This book evinces deep thought and considerable knowledge of the two Divine books, nature and revelation. The writer knows the value of illustrations and apt quotations from secular literature. The first sermon on Pain is exceedingly suggestive, and those on Redemption, and the Church and the World deal with old subjects in a fresh and impressive manner. We observe, however, here and there, an uncalled-for depreciation of doctrine as the basis of true piety and righteousness.

The Saint and His Saviour: The progress of the soul in the knowledge of Jesus. By C. H. Spurgeon. (3s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.) The departure of the celebrated preacher invests with a special interest this reprint of his first book. The chapters are twelve in number, and are characterised by sound teaching, forcible expression, and spiritual unction. Each study is followed by an appeal to the unconverted reader, and the volume deserves the attention of theologians and the earnest perusal of all—whether they be disciples of Jesus or are exercised in mind concerning eternal things.

The Pioneer Preacher: An Autobiography. By Rev. Sherlock Bristol. (3s. 6d. W. G. Wheeler.) Over seventy years of age, the author of this work has had a varied and marvellous career. Breaking down in health, he gave up pastoral work, and spent the year 1850 in gold-mining in California. Resuming ministerial duty, he was no less diligent or fervent than before in Christian service. The pages are all alive with incident, relating how the pioneer preacher dealt with wild animals and human ruffians, as well as escaped drowning and all sorts of deaths in regions which less than a generation ago were entirely outside the pale of civilisation.

Rest, Conflict, Victory, or Lights and Shadows of the Inward Life. By Samuel Garratt, M.A. (1s. 6d. Hunt and Co.) Canon Garratt's aim in this little volume has been to give some help to those who are desiring to grow in grace and follow after holiness. He maintains that rest is the common privilege of all believers, the blessing inseparable from true believing. It is not a rest of indolence, but of conflict with the powers of evil, in which we shall prove victorious through Him who encourages us in the words "Be of good cheer; I have overcome." The pages are rich in suggestion as to the true meaning of many scriptures, and offer counsels of supreme practical importance in the life of faith.

Thomas Cook's Early Ministry: with incidents and suggestions concerning Christian work. By Henry T. Smart. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) A Wesleyan minister here sketches the career of the well-known Methodist Evangelist, who for ten years has done an important spiritual work. We agree with the author that the story is calculated by the Divine blessing to encourage God's people and to stimulate evangelists and lay preachers, as well as ministers, to emulate Mr. Cook's singleness of purpose and sincere devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ. The early difficulties of the evangelist are as interesting as the results of his labours have been truly significant. All who are engaged in aggressive Gospel work will find much in these pages to assist them. There is an admirable portrait.

The popular paper for pianoforte and American organ players, The Keyboard (22, Paternoster-row, E.C.), is twopence monthly, and not one shilling as stated, by error, in our last issue.

"How Readest Thou? or, Christian Baptism as Contained in the Word of God." By Frank H. White. (4d. Partridge.) The immersion of believers on profession of personal faith in Christ is here advocated with much force, and in the right spirit.

The Crimes of Atheism is the title of a sermon by Edward Poulson, in reply to a plea for Atheism. It is a useful commentary upon godless opinions, teachings, and practices, as well as a vindication of the Christian faith. (3d. Reeves and Turner, 196, Strand.)

The World and the World to Come. By Captain C. J. Yeatman. (1s. Economic Publishing Co., 30, Bouverie-street, E.C.) The principles and pursuits of the present evil world are brought to the light of God's revealed will, and exhibited in contrast with eternal realities.

Christian Loyalty. Rev. G. D. Hooper has published a pamphlet containing addresses answering the questions: "Why am I a Christian—a Protestant, a Nonconformist, a Baptist?" The pages are thoughtful, and characterised by charity as well as candour. (6d. From the Author, Hendon, N.W.)

The Wesleyan Missionary Society is arranging to issue a new magazine entitled Work and Workers in the Mission Field. It will appear monthly, price 3d., will be well illustrated, and be devoted, not merely to the missions of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, but to Christian missions in general, as now carried on throughout the world.

The Place and Service of Women in Churches. By Frances S. Hallowes. (J. Clarke and Co.) This paper, read at the Autumnal Session of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, deals with an important subject in a reasonable manner. Equality of responsibility and privilege is contended for, and this is distinguished from identity of specific work or duty.

The Greatest Evil of our Time is an address to men by Dr. J. Adams Rawlings, of Swansea. It is a plain and pointed argument and appeal for purity of life. We trust it will be brought under the notice of such as it is specially designed to influence. Many who have so far kept themselves pure might be safeguarded against temptation by the perusal of this very valuable little book. (6d. W. G. Wheeler, 21a, Warwick-lane, E.C.)

The Old Testament and Its Critics, a lecture by Rev. Dr. G. C. M. Douglas, Principal of the Free Church College, Glasgow, is a pamphlet showing discernment as well as scholarship, a sound spiritual sense as well as thorough intellectual grasp. Those who wish to know the course of Old Testament criticism during the past generation will find it briefly set out in this address, recently delivered by the Professor to his students of Hebrew and Old Testament theology. (6d. Glasgow: John N. Mackinlay.)

Letters to the Editor.

A QUESTION FOR CHRISTIAN FARMERS.

Dear Sir,—Farmers will be busy in the next few weeks sowing spring corn. In the face of all the evil that is caused by drink, is it right for Christian farmers who are total abstainers and members of temperance societies to grow barley to sell for malting to be made into beer?

I am a farmer, and ever since I read letters in The Christian some time ago about Christian grocers selling intoxicating drinks, this barley-growing has been much in my mind. It is written, "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind," Rom. xiv. 5. I am happy to say I am; for ever since I have been a Christian I have had a strong feeling against the drink evil.

I know it is said—What am I to grow in place of barley? But the first question should be "Is it right before the Lord to grow it for this purpose?

THE LORD'S DAY OBLIGATION.

Dear Sir,—I think it would be helpful to many of us if the practical subject of "Sunday travelling" were allowed to be discussed in The Christian.

By this term I mean the regular or occasional practice by Christian workers of making use of public conveyances, whether cabs, 'busses, railways &c., on the Lord's Day, on their way to or from mission and other like work in which they are engaged, carried on at a distance from their homes.

Few, if any, amongst us would even aim at the observance, in its entirety, of the Jewish Sabbath according to God's command to his ancient people.

Many amongst us may feel that there is no direct or indirect prohibition to Christians to use public conveyances on the First Day of the week, on the Lord's work.

But when the consideration of "expediency" comes in, there is surely something to be learned from whole-hearted, sensible, experienced Christians.

Believers who are equally desirous to do their Lord's will, differ widely in their opinion and practice in this matter, and there are, at times, grave misunderstandings amongst them on this account. Would not a calm, prayerful, unprejudiced and fearless expression of opinion as to what is to be gathered from God's Word, tend to allay needless fears in some, or change the practice of others, according to pros and cons brought forward on due authority.

It is wrong, I think, for a Christian to act against his conscience; but so fallible a guide as mere "conscience" is, has to be educated and informed, else it may lead a man to do the most foolish things—and for a man to do foolish things is not according to the will of God.—Yours faithfully,

London. H. G. MacGregor.

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES NEWCOMB.

Mr. James Newcomb, who for nearly a quarter of a century has been closely connected with Dr. Barnardo in his Edinburgh Castle Mission Work, fell peacefully asleep on Tuesday, 16th inst. He had reached the threescore years and ten, and had been a valiant soldier of the Cross for nearly fifty years. In his work as visiting elder of the Edinburgh Castle Church, he had come to be one of the most widely known and respected Christian workers in East London. The Lord's poor, among whom he was a welcome visitor, will sadly miss their dear old friend.

Mrs. Ricketts on the Congo.

Mrs. Hind-Smith writes us from 20, Gildridge-road, Eastbourne:—"Accept my thanks for inserting my appeal for the box going to Mrs. Ricketts on the Congo. Let me, through you, thank the friends who made a liberal and prompt response in goods and cash. Mr. Jameson (Liverpool Y.M.C.A.) writes:—'We sent off a very handsome package, well screwed up and air-tight, not an inch to spare.' He also mentions the receipt of some parcels too late. We shall (D.V.) send again in May.

"Parcels have been received from Mrs. Wycliffe Wilson, Miss J. Goundry, Mrs. Mansel Rees, Mrs. Desgrand, Miss Ethel Taylor and sisters, Mrs. Cannings, Mr. W. Wilson Hind-Smith, Miss Pearce, Miss S. Dawson, Mr. A. Plummer, Mrs. E. K. Brown, 'A Reader of The Christian,' and Mrs. F. H. Fox. Money from: Miss Jones, Miss Hebden, Mrs. West, Mrs. E. A. Beddow, Mrs. Herbert, and Mrs. T. Harvey. Also some anonymous gifts."

Influenza and the poor.—The terrible epidemic is playing sad havoc in thousands of East-end homes. In some instances whole families are stricken down. Honest, hard-working men and women are unable to earn their daily bread. Privation and suffering and, unless speedy help be given, the prospect of death is on all hands. Will your readers kindly help us to provide milk, beef-tea, and other suitable nourishment and clothing for such?—Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawey-road, E.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which, of course, are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 28.—HEBREWS V.

Christ's Qualifications as Priest (1-10).—"Ordained," i.e., appointed (R.V.). Having to act for men He must be a man, acquainted with human weakness and need; having to do with God, He must be called and appointed by Him (4). 2. "Who can bear gently with the ignorant and erring?" (R.V.). It is very helpful, in our often inability to see God's will, and in our wilful wandering from it, to realise how completely our High Priest understands, and how mighty and tender is the love that broods over us. 3. The Aaronic high priest had to make special atonement first for himself (Lev. iv. 3; xvi. 6, 15-17). But Jesus was without sin. He learnt what sin was by resisting it; we, alas! by being overcome. 4. The selection of Levi was an act of pure grace on God's part; indeed, it must be so with all who stand before God. They must be chosen and caused to approach (Psa. lxv. 4). 5. The reference to Christ being begotten applies to Him in his Resurrection Glory (Rom. i. 4; Acts xiii. 33). His Priesthood dates from the completion of his mediatorial work on the cross. 7. No scene in our Lord's life perfectly fulfils these marvellous words like Gethsemane. It was there that his real humanity showed itself. God though He were, yet He was swept by anguish in anticipation of the sin-bearing of the cross. And if the anticipation were this, what must have been the weight of a world's sin when really assumed? "Was heard and delivered from his fear," i.e., the awful fear that threatened to paralyse Him passed away. He was strengthened. 8. We never really learn a thing till we put it in practice. Hence Christ had to obey to death, to learn what obedience meant in its uttermost meaning. 9. He was always perfect as God, He was now perfected as Man, and can effect in each of us, if only we will obey Him, a perfect deliverance from all evil. 10. In Psalm cx., which is evidently Messianic.

Spiritual Ignorance (11-14).—The teacher has to suit his pace to his pupils. How many things we miss because we are such inapt scholars in God's school! 12. God always reckons up the time during which we have been scholars. "The rudiments of the first principles." Milk is food which does not come direct from natural substances, but is prepared through another's digestion. So many cannot get nutrition direct from God's truth, but have to depend on what others obtain, and pass on. 13. "Without experience" (R.V.). 14. "For full-grown men." We grow by using our faculties and perceptions.

MONDAY, FEB. 29.—HEBREWS VI.

The First Principles (1-3).—"Let us cease to speak of the first principles of Christ." Leaving them only as a builder leaves a foundation, he is never so much on it, as when furthest from it in the upper storeys. It is not improbable that the third and fourth of these six classes are synonymous with the first and second, and should be considered as a parenthesis containing the Jewish equivalents. Dead works are those which are wrought apart from the life of God. Even though they seem religious, they are dead, and need to be repented of. 2. Baptisms, or washings, indicate outwardly what repentance is inwardly. The laying on of hands indicates what faith is spiritually. "My faith would lay her hand."

The Once Enlightened (4-8).—This is a very difficult passage. In reading it we must remember others which speak of the eternal safety of the believer; chosen in Christ, "he shall never perish." And we are therefore almost compelled to think that the description given here cannot imply that they had been really saved, but that they were promising professors, enlightened, but not lit; the good Word of the Lord was tasted, but not eaten; they had been brought within the range of the unseen, but were not permanently affected by it. The Jew who was discontented with Judaism might find refuge in Christianity; the emotions which had petrified under the one might be softened and touched under the other; but if a man had passed untouched through Christianity there was nothing beyond that. The most powerful motives possible having been presented to him in vain, there was nothing beyond. 6. When the Son of God is crucified, there is no further messenger; the next thing is destruction. 7-8. The failure is not due to any lack of the genial influences of heaven, but to the nature of the soil. And if we are at last reprobate, it will always be our own fault. The rain and sunshine are not partial; it is we who are contumacious. 2 Pet. ii. 21, 22, gives an illustration to the same effect.

Better Things (9-12).—We should not only seek salvation, but all its accompaniments. 10. God has put into us the qualities which lead to a fair and holy life, and when those qualities blossom in the love, hope, faith and patience which are mentioned here, He rewards them with righteousness. 11. The more diligence we show, the more hope we enjoy. 12. "Followers," i.e., imitators. Notice the two conditions by which promises are inherited; we must believe and wait for them.

The Promise to Abraham (13-20).—The foregoing paragraph receives a conspicuous illustration in this. Abraham believed God, and patiently endured. 17. "Wherefore." 18. God's promise and God's oath are a double door, behind which they who have fled for refuge are safe—a double window, behind which all noise dies down. 18. The allusion is either to the cities of refuge, or to a ship fleeing before a storm. 19. Hope is sure, because it grapples an unyielding bottom; stedfast, because it will not snap under the strain; entering &c., because it unites us with the unseen. Jesus has taken our hope and let it down in the clear waters of the inner harbour.

TUESDAY, MARCH 1.—HEBREWS VII.

Melchisedec (1-3).—He was probably a literal ruler and priest in Salem. The blue smoke betokened his sacrifices morning and evening. His realm was peace amid the turbulent lawlessness of those wild days. Like him, Jesus meets us when flushed with success, and, weary in body, especially liable to temptation. 2. Righteousness must always precede peace. 3. The silences of Scripture are to be noticed, and, therefore, the writer lays stress on the absence of ancestry in the case of Melchisedec, so great a contrast to the requisites of the Aaronic priesthood, and argues that in this he was a type of the eternal Son of God. If our Lord was to be a priest after the order of Melchisedec, it would be essential that He should not come of a priestly family. We know nothing of Melchisedec's birth or death. He glides mysteriously before our eye for a moment, like a figure past our window, and is gone. Notice that Christ was not made like him, but he like Christ—Christ the archetype.

Melchisedec Greater than Aaron (4-10).—This was established by the fact of Abraham giving him tithes and receiving his blessing; and in the patriarch Levi was represented. Obviously, then, if our Lord is a priest after his order, He must, like him, be greater than the priests of the house of Aaron; as much greater than they, as they are greater than the people of whom they receive tithes.

A Change in the Law (11-19).—The imperfection of the Levitical priesthood also appeared from the fact that in Psalm cx., long after its first establishment, God spoke of the rising up of another priest. 16. Evidently the Aaronic priesthood had finished its mission, because it was maintained only in obedience to a mere outward and carnal commandment; Christ's, on the other hand, is the expression of an eternal life. 18. "For there is, on the one hand, a disannulling ...and, on the other hand, a bringing in thereupon of"...19. The Law was the introduction to the Gospel, in which we draw nigh.

Christ Appointed by an Oath (20-22).—Here, again, his superiority is apparent. The solemnity of an oath, and the fact of there being a surety to secure its fulfilment, indicated the same great lesson.

Christ's Eternal Prevalence (23-25).—Aaron went up to die on Mount Hor. Each priest left his office and robes to another, but Christ's priesthood cannot pass to another. And, therefore, He will save to the uttermost extent of time and requirement, from the greatest and from the minutest sin, all his people who come to God by Him.

Christ's Inherent Quality (26-28).—No infirmity weakens Him, no stain or sin unfits Him. Above the heavens and in the throne He exercises his ministry; He is the Son, perfected for his office by obedience unto death.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 2.—HEBREWS VIII.

The True Sanctuary (1-3).—"Now in the things which we are saying, the chief point is" (R.V.). The sitting down indicates a finished work: on the right hand, &c., his Majesty; the right hand is also the symbol of energetic action. 2. "True," i.e., real, of which the Mosaic Tabernacle was the type. That sanctuary is the meeting place of all saintly hearts.

The Better Covenant (3-13).—The gifts which Christ offers are those which we bring to Him and He perfumes. 5. All life should be made after that pattern. Be much in the mount of God, and be sure to repeat in each tassel and board and curtain what He shows (John v. 19). 6. In proportion as the new covenant is better than the old must the Mediator of the one be better than the mediator of the other. The superiority of the new covenant is thus another proof of the superiority of Christ; and the new covenant is so much superior because its promises are so much better. 8. We, though Gentiles, come into the provisions of this new covenant because we are of the true circumcision (Phil. iii. 3). 9. How eager the people were at the outset to promise obedience as their share of the covenant (Ex. xix. 8). So, indeed, is it with us all, till we learn by repeated failure that we cannot fulfil the conditions on which God proposes to bless us. 10. A covenant is a promise with a condition, but there is no condition here, because Jesus Christ has stood as our surety, and his obedience is reckoned as ours. Notice these seven I wills. 11. Up to that moment it is our evident duty to teach fellow-citizens and brothers. 12. How blessed that sin is not remembered. God treats us as if it had not been (Micah vii. 19).

THURSDAY, MARCH 3.—HEBREWS IX.

The Tabernacle and its Service described (1-10).—1. "A Sanctuary of this world" (R.V.) 4. In this enumeration the altar of incense is associated with the most holy place, because it stood so near the veil. Its analogue is Rev. viii. 4. The ark was an emblem of Christ; the wood of his humanity; the gold of his deity; He is the manna of the world, the ever-budding plant of renown, beautiful and fruitbearing through death. In Him the demands of the law represented by the tables are hidden by the Mercy Seat or propitiatory (Rom. iii. 25). 7. The difficulty of a sinner's access to the holy God was set forth in this striking symbol. There is a gateway in St. Peter's through which the Pope passes only once a year; how glad we may be that the gates for prayer stand open day and night! 10. Ps. li. and Micah vi. 6 show the sadness of pious, thoughtful Jews at the inefficiency of their holiest ritual.

The Good Things to Come (11-14).—12. The eternal redemption of the cross is only possible through the Eternal Spirit of v. 14. The cross of Christ is the expression of the eternal purpose of God. 13. The ashes of the heifer were for the daily purification of the ceremonially defiled, and we need to apply for the daily cleansing of the blood of Christ. Acts which are destitute of a living faith are dead, however religious in their outward appearance, and we need very carefully to seek daily cleansing. Paul meant this in Acts xxiii. 1, and xxiv. 18. Mark the inveteracy of sin: we cannot do without the blood of Christ. Not by water only, but by water and blood.

The Covenants Contrasted (15-22).—15. God was able to introduce a new covenant, because the death of Christ had taken place to put away the transgressions committed under the first, so that Christian Jews might partake as well of the eternal inheritance as of the eternal redemption. It must never be forgotten that all forgiveness of sin under the Mosaic law was with reference to the cross (Rom. iii. 25). 16. Here the writer turns aside to the illustration of a will or testament, which comes into operation only after the death of the testator, and the new covenant is dated from Calvary. 18. In token of this the first covenant was ratified by blood-shedding (Ex. xxiv. 8). The blood must have very much spoilt the beauty of the new-made Tabernacle, but everything had to be subservient to the great lesson of the necessity of blood, as an atonement for sin.

Christ's Three Appearances (23-28).—24. He appears in heaven for us, manifested there as our Intercessor. 26. He appeared at the ridge or meeting-place of the ages to put away sin. 28. He will appear the second time. Note the writer's insistance on the once offering, and contrast Calvary's sin-bearing with the Second Advent, which will be "apart from sin," and shall accomplish the complete salvation of those that wait for Him.

FRIDAY, MARCH 4.—HEBREWS X.

The Insufficiency of the Levitical Dispensation (1-18).—What the rough outline is to the completed picture, that the law of Moses and the Levitical prescriptions are to the Gospel. "The good things to come" are the Gospel times. (2) The very fact of daily repetition argued their insufficiency. (3) The daily and yearly offering was, so to speak, an incessant confession of their inefficiency, and reminder of Him who was to come. (5) Noting the powerlessness of man, by any sacrifices he could devise, to atone for sin, the Lord Jesus volunteered to do what no ritual or ceremonial could have done. The story of Jesus is written large for those whose eyes are opened to see it in the Old Testament Scriptures. There is a slight change between the "opened ear" of the Psalm and the "prepared body" of this quotation. But the difference is not so great, for the ear bored to the post indicated the entire surrender of the servant's body to his owner's will. (9) What a glorious example is given in Jesus of absolute obedience to the will of God. If always these words were on our lips, how blessed and helpful our lives would be, because the will of God is the blessing and sanctification of men. (10) We have been sanctified as to our standing, set apart for God; and we may reckon on the grace of the Holy Spirit to set us apart in our experience and walk. (11) Note the contrast between the standing of the priests and the sitting of the Priest, the one indicating an incomplete, the other a complete work. (14) All that needed to be done for our final and entire deliverance from sin was done when Jesus returned to God; it is for us to claim and enter upon our full inheritance. (15) How evidently are these words attributable to the Holy Ghost, spoken through Jeremiah. They are quoted to show that Christ's work for us was so absolutely perfect that God could promise these blessings to us, sinners though we were, without let or hindrance. Let us believe for them.

Urgent Exhortations (19-25).—The way was new, because so recently opened by the Saviour's death, and living because only those can tread it who are possessors of the Divine life. 20. When Jesus died, the veil of the Temple was rent from the top to the bottom, emblem of his rent body, through the offering of which our reconciliation with God was wrought. 22. Four conditions for close communion with God—true, i.e., sincere, believing, sprinkled with the blood, our bodies kept pure by the daily grace of God, like water to the flesh. 24. We must not be selfish in our religious life, but looking after others. With one hand holding fast, with the other hand withdrawing the souls of men from peril. 25. "The day" would probably mean that of judgment on Jerusalem; but with reference also to "the day of God."

Warnings against Apostasy (26-39).—These strong remonstrances were needed in those days of sore persecution. Consider the certain punishment (28) consequent on the contumacious rejection of the greatest offers God could make (26-31). Consider the sufferings of the past, the reward for which will be imperilled if you falter now (32-35). Consider the blessed advent of the Master, with his complete salvation and his Well done (36-39). The faith by which the just live lays hold on the unseen, and takes thence the supply of hope it needs for patient endurance.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5.—HEBREWS XI.

Faith and its Heroes.—"Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the giving substance to things not seen" (R.V.). When we believe we are able in thought to enjoy what is as yet unseen and future. Faith greatens men. Many names mentioned here are of men not specially gifted, who yet through faith wrought great marvels for God. Faith lifts up the most ordinary human life. Take, for instance, Sarah or Rahab. Faith is possible to all classes: to women as well as men. Jacob the cattle-rearer, and Moses the student, and Barak the soldier. Faith is consistent with different degrees of knowledge. How different the knowledge of God possessed by Samson and Abraham! Faith can master insuperable difficulties. Enoch can walk with God. Daniel can pass unhurt through the lion's den. 8. Faith steps out on the word, and finds it rock. 9. Faith can dwell in tents, because it is sure of the city. 11. Faith looks away from the promise to the Promiser. 13. "Greeted them," as the returning traveller extends his arms to his native village. 16. God cannot belie the faith He has implanted. 23. "Proper," i.e., beautiful. 26. Even then the promise of the Messiah was bound up with the destinies of Israel. 32. Not only in the book of the Judges, but in those of the Maccabbees we may discover the incidents to which reference is made here, and the list has been added to from that day to this. 39. The blessed, who have come off victorious, expect us on the further shore, their full happiness awaits the completion of the whole family of the faithful.

Personalia.

Rev. H. A. Birks has undertaken the writing of a biography of the late Bishop French.

Rev. G. C. Grubb has, by latest accounts, had remarkably interesting services in Sydney.

The Bishop of Bedford had last week to cancel his engagements, owing to an attack of influenza.

Principal Fairbairn intends sailing on March 12th for the United States, in order to deliver the Yale Lectures.

Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, has been laid aside awhile by ill-health.

Rev. Evelyn Hone, vicar of St. John's, Deptford, and well-known as an earnest Evangelical, has been appointed rural dean of Greenwich.

Ven. Archdeacon Warren, whose good work in Japan is so well known, is shortly to be married to Miss Fawcett, who went out to the Mission last year.

Ven. Archdeacon Taylor, D.D., of Liverpool, is now progressing towards recovery, but has been advised to take some rest and change ere resuming his duties.

Rev. G. S. Barrett, who is to preach the London Missionary Society's annual sermon in May, has been stirring his own congregation, in Norwich, on missionary matters, and that with marked success.

Mr. Benson, of the Southwark and Lambeth Mission, has been enabled to resume his work after several weeks' illness. He commences, however, under the shadow of bereavement, having lost his wife after a few days' illness.

Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., founder of the Christian Endeavour Society, intends visiting the Antipodes in the autumn, in order to encourage the workers in the Christian Endeavour Society, which has taken good hold in the Colonies.

Miss Y. M. Skinner, the well-known authoress of the "Friendly Lotter" series, has now become Mrs. J. Cattermole. Her husband is a clergyman, at present without any official duty. Mrs. Cattermole's address is Eleigh Water, near Chard, Somerset.

Pastor A. G. Barley.—We understand that owing to circumstances arising out of Mr. Spurgeon's death, and the absence of arrangements for his continued connection with the French work, Mr. Barley will probably seek at once a return to a home pastorate.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe is still at Cannes. In a recent letter Miss Radcliffe says: "My father is now getting on nicely, and is convalescent. He has been very ill. We thank you most heartily for requesting prayer on his behalf in the columns of The Christian."

Rev. Evan Hopkins is leaving Marseilles for Jerusalem on Feb. 27, and will hold some meetings there for the deepening of spiritual life among Christian workers. He then proposes to travel up to Damascus, visiting the various mission labourers, and home via Athens.

International S. S. Lessons.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, MAR. 6.

The Downfall of Judah.—Jer. xxxix. 1-10.

Golden Text: Matt. xxiii. 38.

For further details of this story see 2 Kings xxv. 1-12; Jer. lii. 1-16. The wickedness of Judah which led to this judgment is described in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14-16. A terrible judgment such as this is always the consequence of terrible and persistent sin.

Jerusalem taken (1-2).—The event took place in the reign of Zedekiah, the son of Josiah, and the uncle of Jehoiakim. He was not one of the worst, but was, perhaps, the weakest and most irresolute of the kings of Judah. He had the name and position of king, but was really a helpless tool in the hands of his princes (xxxviii. 5). He was willing to hear, and would, if he dared, have heeded Jeremiah's warning. He has many imitators. Those who know God's message, but have not courage to act upon it, are repeating his folly, and will as certainly be judged. Note the company among which God places "the fearful and unbelieving" (Rev. xxi. 8).

The siege lasted eighteen months before the city was "broken up," i.e., before a breach was made (1, 2). This is a testimony to the natural strength of the city, for there were comparatively few people left to defend it. The fact reminds us that nothing can resist the judgments of God when they fall. Now the weakest and guiltiest may flee to Him and be saved; then the strongest will resist in vain (Heb. ii. 3). It is also a testimony to the persistence and skill of the Chaldeans. See how they effected a breach (2 Kings xxv. 1). What these "forts" were cannot be exactly defined. "We must suppose some line of enclosure, or erections from which the besiegers could with greater effect discharge missiles over the walls." During the siege the people within the city suffered unutterable horrors from famine. See Lam. ii. and iv. What an evil and bitter thing it is to rebel against God.

The event had been frequently foretold. This had been the burden of Jeremiah's predictions, who had also announced that the only way of salvation for king and people and city was submission and surrender to the Chaldeans. Why had not his message been heeded? Because then, as now, men did not care to believe that they were deserving of such terrible judgment; then, as now, the way of salvation was too humbling to their pride; then, as now, there were false prophets like Hananiah (xxviii. 1-4) who prophesied smooth things; and then, as now, their confidence in another way of salvation—the help of Egypt—rendered their acceptance of God's way impossible. We are reminded that, however unpopular or unlikely, or opposed to our own ideas God's word may be, it is unalterably true (Matt. v. 18), and must be accomplished.

Zedekiah's flight and capture (3-7).—According to Josephus, the Chaldean princes entered the city in the darkness of night, and took up their position in the middle court (3). The king does not seem to have known that they had effected an entrance until he saw them there (4). Then he made an attempt to escape. The plain—or Arabah (R.V.)—describes the whole valley stretching from the Sea of Galilee southward. He sought to make his way to the east of the Jordan, where pursuit would have been more difficult. If he had believed God, he would have known that his attempt was vain (xxxviii. 17,18). "Riblah was a city on the Orontes, and on the road which led from Palestine to Babylon." Here Nebuchadnezzar waited during the siege, and here Zedekiah was judged, his sons slain, and his eyes put out.

In all this, prophecy found accurate fulfilment. There were two apparently contradictory predictions concerning Zedekiah, one in Jer. xxxiv. 3; the other in Ezek. xii. 13. How can it be that he shall see the king of Babylon, shall go to Babylon and die there, yet shall never see Babylon? Unconsciously, Nebuchadnezzar answers the question, and exactly fulfils the Divine Word. Who dare trifle with a word which God can fulfil by such strange means? It is the word of the same God with which we have to do.

The failure of Zedekiah's attempt to escape is an illustration of Luke xiii. 24-29. He was terribly anxious to be saved, but at the wrong time, and in the wrong way. What is God's time for saving us? and what is God's way? See 2 Cor. vi. 2; Rom. x. 3.

The butchery of his sons was the last sight upon which the eyes of Zedekiah looked. How memory must have tortured him during his subsequent imprisonment! Was he not himself responsible for their doom? No man sins alone. His example involves others, whose judgment aggravates his own.

Judgment and Mercy (8-10).—Both were mingled in Nebuchadnezzar's treatment of Judah and Jerusalem. According to the prediction, the city, with its walls and palaces, and even its temple, were destroyed. This was a deep grief to Jeremiah (Lam. i. and ii.). Yet Nebuzar-adan, prompted by Nebuchadnezzar, showed kindness to Jeremiah (11-14; xl. 1-4). God takes thought for his servants who care for Him. "The poor of the people" (10), who formerly had nothing, now possessed vineyards and fields. Is this typical of the blessing which comes to the poor in spirit? See Jas. ii. 5; Matt. v. 3.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. William Forbes has been giving Gospel Temperance addresses at the Central Hall, Manchester, and in other parts of the city.

Eastry.—An evangelistic mission, extending over two weeks, has been conducted here, and has proved a source of great blessing to many.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has been holding an interesting series of evangelistic meetings and children's services in various churches in Jersey city.

Great Somerford.—Mr. W. Evill has conducted a special Mission at Great Somerford and Seagry. The Mission has proved a source of blessing to many.

Wainfleet.—Special evangelistic services have been conducted here by Mr. Philpott, Joyful News evangelist, and the spiritual results are very satisfactory.

Guildford.—An evangelistic mission has just been held at Guildford by Rev. Geo. Eddy, district missionary. The results have been very gratifying to the workers.

Cropwell Bishop.—Mr. J. W. Shaw, one of Rev. T. Champness's evangelists, is conducting a fruitful Mission at the Wesleyan Chapel here, and much good is being done in the village.

Stony Stratford.—A series of special services has just been held in the Congregational Chapel by Mr. H. Bateman and Sergt.-Major Hines. Several profess to have received great blessing.

Mr. Rowland Sturt has just concluded a successful mission at Mount Zion Chapel, Wolverhampton. The meetings throughout have been well attended, and blessing has followed the preaching of the Word.

Shotley Bridge, Durham.—A fortnight's mission, held here by Mr. G. S. Meek, was brought to a successful issue on Sunday, the 14th inst. The meetings have been largely attended, great interest has been manifested, and much spiritual good done.

Ireland.—A successful evangelistic Mission has been held during the past fortnight in Salem Church, Lisburn, by Mr. H. Powers. A similar mission has been held in St. Luke's Church, Belfast, by Rev. P. Bowers, of Market Bosworth.

Cookhill.—On Saturday the last of a series of evangelistic services, conducted at the Baptist Chapel here by Mr. H. Murch, of the Evangelisation Society, was held, when testimony was given of the great spiritual benefit that had been derived from the Mission.

Mr. W. Monro Collings has just concluded a ten-days' mission at the Vulcan Hall, Cuddington, Bucks. Each night in the after-meetings some were found seeking the Saviour. The mission was arranged by friends, who received great blessing in a mission at Winchendon a short time ago. Others might follow their example, and arrange for missions in villages where otherwise there would be none.

Irish Evangelisation Society.—A three weeks' mission has lately been held in Clonmel by Messrs. T. M. Carleton and S. Millar, resulting in blessing to God's children, and many young people have been able to rejoice in Jesus as their Saviour. A weekly united service has been commenced in continuance of the work. Missions have also been held by Mr. Carleton in Tallow, Lismore, and Dungarvan, co. Waterford, with very encouraging results. Will our readers pray that many doors may be opened for God's servants to proclaim his truth in the small dark towns of the South of Ireland?

The Lord's Day in France.

The recent Congress in Paris has emphasized the privilege of weekly rest, if it has done but little to urge the true Sabbath obligation. The rest day was viewed from social and hygienic points of view by speakers of many different shades of thought, and Romanists agreed with Protestants as to the pressing importance of the subject.

The cause was advocated with much power by M. Bardoux, Vice-President of the Senate, also by M. Léon Say and M. de Nordling. Some of the newspapers have ridiculed the movement as "an article of British importation," but warm sympathy has, nevertheless, been very generally expressed, even although prompted by merely humanitarian motives. The Protestants, who initiated organised effort in the matter, are more earnest than ever, for when the day of rest is secured to the working people they will be more accessible than hitherto to the Gospel message.

BOW COMMON, E.—Rev. J. T. Hazzard, of Blackthorn-street Chapel Gospel Mission, writes:—"I am here without salary, and God has not failed me. I am also obliged to make myself responsible for the financial needs of the entire work, for the people are all so poor they cannot assume responsibility. Just now the burden presses, for we need £30 to meet demands which must be faced at once. Our congregation has increased in three years from about seventy to four hundred, our school to six hundred, and our teachers to thirty, while the net gain in membership has been one hundred." Mr. Hazzard's address is 27, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-rd., London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become Mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions—

1. For the General Fund; the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund; a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For law expenses; in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

The Late Rev. C. H. SPURGEON wrote in The Sword and Trowel:—"There is great wealth of information in this well-condensed, well-written book. Think of 587 miles of passages of CATACOMBS! The CATACOMBS have been a hiding-place for truths as well as for martyrs, and the sermons in stones which have been there preserved preach very forcibly against certain errors of the apostate church. Half-a-crown will bring a large return if spent upon this book."

BY THE LATE

BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.,

Late Chamberlain of the City of London.

"Here is a slashing book, which leaves no need for a second stroke. These sermons in stones (the monumental inscriptions in the Catacombs) are then used to prove in a relentless and unchallengeable fashion the wholesale departures from primitive Christianity by the modern Church of Rome. The verdict of the book is this—ROMANISM is baptized PAGANISM. And we entirely endorse the judgment. In these days, when Romanism is being stealthily spread among us, this book ought to be scattered in thousands all over the land."—Presbyterian Messenger.

After Influenza.

The resultant weakness of this depressing complaint will surely disappear if a short course of Guy's Tonic be resorted to. Guy's Tonic increases the appetite, strengthens the stomach, regulates the liver, gives tone to the nervous organization, and by imparting vitality, strength, and energy to the entire muscular and mental systems, makes the feeble and delicate vigorous, robust, and strong. The weary brain, the languid nerve, and the prostrate muscular frame receive support and capacity for renewed exertion.

THE REV. E. CORNEILLE, writing from the Manse, Donegal, Ireland, says:—"I have derived wonderful benefit from the Guy's Tonic you sent me. After taking a first bottle I ordered a second, and since I have finished that bottle I have been free from indigestion. I have recommended it to several members of my congregation, and they have experienced great good from its use."

THE REV. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., writes on February 10, 1892, to the proprietors of Guy's Tonic:—"I have myself used some of your medicine with considerable benefit, and believe it to be a really excellent Tonic."

MR. W. H. GLEDHILL writes from Leeds:—"I beg to inform you that being a sufferer from what is generally termed Indigestion, have found great relief after taking a course of Guy's Tonic. I suffered severely from dizziness, headache, and a general feeling of weariness and uneasiness. I am pleased and very grateful to say these symptoms seem to have completely gone."

TO ANY ONE DESIRING to test our remedies, we will send, securely packed in a special box, a bottle of Guy's Tonic, together with a free sample box of Guy's Fruit Pills and complete "Guide to Digestion," containing simple instructions as to the Guy's Tonic Treatment, post paid, for 2s. 9d. Address all letters to Guy's Tonic Company, 4, Ludgate-circus, London, E.C. Guy's Tonic is sold retail of all Chemists, at 2s. 9d. per bottle, and Guy's Fruit Pills at 1s. 1½d. per box.

Temperance Notes.

GOJUMRA, in Japan, is a total abstinence village, and each house has a motto on the door, "Frugal in all things; liquors prohibited."

In one of the great Paris hospitals, out of eighty-three patients who suffered from epilepsy, sixty were found to be the children of drunken parents.

Mr. Howard Livesey, a well-known personage in the Lake District, a fisherman, died in Lancaster last week. He was the fifth son of the late Joseph Livesey, the "Father of Teetotalism," and was sixty-four years of age.

The town of Sheerness has a good temperance record, for there are no less than ten abstaining ministers. 138 out of 160 Sunday-school teachers are avowed abstainers and twenty-five out of thirty local preachers are also abstainers.

On the 16th inst. the first Women's Temperance meeting ever held in Horncastle, was addressed by three ladies of the town and one from the neighbouring city of Lincoln. The speeches were earnest and powerful, and listened to by the large audience with great attention.

An East End clergyman lately asked a gathering of poor children this question:—"What is water used for?" Among the answers were such as the following:—"To give horses," "To wash clothes," "To water streets," "To put out fires," but not one child said "To drink."

The society for the abolition of strong drink in Holland certifies that in a population of 3,500,000 there are 35,000 licences for the sale of liquor annually granted. Computing two-thirds of the population to be women and children, there is a saloon to every thirty-three men.

Mr. J. R. Diggle, writing last week to the Central Association for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday, said:—"I believe that the need for Sunday closing is one which is increasingly felt. A boon which has been granted to Scotland, Wales, and Ireland cannot long be denied to England."

Lady Henry Somerset's projected visit to Japan is abandoned, as she remains for a short time longer in the United States, having, in conjunction with Miss Willard, undertaken the editorship of The Union Signal, during the temporary absence of Miss West, who, after seven years' hard work, is taking a much-needed rest.

The German Evangelical Church, U.S.A., with a large publishing house and a membership of over one hundred thousand members, is a Temperance Church, and its Discipline says: "None of our members shall be allowed to make or prepare, or deal in or use as a drink, spirituous or intoxicating liquors, except as medicine."

The Mayor of Manchester states that the Retreat for Inebriate Women has been a great success, having proved that inveterate drinkers, or a large percentage of them, could be reclaimed. What was the use of constantly fining or committing a woman who had been up scores of times before? Such a one required protection against herself, and he trusted the magistrates might be allowed by law to send incorrigibles to retreats for inebriates.

The Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission, Manchester, held its annual meetings on the 15th inst. The report which dealt with the Police-court work and Inebriate Home, recently opened, was full of interest. This Society is doing a really good work quietly and unobtrusively. Mrs. Ormiston Chant told of some touching cases which had come under her own notice and been reclaimed.

Lady Frederick Cavendish last week, addressing meetings in Newcastle in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the local Band of Hope Union, spoke strongly on the evils resulting from what are elegantly termed "pick-me-ups," deplored the recent introduction of champagne and claret-cup at afternoon parties, and the deadly custom of taking a drop of "something" at 11 o'clock, in regard to which Sir Andrew Clarke once said to her that the woman who craved for something strong at 11 o'clock was lost.

The Representative Committee formed at the instance of the Bristol Methodist Council to oppose the granting of drink licences to the proposed Palace of Varieties in Old Market-street, or the renewal of existing licences in connection therewith, has issued memorials for signature by the congregations of the various places of worship in the city. Separate forms have been prepared for signature by owners of property and employers of labour in the neighbourhood of Old Market-street. A solicitor has also been instructed to oppose the application when made.

A conference of Christian ministers and church officers was held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday in last week on "Christian Morality and Liquor Legislation." A resolution was carried, declaring that the principles of Christian morality demand that all legislation relating to the liquor traffic should have regard to the happiness and wellbeing of the people, and that the deplorable evils arising from it call for legislation that should aim at the removal of those evils. Resolutions were also carried in favour of Sunday Closing, Local Option, and other measures that would diminish drunkenness, and advising the ratepayers to elect those representatives on the County Councils and other local bodies who would make it their aim to discourage those causes of intemperance over which they had legal control.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Fifty-four Cambridge students have just offered themselves to the C.M.S. for foreign work.

In connection with the F.S.M. numerous missionary meetings have been held during the past week in many provincial towns.

The Manchester auxiliary of the Church of England Zenana Society held last week its annual meeting, in the Mayor's parlour, Manchester, when Miss Hanbury, Canon Lloyd, and others, gave addresses on the work in India.

Canon Woodward, speaking last week in Hope Hall, Liverpool, on "A Protestant Hero," protested strongly against the proposal to erect a statue to Cardinal Newman on a site associated with martyr memories.

Rev. Philip Norton concluded on Sunday week a successful eight days' mission at St. George-the-Martyr's Church, Bolton. As many as 150 persons were present at the prayer-meeting. It is interesting to note that this church is dedicated to the memory of George Marsh, a godly curate who suffered martyrdom in Queen Mary's reign, because he refused to accept the Roman dogma of Transubstantiation.

Writing from Leeds a correspondent says:—"The United Church Mission, which began on Saturday week, is one of the best organised evangelistic efforts I have ever seen. They have gone into it as if they had some faith in it, and meant business. Every week since Jan. 1 a new announcement has been placarded through the town, and for the same period the houses have been visited weekly by earnest mission workers. The Bishop has written letters commending the Mission to the people of Leeds, and the newspapers from time to time have published various items of interest. The effort brings out the strength and resources of the Church in the town. Missions are being held in fifty churches, no less than eighty missioners taking part."

The Protestant Churchmen's Alliance has a vigorous branch in Oldham, which was last week addressed by Rev. F. J. Horsfield, who said:—"The Reformation gave them the glorious liberty of an open Bible, but surely and certainly the Ritualists were bringing them back to the old trammels and fetters of Roman Catholicism. Ritualists, in spite of their protestations, were actually and literally bringing religion into ridicule, and, further, were actually reviling and rejecting doctrines which they held to be most precious. For example, the doctrine of justification by faith was described by a Ritualist at Bath in 1877 as the most immoral and blasphemous theory ever held. The Ritualists were restoring the grossest forms of superstition.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mansfield College proposes holding a Summer School of Theology in July.

Rev. Samuel Pearson was, on Tuesday week, publicly recognised as pastor at Broughton-park, Manchester.

Mr. J. W. Holdsworth, of Airedale College, has been unanimously elected to the pastorate of Cavendish-street Chapel, Manchester.

Medland Hall, the Congregational Union East-end centre, burned down last year, has been rebuilt, and was reopened on Thursday last.

During the year sixteen of the scholars of London-road Sunday-school, Hastings, have professed conversion, and have joined the church.

Estimating the growth of Congregationalism in the United States, The Boston Congregationalist remarks:—"Roughly speaking, the denomination has, during the last five years, been making a net gain of from fourteen to eighteen thousand a year."

Chorlton-road Congregational Church, Manchester (Rev. A. Goodrich, D.D., pastor), shows by its new report that on December 1, 1891, the total number of members on the church roll, inclusive of those from the missions, was 1156. The number of members admitted during the year was 145.

Dr. Mackennal preached the anniversary sermons for Gallowtree-gate Church, Leicester. At the annual meeting it was reported that the various organisations connected with the church were flourishing, that nearly £900 was contributed during the year, and that the church was free from debt.

"The Law of Christian Conscience" was the theme of Dr. Allon's Merchants' Lecture, delivered last week. Basing his thoughts on 1 Cor. viii., the speaker showed the teaching of Christ must be brought to bear on the conscience; for it was quite possible to act conscientiously and yet sinfully.

The present week is being observed by many as a "Self-denial" week on behalf of Foreign Missions. A leaflet, prepared by Rev. J. P. Gledstone, at the request of the directors of the London Missionary Society, suggests abstinence from tobacco, alcoholic drinks, the giving up of unnecessary books, papers, and magazines, drives, concerts, visits, &c., and the use of cheaper food, travelling third-class or walking, taxing the savings of the week. The Self-denial Week is on behalf of the Forward Movement of the Society to send out one hundred additional missionaries.

BAPTIST.

Rev. T. A. Carver returned home last week from his trip to Australia in improved health.

A special mission is now being held by Mr. Henry Thorne in the Clarendon Baptist Chapel, Camberwell New-road, for which prayer is desired.

The recognition services of Mr. H. Thomas as pastor of Beulah Baptist Chapel, Thornton-heath, took place on Tuesday, February 16.

The congregation which has hitherto held services in the Public Reading-room, Garston, near Liverpool, has prospered so well that it has been decided to erect a new chapel.

Rev. R. Wood, of Cavendish Baptist Church, Ramsgate, having accepted an invitation from Scarborough, will close his ministry at Cavendish at the end of March. He has been at Ramsgate ten years, and his ministry has been greatly owned of God.

The memorial-stone of a new Sunday-school, and enlargement of the Baptist Chapel, Burnham, Somerset, was laid on Wednesday last by Mr. G. Wilson, of London. The pastor, Rev. J. Felmingham, stated that the collections amounted to over £70.

At the last monthly meeting of the London Baptist Social Union, Mr. R. F. Horton, M.A., delivered an interesting address, "The Church Considered as a Mobilised Army." Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, B.A., spoke vigorously on "The Spiritual Message of the Free Churches of England."

Rev. Dr. Landels, of Edinburgh, mentioned, at a meeting in Dunfermline last week, that one of his congregation, a "boots" in a temperance hotel, had promised £3 to the centenary fund of the missionary society, and that an old lady was going to attempt her own washing in order to be able to give £5 annually instead of two.

Upton Chapel, Lambeth (Rev. W. Williams), reports 631 members. There are 530 Sunday scholars in the home school, and the mission schools have all they can accommodate. The income from all sources amounted to over £1600. During the year the church has adopted unfermented wine at the Communion.

The ministerial jubilee of Rev. Edward Stevenson as pastor of Baxter Chapel, Loughborough, was celebrated on Sunday week; sermons were preached by Rev. T. Barrass. Mr. Stevenson, who was born at Loughborough in 1812, commenced his ministry while yet in his teens, and, after eight years' work at Chesham, succeeded his father in the pastorate of Baxter-gate Church in 1842.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Kerr sends home an interesting account of recent itinerations amongst Moorish soldiers in Fez.

Colonel Grant, the celebrated African explorer, who died a few days ago, was the son of the parish minister of Nairn.

The annual report of Prospect-street Church, Hull, shows that the amount raised for all purposes during 1891 was £2120. Of this the amount for the China Mission was no less than £453.

At Longsight, Manchester, the Sunday-school anniversary sermons were preached, on Sunday week, by Dr. Monro Gibson to large and attentive audiences. Dr. Gibson also spoke at the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon gathering.

Rev. W. Johnman, of Hawick, preached special sermons at St. James's, Alnwick, and spoke on the following day at the congregational meeting. This interesting congregation is now in the 203rd year of its existence.

The Presbyterian evangelists continue busily and successfully at work; Rev. John More conducting special services at Wolverhampton; Rev. G. M. Smith holding a week's mission at Hanley; and Rev. Richard Leitch labouring at Dudley.

Rev. C. G. M'Crie, of Ayr, in the first of his Cunningham Lectures, in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on "The Public Worship of Presbyterian Scotland Historically Treated," said while Presbyterianism was a form of church government, historically it was a good deal more, for there had come to be associated with it Christian life of a particular type, a confession of theology of a pronounced school, and a well-defined ritual of Divine service. Remarking that antiquarian remains showed there had been Christian membership in Scotland prior to the departure of the Romans, the lecturer traced the history of Christian worship through the Monastic period down to the Reformation.

METHODIST.

It is proposed to erect a new iron school-chapel to accommodate 250, at Westwood, Tankersley.

Rev. M. Wintersgill is holding special missions in the Lincoln district, and great interest is being awakened.

The Primitive Methodists at Chapel-town, near Sheffield, held a meeting last week to celebrate the extinction of the debt on their chapel.

The second anniversary of the Leeds Central Wesleyan Mission was held on Tuesday in last week. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, at a crowded meeting held in the evening, characterised the Mission as an unmistakable success.

At a convention for the consideration of Christian work in the Army and Navy, held the other day in the City-road Chapel, Rev. R. W. Allen and others bore testimony to the good work being done in the ranks and on board H.M. ships of war.

Last week a special meeting of the London Wesleyan Council was held for the purpose of giving Rev. F. W. Macdonald, the recently-appointed missionary secretary, an opportunity of expounding suggestions for the attainment of more perfect administration of the affairs of the Missionary Society, and for the reaping of greater results in their work on the mission fields.

The Wesleyan Methodist Council of Sheffield has had a serious discussion on the opium question, whereat Dr. Branson, speaking as a medical man, challenged the statement made that the effects of opium were not worse than those of tobacco and drink. They were fifty times worse, and if they, as Christian men, did not try to stop the opium traffic, they would deserve the name of hypocrites.

At the monthly London Ministers' Meeting, held on Monday week at City-road, Rev. Dr. Jenkins delivered a remarkable critique on Mr. Spurgeon and his work. His strength and secret of success, said the Doctor, lay not so much in his wit, his Calvinistic theology, his elocution, his bulldog courage, as his remarkable and persistent faith in the Gospel; whatever doubts he had in his closet there were none in his discourses. This is the only spirit in which we can win the masses, and if we bring the Gospel forward on the ground of probability we are not worth much.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The amount reached by the Friends' Russian Famine Fund was last week £24,000.

The Preparative Meeting at Maidstone has had under its serious consideration the fact of the large non-attendance in the town at any place of worship.

The annual meeting of the Chesham Adult School was lately held. A happy and profitable evening was spent. The school has now twenty-two members.

Pastor Francis, writing from St. Petersburg to Isaac Sharp, gives deplorable details of the sufferings of many Russian peasants and German colonists from the "typhus," which seems to be following the steps of the famine.

Howard Nicholson, of London, assisted in a series of special meetings held at Leiston. The meetings increased in attendance and interest as the week went on, and at the closing meeting several gave testimony that they had experienced the forgiveness of sins, and many that they had received definite blessing.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

A week of special meetings held at Wrexham was attended with marked blessing.

At Holbrook we hear that souls are being saved at nearly every meeting.

General Booth is visiting the larger towns in the north, and will return to town at the beginning of next week.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth continues to hold meetings for the

THIS is a Genuine Remedy. It cures INDIGESTION. This is not mere assertion. It is a fact. Experience has proved it. DR. One patient says:—"I have derived more benefit from Pepsonymin Tonic than from any of the remedies so much advertised." It is a tradition with you that brimstone and treacle is a good Spring medicine, eh? And that Spring brings feverishness, eruptions, and a general disturbance of the system. Quite so. You accordingly proceed to dose yourself and dose your children with brimstone and treacle. But why? The mixture is messy and nauseous. It does good, but stomach colic is apt to ensue. But no matter. Those before you believed in it and so do you.

You might just as well stick to the farthing rushlight, and ignore paraffin, gas, and the electric light. But you don't do so because you know better.

Carry the principle farther, and give Frazer's Sulphur Tablets a trial as a Spring medicine. They are more efficacious, and far safer than brimstone and treacle, and much nicer to take.

Don't be bigoted nor sceptical. Live and learn. Think of Frazer's Sulphur Tablets as the best of all Spring medicines, and a valuable blood purifier. Why not test them free of charge? Samples will be sent gratis and post free on application. Name The Christian.

Major and Mrs. Cooke, who have conducted the slum-work in this country from its infancy for the past five years, sailed this week for the United States, where they will take up similar work.

It appears that, notwithstanding all past efforts to find work for the unemployed, there is still great need, for the figures show that nearly 15,700 applicants are on the books of the Labour Bureau.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A soldiers' reading-room is about to be started in Youghal, co. Cork.

The first of a series of lectures for Sunday-school teachers was given in Dublin on Monday by Rev. C. J. Graham.

Miss Woods who, after several years spent in mission work in China, is home for rest, has been telling in Cork, with marked effect, the story of her missionary experiences.

Rev. Dr. Welland, rector of St. Thomas's Church, Belfast, was on Friday last elected Bishop of Down, Conner, and Dromore, as successor to the late Dr. Reeves.

Nine of the Irish Protestant Bishops have signed and published a declaration practically approving of Lord Plunket's action in ordaining ministers for the Reformed Churches of Spain and Portugal.

Messrs. Bill and Ballie are doing an important work at Qua Iboe, West Africa, and the first annual meeting of the mission was held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Belfast, on Monday week, when Mr. A. Pim presided, and an address was delivered by Rev. S. Kershaw.

There are at present twenty-seven inmates in the Ulster Female Penitentiary, and during the year eighty-three persons received the benefits of the institution. Of these ten were sent to situations, fourteen provided with outfits, nine sent to Canada, and some others restored to their friends. Thus the fairly large and satisfactory percentage of about fifty per cent. of those who received the advantages of the home during the year can be accounted for.

The quarterly returns show that during the past three months Irish Presbyterian Missions have been getting on successfully. On his last journey Rev. Mr. Fulton baptized thirty-two converts at Surat, India. In Hamburg the work is in a very flourishing state. Two converts have been baptized, and two are preparing for baptism. In Cordoba the missions are in an interesting state, and one person has offered at his own cost to defray quarter the expense of regular services in San Fernando. In Damascus cholera has not yet abated, and in China the riots somewhat disorganised the work. At home the colporteurs sold £176 worth of books.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Mr. Henry Wardle, M.P. for South Derbyshire, an earnest helper of Christian work and a loyal and leading Protestant; at Eastbourne, Mrs. W. W. Phelps, a devoted and loving helper of many; at Cleator Moor, on Thursday, the 11th inst., Rev. Alexander Davidson, aged 57, a faithful and useful Presbyterian minister; at Blackburn, very suddenly, Rev. J. C. Archer, who, while conducting on Sunday week a service in the house of a friend, fell back as he was leading in prayer, and expired almost immediately; at Bradford, on Friday, the 12th inst., Mr. John Wilson, a prominent member of the Society of Friends; at Nottingham, Mr. Henry Blood, aged 72, a faithful deacon and worker at the Tabernacle; at Cardiff, Mrs. Rees, a quiet but earnest worker; at Leeds, Mr. Thomas Heaps, a leading member of the Methodist body; at Cork, Rev. Horace T. Townshend, rector of Kilcoe, co. Cork, a faithful, earnest minister and pastor, in the 52nd year of his ministry; at Kilrea Rev. Jno. Colhoun, Presbyterian minister, of typhoid fever, in the fourth year of his ministry, a faithful pastor and a promising minister; at Dublin, Rev. H. J. Ringwood, a devoted clergyman.

Notices.

Correspondents inform us that the hymn beginning "What is it to cast the care on God?" about which inquiry was made last week, may be found in "The Fireside Hymn-Book," compiled by M. Braithwaite (Hamilton, Adams, and Co.), and, with modifications, in "Pietas Poetica" (Nisbet and Co.), both of them published over a quarter of a century ago. The verses also appear in "A Selection of Scriptural Poetry," by Lovell Squire. In all cases they appear without any indication of authorship.

A TOUCHING TRAIT.

"OUR OLD BOYS' NEW YEAR'S GIFT" for this year amounts to £272, as against

1889	-	£108.	1891	-	£204, increase £56.
1890	-	£148, increase £40.	1892	-	£272, „ £68.

Thus in four years these rescued Street-Arabs have sent OUT OF THEIR OWN POCKETS £732 in support of their "Old Home," and to "help other lads out."

We are now preparing to send out 120 boys, if possible, this Spring. Nothing will delight our "Old Boys" more than to learn that their self-denying gratitude has moved Christian friends in the Old Country to give other poor boys a helping hand. Any kind messages of appreciation and encouragement to them I will gladly insert in the next number of "The Home Budget" we send them. A copy will be sent to any friend wishing for one.

The cost of placing each boy far away from the wretchedness and temptations of London street-life in the healthy, self-reliant environment of a Canadian homestead is only £10. Particulars and photograph of special boy thus benefited will be sent to donor.

Who will help us in this interesting work? Even the smallest token of Christian interest will be gratefully received.

A Review from The Preachers' Magazine:—
"The great charm of this very beautiful monograph is its clear setting forth of the way in which the life of Joseph mirrors, to use the author's own phrase, the life of Jesus. This idea is not at all unduly pressed, but it runs through the volume, and adds immensely to its homiletic and devotional value."

A REVIEW BY THE LATE REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

RARA AVIS—A BOOK!

Preachers abound: but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter: but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work entitled we have found a book. It is part of our appointed suffering in this life to be compelled to winnow heaps of literature, with great result in chaff and dust and small gain in breadcorn, and therefore our rejoicing is the greater when grain comes to our garner as clean provender, in good weight and measure. The work before us is a great book for matter, though modest in size.

Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices, and are mainly of use in stirring up pure minds by way of remembrance. Dried fruits are their merchandise; such a thing as a freshly-gathered peach is never seen in their basket. One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch: he is no withered bough of the autumn forest. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way.

This excellent author deals with John—the man, the companion of Jesus, the apostle after the Ascension, the writer, and the theologian—thus furnishing us with a full-length portrait of "the beloved disciple." He has evidently chosen a congenial subject, and has such sympathy with the man before him that he can see far into his mind and heart. Even to comment upon John's writings is far from easy; he is so simple, and yet so fathomlessly deep; he uses so many of those pregnant monosyllables, so much more expressive than long words. Dr. Culross is a Christian of the Johannean stamp, and hence he is at home with the beloved disciple.

It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate on what they read.

We heard of a gentleman who entered an hotel and ordered a dinner of chops. One chop was brought him with due state, this being considered enough for a meal. The hungry diner inserted his fork into the lonely portion of flesh, and as he put it on his plate he said, "Yes, this is the sort of thing; bring me a dish of them." So have we risen from the perusal of many a modern book, feeling that the one or two thoughts we obtained were good; but we wanted more of them. No such tantalising have we undergone while reading this work; but, on the contrary, we have had a feast of fat things full of marrow.—Sword and Trowel.

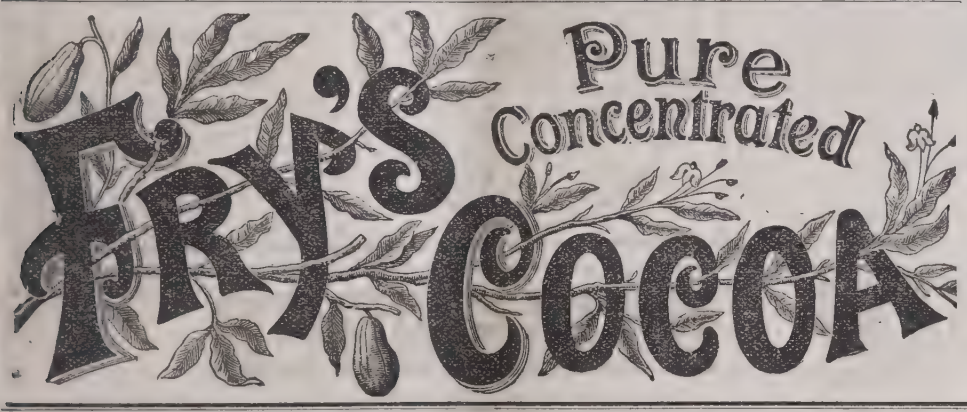
THIRTY-NINTH SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THE WEEK.

DISEASED LUNGS—FOLLOWING on INFLUENZA and PNEUMONIA—A BOY AGED 13.

Last June I received a letter from Mr. T. H. PHILLIPS (of 17, St. Clair-street, GLASGOW) relative to his son, enclosing also a recommendatory letter from the Rev. THOMAS MARTIN, Baptist minister of the same city.



The illness arose as a sequel to the epidemic so widely prevalent in all parts, and which assumes so many forms and so frequently leaves in its track some lung disease. In addition to a harassing cough, there was expectoration of the most offensive kind; the body was wasting; there were pains in front and back of both lungs; the feet had begun to swell, and the swelling was increasing. The prospects of his case were unfavourable in the extreme.

The lad soon recovered under my treatment, making steady progress from the first (as various letters testify). The swelling of the feet disappeared; the phlegm became a simple natural mucus; the cough gradually ceased, and he rapidly regained flesh and strength.

In the next letter the father says:—"God has signally blessed your wonderful remedy. Make what reference you please to this case. May you be spared many years for a great blessing to the human race.

I have just had a letter (dated January 24th) in which Mr. Phillips writes:—"My son continues well. I look back to the time when he was nothing but skin and bone, and thank God for your treatment; for now he is strong and hearty and better than he ever was in his life."

In the same letter Mr. Phillips writes as follows:—"It may interest you to know that some years ago, when my father was Baptist minister at Snailbeach, he recommended Mr. ROWSON, now Baptist minister at Welshpool, to try your treatment, and wrote to you for medicine. Mr. R. could scarcely walk, but he became a fine, stout man; I hardly knew him, such was the change.

Liver Complaints Understood.

A sluggish liver is recognised by a dull pain between the shoulders, or in either shoulder-blade; inability to lie on the left side, muscular pains about the loins and limbs, nausea, giddiness, thirst, drowsiness, yellow or white-coated tongue, flatulency, dry, harsh, yellow skin; biliousness, yellowness of the eyes, with gradually-increasing bad health. Nothing necessitates so much absence from business, cessation of ordinary duties, and disinclination to resort to amusements as a torpid, inactive liver. There is no medicine that so speedily restores this organ (however gravely or chronically affected) as Guy's Tonic. Congestion and other biliary derangements are cured with unerring certainty. The complete and permanent restoration resulting from a short continuance of this valuable remedy causes universal wonderment, a cure invariably taking place although all other remedies have been used without benefit.

We invite the careful attention of our readers to the following statement, told in the very words of a real correspondent, who has a local habitation and a name:—

Albert-st., Wednesbury, Staffs., Sept. 18, 1891.

Dear Sirs,—Having suffered from severe liver complaint for the last three years, with pain in the back and mental depression, I have tried nearly everything without benefit; but after taking three doses of Guy's Tonic the pains in the back have entirely gone. I now feel as I have not done before for years. I shall recommend it wherever I go.

Yours truly, J. H. Kight.

THE REV. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., writes on February 10, 1892, to the proprietors of Guy's Tonic:—"I have myself used some of your medicine with considerable benefit, and believe it to be a really excellent Tonic."

TO ANY ONE DESIRING to test our remedies, we will send, securely packed in a special box, a bottle of Guy's Tonic, together with a free sample box of Guy's Fruit Pills and complete "Guide to Digestion," containing simple instructions as to the Guy's Tonic Treatment, post paid, for 2s. 9d. Address all letters to Guy's Tonic Company, 4, Ludgate-circus, London, E.C. Guy's Tonic is sold retail of all Chemists at 2s. 9d. per bottle, and Guy's Fruit Pills at 1s. 1½d. per box.

Hymns for Use at Missionary Meetings.

Selected from "SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS."
As sung by IRA D. SANKEY.

This Hymn Sheet has been prepared to meet the demand for a selection of stirring hymns, suitable for special or periodical Missionary Meetings. It will be seen from the contents given below that many of the Hymns on this leaflet are among the favourite pieces in Mr. Sankey's popular "Sacred Songs and Solos."

FIRST LINES OF HYMNS.

From Greenland's icy mountains.
Brightly beams our Father's mercy.
Hark, the voice of Jesus crying.
There were ninety-and-nine that safely lay.
Stand up! stand up for Jesus!
Take my life, and let it be.
Our Lord is now rejected.
I gave my life for Thee.
Far, far away, in heathen darkness dwelling.
There's a cry from Macedonia.
God be with you till we meet again.
Thou, whose almighty word.
Sowing in the morning, sowing seeds of kindness.
Salvation! oh, the joyful sound!
All hail the power of Jesu's name.
Jesus shall reign where'er the sun.

THE STORY OF

Senor Alberto J. Diaz:

Cuban Revolutionist.
Soldier of Jesus Christ.
WITH PORTRAIT.
(Reprinted from The Christian.)

Admirably Adapted for General Distribution.

"The account of the conversion and subsequent life-work of this remarkable man. Trained for the medical profession, changed by a revolution into a soldier, doomed to death as a rebel, providentially escaping from the power of the Spaniards, the young Cuban eventually reached New York, where, under earnest Christian influence, he became a decided follower of the Lord Jesus... The story goes on to tell how he was sent out to Cuba as a missionary by a society of Philadelphian ladies, and how wondrously, in spite of hot persecution from the priests, the Lord Jesus blessed his work, until at the end of three years he had gathered a church of several hundred members. The whole account reads like a chapter from the Acts of the Apostles."—The Irish Baptist Magazine.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Bishop Philpott, of Worcester.

We have received about £700 for various funds for the relief of the victims of the Russian famine. As the need is urgent, we shall be happy to receive further donations.

Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey have now conducted meetings in seventy different places in Scotland during this campaign; and about thirty are still to be visited before the end of March.

Candour in the pastor is as desirable as loyalty in the people of any church. We commend to earnest attention the faithful words of Dr. Bullinger, in the extract, given on page 18, from his recent pastoral letter. It were much to be wished that all ministers were equally mindful of their vows, and careful to warn their people from the quicksands of error as to doctrine and danger as to practice. The times demand outspokenness on the part of teachers, and earnestness of purpose on the part of all who bear the Christian name.

"The Accuser of the brethren" is a term often used without any adequate sense of its significance. If its meaning were understood we should more deeply sympathise with our brethren who lived under Law, and more highly appreciate our own blessedness in living under Grace. For the Accuser of the brethren was a terrible reality to the saints under the Old Covenant, who were always in bondage through fear of death; but when He who is not ashamed to call us brethren, through death, silenced as an accuser him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, He delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

If Satan is accusing justified believers before God, our justification is an unreality. He may accuse us to our own consciences, he may go about seeking whom he may devour; but from the court of Divine justice he was cast out for ever when the Expiator of our sins entered heaven by virtue of his own blood, and sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. There is no more room for an accuser when the case is finished, the verdict given, and judgment pronounced. Romans viii. 33, 34 emphatically substantiates this with reference to God's elect.

We respectfully and kindly ask the attention of the General of the Salvation Army to the following extract from The Western Morning News, forwarded to us by a correspondent with some very pungent remarks:—

The last issue of The War Cry contains an exhortation to the use of the Confession which, if not new, is not usual in the Protestant religion. The duty of Confession is urged in general terms, and then to the question, "Is Confession necessary in every case?" the reply is given—"Tell your sin to your captain, or find out some officer or friend in whose heart or judgment you can confide, and tell it in the ear of that brother or sister, as the case may be; but it may be necessary for you to confess in some form." Thus is clearly indicated the Auricular Confession which is adopted by the Salvationists from another Church.

In many ways it would appear that our old friend, Mr. Booth, has been drinking of the poisoned waters of Rome, and we earnestly hope that he, or those who act in his name, will retrace their steps.

Our readers will learn with deep regret of a sudden blow that has fallen upon the family of Dr. Grattan Guinness and his band of workers. On Monday afternoon, while apparently in the best of health, Mrs. Guinness was laid low by an apoplectic stroke. At first it was feared that she had met with a third paralytic attack, such as she experienced in 1884 and 1887, but the medical opinion gives a much more serious verdict. It is feared that though Mrs. Guinness may recover the use of speech, her arms will be permanently affected, if, indeed, she ever recovers.

Miss Guinness, who was expected to return from China in a short time, has been telegraphed for, as also Miss Lucy Guinness, who was in Ireland at the time, on the Anti-Opium Crusade. Dr. Harry Guinness is likely to reach England in the course of a few weeks. The Master, whom our sister has served so well, has power to heal, and the prayers of thousands will, we are sure, rise on behalf of the sufferer and her family at this anxious time.

The retirement from office of the venerable and venerated Principal Cairns of the United Presbyterian Divinity Hall, Edinburgh, is an event that has caused widespread regret, though not surprise, among the numerous friends of the learned Professor. Dr. Cairns has for many years been a tower of strength in the ranks of Scottish Evangelical divines, and we doubt if he leaves his equal, intellectually, in pulpit or Professor's chair. If he had chosen a purely literary or scientific career he would have made himself an honoured name among the original thinkers of to-day. He preferred to lay his gift at the feet of his Master in service of a strictly spiritual sort, and there are many active servants of the Christian Church who owe him a heavy debt for stimulus and direction. We hope his declining years of freedom from responsibility will be bright with holy influence among his younger brethren.

In a special eight-page supplement the Christian Leader for last week gives a full report of a meeting, held in Glasgow on February 18, of Free Churchmen dissatisfied with the Declaratory Act passed by the General Assembly of the Free Church in May, 1891, for "the purpose of removing difficulties and scruples felt by some in reference to the declaration of belief required" of ministers and office-bearers. This Act Sir W. Mackinnon regards, according to a message sent by him to the meeting, as involving "the sacrifice of some of the distinctive principles...for which our fathers contended even to the death." The meeting raised a strong protest against any lowering of the standards; the addresses of various well-known leaders of the orthodox party being vigorous and outspoken. If the effects of the Declaratory Act be, as they fear, "the opening of a door to fatal error," then surely it is time for the watchmen in Zion to sound the alarm.

The righteous agitation against the Anglo-Asiatic opium traffic is steadily growing in influence. Writing to The Times, Sir Joseph W. Pease, M.P., says:—

The advocates of the movement have now the support of every section of the Christian Church at home, in China, and in India. This is evinced by the petitions and memorials sent in by the unanimous vote of Convocations, General Assemblies and Conferences.

Sir Joseph Pease gives some significant facts and figures from the recently-published Blue-Book, upon the consumption of opium in India, and, in conclusion, says:—

Whilst admitting the curse of opium smoking, the Indian Government take credit for every step taken to reduce the evils it occasions; at the same time, they attempt to justify every action that has hitherto been used to procure increased sales. What the anti-opium party more particularly complain of is that it is our Government, the Government of a professedly Christian country, that has the monopoly of the trade—is the manufacturer and the vendor of the drug which, in its widespread abuse (to use the words of the protest of the Bombay Government), is subversive to public morality.

A Wesleyan missionary, Rev. G. Mackenzie Cobban, writing in last week's Christian World, attributes the movement against this wicked traffic to "ignorance of the facts." He says:—

Why should so many good people hysterically urge a particular kind of legislation for the races of India, so coercive in form that they themselves would not brook it for an hour, and urge it, not knowing the facts, and heedless of the vastly different and peculiar social conditions of the Indian Empire?

We would remind this writer of a previous question: Why was "the poppy plague," which the British "would not brook for an hour," promoted in India, to supply a source of income, heedless of Christian principles and true imperial interests? If "peculiar social conditions" explain some of the evils of India, they do not excuse the wrong-doing of those who rule her millions. If Mr. Cobban's letter correctly indicates his attitude to the ills and sorrows of India, he is, we are glad to know, far from representing the home churches. It is satisfactory to know that the Wesleyan Missionary Society has declared itself in entire opposition to Mr. Cobban's view.

It is gratifying to note that in the "Shop Hours Bill," which has just been read a second time in the House of Commons, and which is really a renewal, with important additions, of the Regulation Act of five years ago, more power is given to inspectors; adult women are brought within the clauses, and public-houses and refreshment-houses are defined as coming under the term "shop." The last addition was urgently needed, the publican being proverbially a hard task-master, and the extended hours of labour required from barmen and barmaids being simply scandalous.

We have previously in these columns called attention to the severe and prolonged toil which is required from many shop assistants and others on Saturdays, as being an important factor amongst the causes which lead to the absence of so large a proportion of the working classes from Divine worship on Sundays. A few days ago, the Bishop of Chester expressed his opinion that "late hours of business on Saturday nights, in our great towns, fall little short of a public scandal," and added, that "it is impossible to believe that there is no escape from a custom which for myriads devotes the evening hours of Saturday to a debauch of drudgery, and makes Sunday a day, not of rest, but of exhaustion."

Preaching at Liverpool, on Sunday week, one of a series of sermons intended for the enlightenment of Protestants, Father Eager enlarged upon the claim made by the Romish Church that salvation is to be found only by those within her communion—the doctrine "extra ecclesiam nulla salus." In the course of his sermon he made the following noteworthy utterance in referring to "the reasons of the Church's zeal in making converts," and the necessity of "a prudent aggressiveness in the dissemination of Catholic truth":—

The Church, as a true mother, was anxious that all her baptized children, even those without her pale, should share her privileges, knowing how difficult it was, after the commission of mortal sin, to obtain its forgiveness otherwise than by the Divinely-appointed and supernatural healing of the sacramental system of which they were deprived.

In view of the advance of sacerdotalism and priestcraft, of Popery and Paganism, Protestants, whether Episcopalians, Presbyterians Independents, or Methodists, must begin at home. Only by ridding ourselves of Popish and Pagan principles can we be strong to contend against Popish and Pagan practices, and sacramentarianism in every form must be cast out as one of the most mischievous of those pernicious principles.

Africa is opening up to civilisation with marvellous rapidity. Last week Parliamentary papers were issued respecting the proposed railway from Mombasa to Lake Victoria

Nyanza, the preliminary survey of which is now in progress. Present efforts to stop the slave trade are confined to the coasts; while the comparatively small export trade is thus hampered, the more profitable trade in the interior is untouched. Railway communication with the heart of the country is calculated to supersede caravans, promote legitimate commerce, and facilitate at once the civilisation and evangelisation of the benighted millions whose lot has been cast in the Dark Continent. So we pray that, whether by a commercial syndicate or under Imperial auspices, this important work may speedily go forward.

Higher Criticism on Esther.

In a lecture on the New Testament Canon, a learned professor is reported to have said:—

Luther's position as to the self-evidencing power of Scripture underlies the whole Protestant position. "We believe," said Luther, "a book has been written with Divine aid, because the Spirit in us responds to the Spirit that is in the book."...Where is the "inward witness" to Esther?

The answer to the question, "Where is the 'inward witness' to Esther?" depends upon the possession of eyes to see and ears to hear. Because a blind or blinded man does not see an object, it does not follow that it is not there. Dr. Bullinger has lately shown that—

The Spirit has so ordered it that in the Book of Esther the name of Jehovah is given four times in an acrostic form. The Masorah has a rubrick calling attention to this fact in these four passages; and three ancient manuscripts have been discovered by Dr. Ginsburg, and used by him in editing the new Hebrew text of the Old Testament, in which these acrostic letters are written in larger characters, and in a more prominent form, so that the Hebrew reader of the book would see the word Jehovah four times, while the Gentile hearer who could not read it would not hear the sacred Name, which revealed the source of the secret influence at work. (The Name of Jehovah in the Book of Esther. By Rev. E. W. Bullinger, D.D., 7, St. Paul's-churchyard. 3d.)

That is an "inward witness to Esther" of a visible kind. Here is one of another kind from a pamphlet entitled, "Mordecai and Esther. By Rev. J. W. Niblock." It is now out of print, but the following is a quotation from its opening pages:—

If any have not yet discovered all the things which they think are wanting in Esther to stamp the book with the impress of Divinity, that is a proof rather of their ignorance than of the deficiency, much less the apocryphacy, of the book itself...The author, for one, has long seen that in this very book, calumniated by some and little read by others, the Gospel of Christ is, if not in words, yet by events and facts, not only foreshadowed and foreshown, but made to stand out in bold relief; and the way of salvation is emblazoned, as it were, on these hand-posts on the road to heaven, in characters so vivid that "he that runs may read." And the Lord Jesus Christ, his person and work, his glory and grace—so far from not being even alluded to—is in a figure made its sum and substance, its end and aim, its Alpha and Omega, its all in all. In fact, the whole scheme of redemption—the whole economy of mercy, from the earliest revelation of God's will to his fallen creature man, down to the final destruction, not only of the wicked but the Wicked One; and going on to that great consummation, "most devoutly to be wished," the everlasting happiness of all the people of God in the beatific vision of Christ and his Spirit, and in the bosom of God—are all figuratively indeed, but yet most strikingly displayed; extorting from the heretofore unobserving (if candid) reader the confession, "Surely the Lord is in this [book] and I knew it not."

Is not the "Higher Criticism" on a lower level of vision than this? Are not its agnostic dicta (using the adjective in its normal, not its technical sense) a practical proof that God hath made foolish the wisdom of this world? "For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" But this pretentious and unspiritual shallowness, which glorifies itself as "higher criticism," replies to God: "Here are we, the wise, the scribes, the disputers of this world. We represent the world's wisdom; and we have no inward witness to the inspiration of the Book of Esther." We think we hear some man, born blind, indeed, but whose eyes have been opened, replies to them: "Why, herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not from whence the Book of Esther is, and yet the Spirit hath opened mine eyes to see that it is a foreshowing of the truth in Jesus." And Jesus says: "If ye were blind ye should have no sin; but now ye say, 'We see,' therefore your sin remaineth."

"BUT."

A word of restriction and limitation, stretching like a three-barred gate across the path of so many to-day, as it stretched across the path of Naaman hundreds of years ago. So much prosperity, such a catalogue of honours and successes and brightnesses, and yet a great barrier between him and happiness raised by this little word. But he was a leper. And there are many of my readers who will instinctively revert to a "but" in their lives, some qualifying circumstance, some secret anxiety, some grim "skeleton in the cupboard" that comes between them and entire satisfaction. Possibly, in some instances, it is self-manufactured, or arising from a constitutional infirmity or a want of self-control and self-discipline; or, it may be, resulting from a lack of the "education to happiness," of which, in his "Friends in Council," Sir Arthur Helps so strikingly speaks, and which, if it could be imparted to young people, would be such an unspeakable boon. There would not then be so many unfortunate victims of gloom "going through life with garments broidered with hooks wherewith to catch at every passing annoyance." Nevertheless, when all these deductions are made, there remain some very real crooks in the lot, some very thorny and prickly "buts," which, if they were truly revealed to us concerning our friends and neighbours, would change into deep sympathy the feelings with which we now regard some whose lot, to outward seeming, appears so exceptionally favoured and blessed.

This little word has not, however, an invariably sombre aspect. If sometimes it is like a dark cloud in a bright sky, far more frequently in the Bible it is a brilliant star in what would otherwise be thick darkness. Let us look at a scene in the old Book which has touched many a heart by its pathos. A young lad of seventeen, handsome, well-favoured, godly, his father's special darling and the inmate of a prosperous home, suddenly becomes the victim of a terrible reverse. Treacherously sold into slavery, coming, after the weariness of a long desert journey, into a strange land, with its unknown language and heathen customs, tortured by the thought of his father's anguish and his younger brother's sorrow, and yet bravely doing right until, after a few years of brightening prospects, his faithfulness brings him to "bonds and imprisonment." And just then, as the heavy gates of the Egyptian State-prison clang behind him, we see the light flashing from our little gem,—and it irradiates the darkness and continues to shine henceforth through this romantic history until the morning clouds of sorrow and disappointment merge into the perfect day of honour and prosperity. Slavery, lying accusation, imprisonment—"but the Lord was with Joseph," and the prison with that companionship became such a finishing school for manners and general culture, that when one day a royal mandate brought Joseph hastily from the dungeon to the palace, the testimony of the greatest monarch of his time was: "Can we find such a one as this is!" and a change was instantaneously wrought in his fortune without any parallel in sacred or profane history.

In the morning prison raiment, prison food, prison discipline; in the evening the ring of Pharaoh, a golden chain, a fine linen vesture, a tour through the land of Egypt in a chariot—second only to Pharaoh's in its magnificence—amidst acclaim and homage of all spectators. Well might they cry, "Bow the knees," for by royal mandate he was made ruler over all the land, with entire control of the food supply.

All this the Lord, who "was with him," wrought for Joseph, and we take courage as we think of it. As we pass forward in the year that is still new, and think anxiously of some dark "but" that threatens our peace or welfare, we can write over against it this bright countersign—But this Lord is with us! In the words of an admirable address recently listened to with much profit by the writer: "Whatever your trial, put God between it and your soul." "They shall call his name—our Saviour's—Immanuel, which, being interpreted, is, God with us." Is not that enough for our every need?

THE WIDOW'S GRATITUDE.

The following letter from a poor widow, whose son—a bright, well-educated youth—fell before temptations to dishonesty, and found in Mr. Wheatley a friend indeed, speaks for itself. She writes to him:—

"I cannot resist the impulse of writing to you this night when my son is leaving the St. Giles' Christian Mission Boys' Home, which has been indeed a home to him. It is impossible for me to express in words one tithe of the gratitude—the earnest gratitude—of my heart for your kindness to him. By God's providence you have been the means of saving him from the further temptation which must have assailed him if he had been thrown on his own resources, and exposed to the too often pitiless treatment by the world of those who have fallen. I pray that by God's grace he may be kept from any further wrong. He goes away with an expression of firm resolve for the future, and an utter dread and hatred of the sin of the past; bright and happy and grateful for all your goodness to him, as well as for the outfit you have provided him with for his new sphere. And I am thankful, with a great thankfulness, for the mercy that has hidden us, both him and me, under the shelter of his wings.—M. M."

Few readers probably know how many mothers' hearts have been thus caused to sing for joy over the rescue from a life of crime of their foolish boys who have blundered into a first offence, and who but for the St. Giles' Christian Mission must have been sent to prison, to come out most likely contaminated and hardened to plunge into fresh wrong-doing.

Apart altogether from the remarkable work this Mission is doing among prisoners and convicts—winning many to paths of honesty and of peace—its preventive service, in its four Boys' Homes, among lads committed on a first offence is of the highest importance to the nation at large, to the sorrowing parents, and to the boys themselves.

As we intimated a week or two since, this valuable Mission is sorely straitened by lack of funds. Such a fact surely needs only to be known to be remedied. Communications should be made to the Superintendent, Mr. George Hatton, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

MR. SWAN, from Garenganze, is to be in London in a day or two. He will doubtless have an interesting tale to tell. He came home with the Belgian Expedition, covering ground that has not been touched before.

SIR JOHN FIELD AND THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—We greatly regret to announce the approaching retirement of General Sir John Field from the Secretariat of the Evangelical Alliance, on account of advancing years. The Council have reluctantly accepted his resignation, which they are assured will not sever his connection with, or interest in, the work of the Alliance. They have fully considered the question of the future working of the Secretariat, and have decided that instead of appointing another joint Secretary, Mr. Arnold should continue as General Secretary, and that two ministers, one a Church of England clergyman, and the other a Nonconformist minister, should be appointed as Deputation Secretaries. It is hoped that thereby a considerable increase of interest in the work of the Evangelical Alliance may be looked for, especially from the cause of Christian union being pleaded in the pulpits of both Church of England and Nonconformity, in the latter of which this has hitherto only been done, as from time to time Mr. Arnold has had access to pulpits in various parts of the kingdom to make known the principles and work of the Alliance.—Evangelical Christendom.

Is Christ's Coming Imminent?

BY HENRY VARLEY.

SECOND PAPER.

THE WAR SPIRIT IN EUROPE.

THE present year (1892) sees the whole area of the Roman Empire in Europe, yea, and beyond its limits, "a vast armed camp with 14,000,000 of soldiers ready for the dread arbitrament of war. Such are the conditions at the end of an age which began by rejecting the Great Prince of Peace, and crucifying the Lord of Glory. Every deadly engine, instrument, and agent which modern science could devise or invent, in order to the destruction of human life in the event of war, is to the fore.

Not only is the flower of the young manhood of Europe trained and disciplined to serve the ambitious purposes of Imperial greed, or to preserve what is called "the balance of power" in Europe, but £400,000,000 of the world's wealth is being spent every year to maintain these huge military and naval armaments. Well may wars and rumours of wars abound, and commercial depression with degrading poverty sit as a self-inflicted and burdensome yoke upon the neck of the nations. Two or three of the European Governments may be described as superior and more stable than their peers. Weighed, however, in the balances of the Divine purpose in regard to righteous authority and government, they are, as a whole, proved to be disastrous failures. Nebuchadnezzar in his personal history foreshadowed Gentile rule. Through a bitter experience he was compelled to learn that 'the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will" (Dan. iv. 32).

The testimony pronounced by the prophet against the great despotic King, four times over states "SEVEN TIMES shall pass over you" (see Dan. iv. 16, 23, 25, 32). There was necessarily in Nebuchadnezzar's experience the limitation before referred to—viz., seven actual years of days, that is, 2520 ordinary days (see ch. iv. 32, 33). Addressed, however, as the representative of the great Gentile image, or as the 4th chapter gives it (v. 20), as the fully-developed tree "which was strong, and the height thereof reached to heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth," it is clear that Daniel did but emphasize the word of Jehovah that SEVEN TIMES—viz., 2520 years—was the fixed period for "the times of the Gentiles" to continue.

MICHAEL THE ARCHANGEL'S TESTIMONY.

Let the reader carefully ponder Daniel's prophecies given in chaps. ii. and iv., observe how completely their figurative testimonies are in agreement with the words of God to Moses in Lev. vi. and Deut. xxviii. Well might Michael the archangel speak to Daniel these significant words, "Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days, for yet the vision is for many days" (Dan. x. 14). We understand now why Daniel was commanded to shut up the words and seal the book to THE TIME OF THE END. We can sympathise with his ardent inquiry, "O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" and perceive the need which existed for the Divine reply, "Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed and sealed till the time of the end" (Dan. xii. 4, 8, 9).

What significance is thus given to the words, "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world" (Acts xv. 18). Here also is the key which fits the lock of Israel's coming national sovereignty. Just prior to our Lord's ascension the disciples asked Him (Acts i. 6), "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" Hearken to his reply. He did not state that the disciples were mistaken in regard to fact, and had become possessed of a carnal idea concerning the restoration of the kingdom to Israel. No; his reply was thus given: "It is not for you to know the times and the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power" (Acts i. 8).

The Lord Jesus knew the times and seasons, and was necessarily acquainted with the fact that nineteen centuries of "the times of the Gentiles" had to run on before they could be fulfilled. There would be no restoration of the kingdom to Israel in the face of his word that "Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Oh, the matchless wisdom hidden in the Lord's silence as well as in his word! Had He at that time revealed that which was then necessary to be concealed, how should believers in each generation have "waited for the Lord from heaven"? The blessed hope of his coming and glory could not have cheered the hearts and stimulated the faith of his people from the apostolic age until now had they been informed of that which we now clearly know. Well does Paul, writing for Christ, say, "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in the heavenlies might be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Ephes. iii. 10, 11).

THE TIMES OF JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the Apostle never confounded "the times of the Gentiles" with those of our Lord's sovereignty over the whole earth. The mind of the Holy Spirit, given in the New Testament, clearly regards "the times of the Gentiles" as having nothing in common with the times of Jesus Christ. The times of the restitution of all things, when God shall again send Jesus Christ (see Acts iii. 19—23), are yet future, and must not be confounded with this wicked, ungodly age.

The Apostle, writing to Timothy, charges him to keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Tim. vi. 14, 15). Mark! how he adds, "which in his times He shall show who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords." There is here no confounding the fourth monarchy, Rome, which Daniel describes as "the fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly, which had great iron teeth, that devoured in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it," with the supreme and beneficent sovereignty of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The terms BLESSED and ONLY are words purposely used for contrast. The Blessed Potentate is contrasted with the ambitious and corrupt kings common to "the times of the Gentiles;" the Only Potentate, with the many monarchs common to the experience of the dispensation now closing. Seeing there are now many earthly sovereigns reigning we know that "the times of the Gentiles" are yet in progress. These times must run out and be fulfilled before the times of the Blessed and Only Potentate begin. It is written, "The Lord shall be King over all the earth, in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one" (Zech. xiv. 9). The Supreme Sovereign can have no peer.

NEW TESTAMENT DISTINCTIONS.

That the Lord had instructed Paul in regard to the times of the Gentiles we have seen (Romans xi. 25). He also knew that many centuries of THOSE TIMES must pass before the times of the Blessed and only Potentate could begin. Guided of the Lord, and writing in one of his latest Epistles, he uses the emphatic future tense, "Which in his times He SHALL show"; not He is showing. With equal clearness the same is taught by the Lord in Eph. i. 10. Paul writes, "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will according to the good pleasure which He purposed in Himself; that in the dispensation of THE FULNESS OF TIMES (mark the words) He might gather together in Christ all things both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in Him."

Here, also, the dispensation of "the fulness of times" is clearly contrasted with the times of the Gentiles which precede. Here, also, the future tense is used. The fact is evident, neither our Lord, nor Paul, nor the Scripture ever confounds "the times of the Gentiles" now closing, with the times of the Blessed and only Potentate about to begin.

In this connection the reader's attention to Isaiah's prophecy (xxiv. 21-23) is asked. Here is given the graphic foreview of the judgment of the Lord upon Satan and his hosts in the heavenlies, and also upon the kings of the earth prior to his reign in Mount Zion and Jerusalem. In still more remarkable words does the Apostle John speak of "that great and terrible day of the Lord" in Rev. vi. 15-17: "And the kings of the earth and the great men, and the chief captains and the mighty men, hid themselves in the dens and rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?"

Writing from Syria, and now somewhat familiar with the rugged mountain heights and the extraordinary rocky fastnesses which exist in Lebanon and Palestine, and aware that amid these scenes the judgment of Christ is to rest upon the assembled kings and their armies, how striking is this solemn appeal to the rocks and mountains (Zech. xiv. 1). Evidently earthquake convulsions of stupendous and destructive force attend "the great day of his wrath." In like manner, Paul writes, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with the angels of his might in flaming fire, yielding vengeance upon them that know not God and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. i. 7, 8).

THE LIMIT OF JERUSALEM'S DOWNTREADING.

I proceed to notice our Lord's words concerning the treading down of Jerusalem. This was, as we have seen, to continue for a protracted period. This in 1892 is also history. Such has been the experience of the city from the time of its overthrow by Titus. Nor let it be forgotten that there is now proceeding in Jerusalem a remarkable incipient revival. Not only has there been during the past ten years the predicted return of thousands of Israel, but "the measuring line" of the builder is, indeed, passing over "the hill Gareb," and hundreds of houses are in course of erection at the very places named by Jeremiah xxxi. 28, 29. Our Lord's limit for the desolation and downtreading of Jerusalem is UNTIL the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled. Until, be it observed, and not beyond. It will not be in excess of the fact to state that fifty thousand of the houses of Judah and Israel have returned to Jerusalem and its vicinity during the past fifteen years.

Probably some of my readers will think that I am laying undue stress upon these items. I do not acknowledge it. At our Lord's first advent it is clear that, excepting to Zechariah, Elizabeth, Mary, Anna, John, and aged Simeon, the time was not only unknown but disbelieved. Nevertheless, Paul writes that "the fulness of the time" for the coming and Incarnation of the Son of God had then come (Gal. iv. 4).

To the Scribes and Pharisees, to the elders and religious teachers of that day, the Lord's coming was not only discredited, but we may rest assured the little company who were "waiting for the consolation of Israel" were regarded as so many fanatical enthusiasts. How well we can understand the jest, and the unbelieving laugh which would be heard when Simeon declared that it had been "revealed to him that he should not see death till he had seen the Lord's Christ" (Luke ii. 26).

THE CONCLUSIVE TESTIMONY OF THE SCRIPTURE.

Isaiah, speaking as a prophet seven hundred years before the birth of our Lord, writes of the land thus: "And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations" (lxi. 4). O Jerusalem, the Lord instructs him to say: "Whereas thou has been hated and forsaken so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, the joy of many generations. Violence shall no more be heard in thee, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation and thy gates Praise" (lx. 15-18). Jeremiah teaches the same concerning Israel: "And it shall come to pass that, like as I have watched over them to pluck up, and break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict, so will I watch over them to build and plant, saith the Lord" (Jer. xxxi. 28).

A LARGE BIBLE-CLASS.

The Men's Bible-class conducted by Mr. C. R. Parsons, in Old Market-street Chapel, Bristol, is becoming celebrated far beyond the limits of the ancient western city. The report for last year shows that there are now as many as 1046 members on the roll. In a "message" just issued to the men, Mr. Parsons says: "Our Bible-class was begun in Redcross-street. It was there that a young man came to me and said, 'I hear, sir, that you are about to begin a Bible-class; if so, I should like to join.' 'All right,' said I, struck with his courtesy, gentlemanliness, and manly bearing, 'you shall be the first member, and, indeed, you shall be the first secretary.' That young man has proved himself worthy, and now fills the same post."

The class has its savings bank, burial society, and library; and for all purposes over £1000 was subscribed during last year, nearly £200 towards Home and Foreign Missions, and the Wesley Hall Building Fund. Mr. Parsons has proposed, as a suitable commemoration of the fact that the membership has passed into four figures, that there should be a week of thanksgiving, during which the members should encourage one another in praise and prayer, and practise self-denial in the interest of the various agencies of the class.

On the site of the new Wesley Hall there was once a dancing saloon. It was enlarged and rented by the Mormons; then it was opened as a mission-room, where the converted men of Old Market-street Bible-class might employ their talents on Sunday evenings. It soon became too small, and had to be pulled down to make way for the present commodious building. In the old room souls were saved almost every Sunday evening. The new hall will seat five hundred persons, but it has school-room and vestry accommodation for three hundred more, at a cost of about £1700. Every chair is occupied on Sunday evenings, and conversions are continually taking place. About £300 is still required to free this building from debt. The address of the leader of the class is: One Poplar, 73, Ashley-road, Bristol.

'NEATH THE SHADOW O' HIS WING.

He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.—Psalm xci. 1.

Sae cozily I nestle doon
Aneath his oot-spread wings,
Nae place on earth is hauf sae dear,
Sic peace an' rest it brings.
A shadow frae the scorching heat,
A shelter frae the blast,
Whaur I can coorie doon an' hide
Till a' the storm is past.
Sae come an' rest ye here awhile,
Your cares a' frae ye fling;
There's nought to fear gin ye abide
In the shadow o' his wing.

The downie feathers o' his wing
Sae saftly roun' me fa',
I dinna feel the bitin' frost,
Nor heed the drivin' snaw;
For safely in my hidin' place,
Sae coothie an' sae warm,
The powers o' darkness strive in vain
To hurt me or alarm.

Wi' dowie heart an' weary feet,
Boo'd doon wi' cank'rin' care,
I trudged alang a dreary road,
An' maist sunk in despair.
But noo thick clouds may gather roun',
An' a' in darkness hide—
Nae evil thing hae I to fear
Sae lang as here I bide.

Destruction sair, wi' reckless han',
On ilka side I've seen;
But frae the wily fowler's snare
I hae delivered been;
Sae noo to Him wha' reigns aboon,
Wi' grateful heart I sing,
May He aye be my dwelling-place,
An' hide me 'neath His wing.

Missionary Proxies.

That the world needs to be evangelised, and that Christ has commanded his followers to see to its being done, by commissioning them to preach the Gospel to every creature, are propositions acknowledged to be true by the great majority of those who bear his name. From the close of the first century of the Christian era, till one hundred years ago, very little was seriously attempted by the churches in this direction, and although to-day, more than at any other period since the days of the Apostles, Christians of all denominations are, with a holy emulation, vying with each other in their resolve to obey the command of Christ, still three-fourths of the inhabitants of the earth are yet without a knowledge of the true plan of salvation.

With a view to overtake the work still to be done, and to possess the land in this generation, all the great Missionary Societies are developing schemes for a grand Forward Movement, and the spirit of the times has given birth to many smaller agencies, inspired by a desire to add their quota in the same great cause.

For nearly six years The Missionary Bureau has been collecting and disseminating information concerning all spiritually destitute and neglected places throughout the world, emphasizing the claims of these unevangelised peoples, and showing the greatness and the urgency of the responsibility resting upon all Christians to give them the Gospel.

In addition, however, to the needs of these unoccupied fields there is a constant, pressing demand from missionaries everywhere, beseeching that bands of young men might be sent to their sadly undermanned stations, where the people are perishing from lack of the knowledge of the Gospel of God. All the Missionary Societies would be glad to respond generously to these cries for helpers, did the state of their funds warrant it. When one reads in the daily papers that £140,00,000 are puffed away annually in tobacco-smoke, and that a sum of £500,000,000 represents the taxable income of England and Wales alone for one year, one may conclude it is not from lack of ability to contribute that the people of Great Britain leave the Exchequers of Missionary Societies empty. Comparing the above figures with those given by Canon Scott Robertson in his last returns, the difference is astounding between the millions annually burned in tobacco-pipes (not to speak of our drink-bill), and the miserable pittance given by the wealthiest nation in the world for the cause of missions in heathen lands.

We deluge the nations with maddening drinks; we poison our millions by the opium traffic; we spend lavishly, pandering to our follies; while, as a nation, we leave three-fourths of our fellow-creatures to live in sin and to die in misery, without God and without hope. How long is such a state of matters to continue? How long are the efforts of Missionary Societies to be paralysed through want of funds? When will all members of churches, chapels, mission halls, and Christian Associations see it to be their bounden duty to rally to the cause of Foreign Missions, and realise that, by failing to do so, they are neglectful of the souls of men and disloyal to Christ?

We heartily rejoice at what is being done, collectively and individually, by those who are alive to this great question; but our present purpose is to emphasize the great desirability and practicability of doing almost infinitely more; especially urging upon Christian congregations everywhere, as well as upon individual Christians, as far as the Lord has prospered them, the advantages of having their own personal representative in the Foreign Mission Field. Not a few known to us are doing this now, who take a very special interest in their proxy, and who have their own spiritual life greatly quickened by being thus in direct touch with the heathen fields. There must, however, be hundreds more, both of Churches and individuals, who could do the same, thereby greatly helping forward the world's evangelisation, and at the same time reaping to themselves reflex benefits simply incalculable.

Such proxies could work in connection with whatever Society or Mission commends itself most to those whom they are to represent. In this way, without any interference with present givings, or with existing arrangements, hundreds of Missionaries could be sent out, and the heart of Christ greatly gladdened by seeing a more general desire throughout the Churches to obey his parting command.

Should the Lord cause any to be exercised in mind about this matter, they are earnestly requested to communicate with the Secretary of their own missionary Society; or with the Secretary of The Missionary Bureau, 1, Gresham-street, London, who will be pleased to give further information in connection with this plan.

MR. CHARLES COOK'S PRISON WORK.

"In the name of God give me one of those books," said a prisoner to me, in the great prison of Moscow, and by his head being half shaved I knew he was soon to go to Siberia.

"Oh, if there had only been one more I should have had one," remarked, on another occasion, a convict in a foreign gaol, as I handed out my last copy of the New Testament.

In my many journeys to foreign prisons, I have noticed the eagerness exhibited by Mohammedans as well as Roman Catholics, to obtain possession of the Book of which they have heard something. It was at first my only object to leave with them a copy of the Testament, but when I have found many hundreds starving in prison dungeons, or on the other hand unjustly detained for years without ever having been tried, I have felt obliged in the one case to feed them, and in the other to protest loudly against the great injustice done them, before I have been able to offer them the Word of Life. The Sultan of Morocco has said that, "It is cheaper to let the prisoners die of starvation than to pay the butcher's bill for having them killed"; and there are thousands to-day in Moorish prisons suffering from disease and starvation, and if I might speak as one of them, I would say, "Who will care for our souls?"

Being in possession of credentials from the Governments of most of the countries of Europe, besides those of other continents, I am privileged to have entrée into any of the prisons of the world; and whilst I have done a little in carrying the Word of God to prisoners, yet there remains a vast untrodden field. I am looking to our God for direction, and hope once more to go amongst this neglected and almost forgotten class.

During my last journey through Northern Europe my opportunities greatly increased, the prison churches being thrown open to me, and special services being allowed to be held daily; this I hope to see repeated. There are many who would wish to help me in this matter of supplying these shut-up ones with Testaments—I never give anything else. Brethren, pray for us. Remember also our Stundist brethren in Russia; many believers are now in prison for Christ's sake. Italy has over five thousand men under a "life sentence," who know no day of rest during the week, having to work on the Lord's Day. I desire to be able to say on "that day I have given them thy Word."

UNION HALL MISSION.

The work of this Mission has been continued with many evidences of blessing to souls in the five Halls. There has been a large amount of sickness and sorrow among the poor, and our workers have been earnestly engaged in visiting the suffering and dying, and ministering to them the comforts and consolations of the Gospel of God's grace and love, and in relieving distress as far as possible.

We believe that through the solemn events which of late have taken place, there is a more eager attention to the great truths of the Word of God, both in the services in the halls, and in the open air. We ask the earnest prayers of the readers of The Christian on behalf of our evangelistic work, that many may be led to Christ just now, and that we may be guided and helped in all the work.

We purpose, God willing, to have the annual meetings on March 24, and would be glad if, through the sympathy and prayers of God's people, we might be enabled to close the year free from debt.

THE BROKEN SENTENCE.

EXODUS XXXII. 32.

THIS is one of the most pathetic verses of the ble, which bears on its face the evidence of its nuineness. It could not have emanated from mind or pen of some later scribe, because entirely unexpected, so strange and yet so ely. It reminds us of the shaft of a graceful umn broken off in the middle, or of a strain plaintive music hushed to sudden silence by snapping of a string. It is the fragment of a tence of which we would have given much to r the conclusion, but who can presume to finish t which in this supreme hour was choked by a roxysm of grief, a sob of irrepressible emotion?

I. THE PROBLEM WITH WHICH HE HAD TO AL. (1) Their idolatry.—After the utterance the ten great words of Sinai, the people, ghtened by the thunderings and lightnings, d the voice of the trumpet, and the smoke of mountain, entreated Moses to act as their ysman and mediator. "They said unto him: eak thou with us and we will hear, but let not d speak with us, lest we die." The great law- er and leader, acting on their request, there- on withdrew himself into the divine pavilion, d was absent for about six weeks.

At first, without doubt, the people were well tent. Better to be temporarily deprived of ir leader, than be exposed to those terrible nderings. But, after a while, they became asy and restless. From one to another the d passed, "Where is he? He did not take d enough with him to sustain him for so long. he met with some mishap on those lonely eps? or perchance he has been destroyed by t burning fire, or absorbed into the unseen." s for this Moses, the man that brought us up of the land of Egypt, we know not what is ome of him." And then turning to Aaron, man of words, sure that neither he nor twenty him could fill the gap which the loss of Moses d caused, they cried, "Up, make us gods, ich shall go before us."

We may notice, as we pass, the essential ure of idolatry. For in this marvellous pter we have its entire history, from the t cry of the soul, which betrays a mighty rning for an idol, to the draining of the last ter dregs, with which, when ground to powder, idolater has to drink its very dust. Men metimes speak of idolaters bowing down ore material forms, whether of gold, stone, or d, as if they supposed that these were ine, and possessed Divine attributes. This be the case with the more degraded and ased. But in the beginning it was not so if we carefully study the question in all its ings, we shall discover that the idolater does —in the first instance, at least—look upon image as God, but as a representation or nifestation of God. It is an attempt on the t of the human spirit which shrinks from effort of communion with the unseen and ritual, to associate God with what it can own handle, so as to have a constant and evident en of the presence and favour of God.

his was the case of Israel. It was only three nths since they had stood by the Red Sea, seen its waters roll in pride over the hosts Pharaoh. Every day since then God's love followed them. For them the heaven had en bread and the rocks had flowed with water, his cloud had sailed majestically through sky, shielding them in the daylight and ning like a watch-fire through the night. even at the time with which we are dealing whole summit of the mount was crowned by pavilion of cloud, which was the emblem of Presence in their midst. But notwithstanding all, they had been carried away before that imperious craving of the human heart which cries out for a sensible image of its worship.

Their idolatry, then, was a violation, not of the first, but of the second commandment. They did not propose to renounce Jehovah—that was left for the days of Ahab; but they desired to worship Jehovah under the form of a calf, and in distinct violation of the emphatic prohibition which said, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or the likeness of any form that is in heaven above, or the earth beneath; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them nor serve them." This was the sin also of Jeroboam.

(2) Their Degradation.—There can be no doubt that the worship of the calf was accompanied with the licentious orgies which were a recognised part of Egyptian idolatry. As much as this is implied in the narrative. "The people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play." In the R.V. a striking emendation is given of the 25th verse. "Moses saw that the people were broken loose, for Aaron had let them loose for the derision of their enemies." And from this we may infer that the bonds of continence, that had restrained them since the Exodus, had been suddenly slackened, with the result of their breaking from all restraint, and giving themselves up to their unholy riot. It is an awful thing when a single man throws the reins on the neck of inordinate desire, but how passing terrible it must have been when a whole nation did it. "Behold, the whole herd of swine rushed down the steep into the sea, and perished in the waters."

And such was the inveteracy of the evil that, even after Moses had reached the spot, his presence did not avail to check the outbreak, nor even the bitter waters of which he made them drink. Nothing availed to arrest it till he stood at the gate of the camp, gathered around him the tribe of Levi, who with drawn swords slew 3000 men, and quenched the flames of passion in streams of blood.

3. The Claims of God.—There was every reason to believe that God would exact the full amount of penalty, not because He was vindictive, but because the maintenance of his authority seemed to demand it. The righteousness of his character, the inviolability of his oath, the authority of the Ten Commandments, so recently given, combined to make it necessary that He should do as He had said.

And yet, on the other hand, there was the fear lest, if, to use the language of men, God's anger waxed hot and He consumed them, the Egyptians might say, For evil did He bring them forth to slay them on the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth. And thus Jehovah's character might be misunderstood and maligned amongst the nations around.

How could God maintain his character with his own people without imperilling it with the Egyptians? If He spared the people they would begin to think that neither his threats nor his promises were worth their heed. And if He destroyed them, his glory would be dimmed, and He might seem to have become unmindful of the oath which He swore by Himself to his servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, that He would multiply their seed, and give the land of Canaan to them as an heritage for ever. So greatly did these considerations weigh with Moses that he refused the Divine offer to make him the only survivor of the host, and the progenitor of a great nation.

It would almost seem as if this proposal was like the suggestion made to Abraham that he should offer up his only son Isaac. In each case God tried or tested his servant. But there is this great difference between the temptations of the devil and of God. The former seeks to bring out all the evil, and to make it permanent, as the streams of lava poured from the heart of a volcano; the latter seeks to bring out all the good, and to make it ours; for moral qualities never become ours till we have put them into practice.

II. THE EMOTIONS WITH WHICH HIS SOUL WAS STIRRED.—In the mount he acted as intercessor. When God told him all that was transpiring in the plain below, and showed the glittering sword of justice suspended over the guilty nation by a thread, he pleaded for the people whom he loved. "And Moses besought the Lord his God: Turn from thy fierce wrath and repent of this evil against thy people." And the Lord repented of the evil which He said He would do unto his people.

On his way down from the mount, when he came near enough to see the calf and the dancing, peering over some over-hanging ledge of rock, the old impetuous vehemence which had characterised him in earlier life, and had slept for so many years, broke out with all its old intensity. It was not against the people, but against their sin, that his anger flamed out. "Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount." Those splintered bits leaping from crag to crag are an apt symbol of man's inability to keep intact the holy law of God.

When he reached the camp he seems to have strode into the astonished throng and broke up their revelry, overturned their calf, ordering it to be destroyed, and the fragments mingled with the water they drank. But as it would seem that this did not avail to stay the inveterate evil, He was compelled to use more drastic measures, and by the sword of Levi to extinguish the evil with the life-blood of three thousand men.

Then when the next day came, when the camp was filled with mourning over those new-made graves, when the awful reaction had set in on the people and himself, the tide seems to have turned. His indignation was succeeded by bitter sorrow and pity. The thunderstorm was broken into floods of tears. The pitiable state to which their sin had reduced them aroused his deepest compassion, and he said unto the people, "Ye have sinned a great sin, and now I will go up unto the Lord, peradventure I shall make atonement for your sin;" but he did not tell them the purpose which was in his heart, nor the price which he was purposing to pay.

III. THE OFFER THAT HE MADE.—He went quietly and thoughtfully back to the Presence-chamber of God, as the people stood beholding. "Peradventure," he had said. He was not sure. He felt that the sin was very great. He could not see how God could go back from his solemn threatenings. He was convinced that if the merited judgments were averted, it must be in consequence of an atonement. Yet, what atonement could there be? Animals could not avail, though they were offered in hecatombs. There was only one thing he could suggest—he could offer himself. He was, of course, by no means clear that even this would be accepted or avail, but he could at least make the offer. This was the secret which he locked in his breast as he climbed the mountain. And it was this which made him say, "Peradventure." He could not be sure that the ransom price would be large enough.

It may be asked how came he to think of atonement? But we must remember that probably there had already been much talk between God and himself about the sacrifices which the people were to offer. Again and again had the word atonement been employed; he had learned that one by suffering could redeem others, he had seen the deep possibilities in the law of substitution, and it seemed a natural thing, therefore, to propose that he, the chosen servant, the prince and leader of the people, should be weighed in the scale against the nation, and God should accept his blood as a ransom for their life.

And Moses confessed his people's sin to God, and added: "Yet now, if Thou wilt forgive their sin ——" He would not finish that sentence. He could not trust himself to depict the blessed consequences that would ensue, if only God would forgive. If Thou wilt forgive, freely, and without a ransom price, then thy noblest attributes will appear, then my tongue shall sing aloud of thy goodness, then I will bind myself to thy service with new enthusiasm, then the people surely will become touched with the passion of gratitude and love.

But the dark fear oppressed him that free pardon was too much to expect. Ah! how little did he realise the love of God in Jesus Christ our Lord. And he therefore added: "And if not, blot me, I pray Thee, out of thy book which Thou hast written." That book may be the Book of Life; or it may be the registry of God's people, whether in this life or in the next. So that the proposal was either that he should there and then die, and not see the good land beyond Jordan; or that he should cease to be numbered with God's people and miss for ever the beautiful vision, finding his portion among the reprobate.

This proposal was made deliberately and thoughtfully. He had had ample time to think it over during the long and tedious climb from the mountain foot. He was quite prepared for God to accept it. Oh, how the heart of God must have moved towards the faithful servant, whose proposal recalled another scene in the far-away ages of eternity, when the Son of God undertook to redeem man by making an atonement through the shedding of his own blood.

Of course, the offer was not accepted. No one can atone for his own sin, much less for the sins of others. Yet the people were spared. The passing by of their transgression was rendered possible by the propitiation which was to be offered in the course of the ages on the cross (Rom. iii. 25). And though they suffered from that moment the loss of the Divine Presence in its former manifestations, yet the angel of God was sent before them to lead them into the land of promise.

OPEN DOORS IN CHILI.

From a recent number of The Christian, I understand that a Society for the Evangelisation of South America has been formed in England. It is certainly a cause for thankfulness; but at the same time it appears to be for the aboriginal tribes only, and from this I judge that the real needs of South America are not even yet fully understood. The Indian tribes certainly need the Gospel, but not more than the mixed races and Spanish populations. Neither in England nor Rome itself, can one come to an understanding of the true inwardness of Romanism. As seen here, it is the most brutalising power that Satan ever devised; it brutalises the ignorant into idolatry and gross superstition, or drives the intelligent into materialism.

God puts upon the heart of different men special fields—Chili is mine. I am here supporting myself as best I may; praying, hoping, and believing, that sooner or later some church or society will take an interest in this field. It is ripe for the sickle of the reaper. There are two places to my knowledge in Chili where the Bible work has brought together congregations who are asking for pastors, offering to pay part of their support, and hoping later to pay all. They still have none. Concepcion, where I am, is the centre from which four railroads reach large towns, and from here evangelisation can be done. I have now rented a small piece of ground, hoping to buy it later on, and to make it a centre for Christian work. Should any society or church desire to send any one out here, I would do all in my power to help, taking them on to my land, teaching them the language, and aiding them in every way that my means will permit. My heart is full of the needs of Chili. I thank the Christian friends in old England for their support in prayer, and am sure that had they not upheld us we would not have felt the rest and assurance we did during the troublous and trying time of the dictatorship and revolution. Pray for Chili. "Come over to Macedonia and help us."

POLITICAL CLUBS AND SABBATH OBSERVANCE.—Mr. J. Blundell Maple, M.P., speaking recently at Brixton, called attention to the fact that while the Radicals on the County Council advocate restricting the sale of liquor, yet they encourage the Working-men's Clubs, in which dramatic and variety entertainments take place every Sunday, and intoxicating liquor is sold on Sundays as well as on week-days, till the small hours of the morning.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT AND THE OPIUM QUESTION.

Sir Joseph Pease, Bart., M.P., presided at an important meeting of members of Parliament and friends of the anti-opium movement at Westminster Palace Hotel on Tuesday last week, convened for the purpose of considering the best means of bringing the question to an immediate settlement. In his opening remarks Sir Joseph Pease pointed out that in the Blue-book on the subject just issued, each of those officials who attempted to palliate and minimize the evils of the traffic, also strongly urged the fact that he was trying to limit the consumption of the drug. If the drug was harmless, why limit its consumption?

Mr. George Gillett, Treasurer of the Committee of Urgency, maintained that Burmah, India, and China, were all against the traffic. Mr. A. S. Dyer, in his late visit to the Court of Peking, had ascertained that the most prominent Chinese statesmen were in favour of the abolition of the traffic, provided the heavy hand of England was taken off. Dr. Dudgeon, of Peking, who was medical adviser to many of these statesmen, corroborated this statement, and the Dutch Ambassador, from a late interview with great Chinese officials, also confirmed this view. The opium slaves' petition against the traffic from Bombay, the expression of the native press, and the fifty thousand spontaneous signatures to petitions in India for the abolition of the traffic, show the opinion of India. Half measures are of no avail. In Burmah, the Government had gone as nearly as possible to prohibition, and had found that everything short of prohibition is futile. The Government of India are not manufacturing a medicine, but a drug for sensual purposes, for the use of degraded men and women for the purposes of debauch.

Dr. Maxwell dwelt upon the rapid spread during recent years of the use of opium for vicious purposes in England. He gave some terrible facts on this line from the experiences of medical friends of his. He felt that one strong reason for the great rapidity with which the five thousand signatures to the late medical memorial were sent in, was the fact that medical men all over the country are finding the vice spreading in English society. It is by legislation alone that the vast mass of temptation which has been induced by British action in Asia can be removed. This legislation must be enacted in this country.

Mr. Mark Stewart, M.P., said that anti-opium workers might feel congratulated by the admission contained in the recent Blue-book issued by the Government. Mr. Joshua Rowntree, M.P., called the said Blue-book "an arsenal of weapons" for the anti-opium party.

Mr. Alfred Dyer spoke of the exceeding pride with which the English nation looked upon their share in the abolition of slavery, but the Anglo-Asiatic opium traffic was based upon the principles of slavery. Over a hundred native newspapers in India have issued anti-opium pamphlets. Largely-attended public meetings in India have asked as a matter of simple justice that the sale of opium in India may be placed on a level with that in England. In their opium policy England is denying that Asiatics have any rights which Europeans need respect. This was the root principle of the slave traffic. It is the fashion in English politics to-day to deal with philanthropic and social measures—such as Free Education, Small Holdings Schemes, and Old Age Pensions—but these schemes only affect a small population of forty millions, whilst nearly twenty times that population are in danger from the opium traffic. Delay in putting an end to this evil means that the cries of wronged wives and starving children are being left unheeded.

Colonel Hughes, M.P., moved a resolution urging upon the members of Parliament who voted in the majority on the 10th April last, the desirability, by questions and in debate, of continuing to elucidate the proceedings of the Indian Government, both in regard to the Indian consumption and the trade with China and other foreign parts. He spoke of the traffic as "a national sin," and urged the necessity of repeated blows until the thing was abolished.

A suggestion of a practical and important character was thrown out for combined action of a non-party character among members of Parliament. This hint was received with sympathy, and will doubtless be acted upon.

In conclusion, Sir Joseph Pease dwelt upon the littleness of the revenue question, when all deductions are made.

WORK IN MADAGASCAR.

BURNING OF A MEDICAL MISSION HOSPITAL.

Mr. J. G. Mackay writes from Antsihanak as to the Medical Mission and the burning the new hospital:—Few of your readers doubtles know of the existence of this province, much le that the London Missionary Society has impor ant general, educational, and medical missio work going on in it. The station from which write, Imerimandroso, is about 140 miles nort east of Antananarivo, the capital, and since las April my wife, the only European lady in th province, and myself have been working alon our colleague, Rev. E. H. Stribling, having le on furlough early in the year.

During the past seven months we have bee building a much-needed cottage hospital for th province at this station. The foundation-layin took place on June 11. Since then we had com pleted the brickwork, and had nearly complete the roof, thatched, as is the custom here, when was burnt on the morning of December 8 by som of the emissaries, viz., spirit-dealers from th capital, who deemed their trade to have bee injured by us. Great was our dismay and that of the people, who had jus three days before collected twenty pounds (on hundred dollars) through their six-monthly con ference and a special collection. The total ex penditure up to the date of the fire was abou £120. Bricks to the value of about eight or nin pounds, as well as wood and other material, ha been contributed by the natives. The loss ha been estimated at about sixty or sixty-fiv pounds. In our difficulties I am glad to say th natives have given decided help. The director of the L.M.S. have also voted us £150, so tha about £100 are still needed to rebuild and com plete.

The need of such an hospital is continuall pressed upon us; many of the Hova from Imerni and the superstitious native Sihanaka come t us, and from want of accommodation the ba cases cannot be nursed by us as they should, an the art of nursing is almost unknown by th natives.

IN THE BETSILO COUNTRY.

From Antananarivo a Norwegian missionar (Mr. C. Bordigrevink) writes:—"The missio work of the Norwegian Missionary Society i Madagascar is prospering. We work har moniously with other Protestant missions, an have gradually succeeded in getting the di ferent spheres of labour so defined that a overlapping is avoided. Lately we have take up work among the hitherto heathen Baraland and other tribes not yet touched by Christia missions. In our first field, the Betsilo country we have now about four hundred churche twenty-eight thousand baptized Christian (of whom about twenty thousand are com municants), eighteen ordained native minister more than one thousand teachers for about fiv hundred schools, with about thirty thousan pupils. In our theological seminary we have a present forty-two students, of which the mos are hopeful young men. At Siralie we have leper home, with more than one hundred poo invalids, taken care of by a devoted deacones from Norway. The number of Norwegian mis sionaries in Madagascar at present is twenty three, while ten ladies are working as teacher and deaconesses."

REV. J. JACKSON WRAY being sufficiently re covered from his recent severe illness to undertak pulpit work, arrangements have been entered int with the church at Westminster Chapel by which h will take the Sunday and week evening service during March. The friends at Westminster ar greatly encouraged by recent tokens of spiritua awakening and growth. For the last three week prayer-meetings have been held every evening spe cially to seek the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upo the church; the meetings have been characterised b deep earnestness, and with daily increasing number in attendance.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—A little report o work done during the past quarter of a century con tains much interesting and instructive matter, and i written in a devout and earnest spirit. The result include the sale of a large number of Bibles in eight languages to sailors, while eighty-five thousand me have taken the total abstinence pledge. The societ occupies fifty-two seaports at home and abroad, i provided with forty-three mission vessels and boats and fifty-one seamen's churches and institutes. Th secretary is Commander Dawson, R.N., and th offices are at 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

Protestant Paris.

BY. J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

II.—Missions.

No Gospel work in Paris is better known to hristians all the world over than the McAll ission, and that not because of its leader's con-nued appeals and blowing of trumpets—both of hich are features entirely foreign here—but be-use of outside helpers whom the Lord has ised up for him. Exactly twenty years ago, e founder and his wife were led to take up eir abode in the French capital by the opening hich had been shown them on a previous visit st after the Commune. People who would not ve listened to the Gospel message a year be-re, were then prepared to drink it in. I well member the shattered buildings and the ruins, s we drove through the streets at that time, t more than these had suffered, for full many home was broken up, and many a heart was nt, and the nation was humiliated—prepared us for the seed. That seed has rapidly grown,

ITS SOWERS HAVE MULTIPLIED,

d the good work prospers grandly, since it is done r God. For eight years those two toiled alone and ere blessed, till independently of them an in-rest was aroused in America, which sent them nds and helpers, enabling new halls to be taken d fresh departures made. There are now no ss than forty preaching places in Paris and its v.rons, and many more all over France—some amed after the towns in America from which ey are supported. It was, of course, impossible visit all these—even within the city walls—uring a short stay, but all to whom I spoke of em, testified as to the good that was being ccomplished by them. A special feature of this ork is its undenominational character. Its aim not to form churches, but to feed those already existence. Some feel this is a weakness, as so any fall away for lack of being at once welcomed to active membership somewhere. The ques-on is a very difficult one, but it must be faced.

About the same time that this work took its se—perhaps a little earlier—a young Dutch lady, ss de Broën, received a similar summons to ter this newly-broken ground. She, too, has en greatly honoured by God in her efforts mong the poor of the East-end of Paris. Her edical mission, under Dr. Wm. Roberts, is a great traction, whom Christ is preached. A wider open door ed not be wished for, nor a better neighbour-od to enter it. The mission is one which is orthy of reorganisation, under a committee, on larger scale, to relieve Miss de Broën of some her responsibilities, enlisting a wider range of mpathies, and greatly enlarging the sphere of tion. The leader, who has borne the heat of d burden of the day, should not be always pressed with the necessity of personal super-sion of the whole, and of the collection of funds.

The morning I visited this mission, Rev. C. Moore, of China, had both encouraged the orkers and interested the attendants by an ddress while they waited to see the doctor, hose fame has spread far and wide. Patients ve to come in time for the morning service, at hich they receive a ticket which will admit em to the consulting-room any time during at day. In the course of each week, some 0 or 500 sick folk avail themselves of this room, d in doing so, come under Gospel influence. esides this branch there are day and night hools, and in the winter a soup kitchen and orking meetings. A more eloquent testimony to the way in which these efforts are ap-eciated for their own sake need hardly be ed than the presentation, in 1879, of a silver edal to Miss de Broën by the Paris Société de Encouragement du Bien.

In close proximity to Miss de Broën's centre Belleville is one of the missions of the Re-rmed Church, and the ignorance of friends in ngland that this was the name of a large strict has led at times to confusion of appeals ade on behalf of one or the other. The McAll ission also originated in Belleville, which was e of the Communist strongholds.

Perhaps, of all the evangelistic organisations Paris, none is doing a more solid work, and at with less stir, than Rev. W. and Mrs. bson's Wesleyan Mission. Previous to the mmune, and for some years afterwards, Mr. bson laboured among his fellow-countrymen, t latterly his whole attention has been given the French. At the numerous preaching places under their supervision, outsiders are not only gathered in, but, once saved, they are "built up" in the methodical fashion which earned for Wesley's followers their distinctive appellation. In the busy quarter of the Batignolles a most encouraging work proceeds nightly, having in connection with it women's and children's Bible-meetings, Sunday-schools, cottage meetings, and district visiting. In several other quarters, too, inside and outside the walls, and at Mr. Gibson's home at St. Cloud, an equally promising work goes on, with real earnest endeavour to gather in the poor and wretched to the feast of life. Every Sunday evening addresses, chiefly on social questions and Christianity, are delivered by Mr. Gibson and his friends in a hall on the Boulevard des Capucines, which afford also an opportunity for the upper classes to learn of the glad tidings they have to tell.

There are in Paris three missions to the Jews—the London society is represented by Mr. L. C. Mamlock; there is a French society, whose agent is Herr Leub; and there is an independent work carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Feingold, in connection with which a dispensary is opened on certain days by Dr. Mieg.

There is also a small branch of the Christian Postal Union.

The visit some time ago of Mr. H. Cook's mission ship to Paris is still warmly spoken of as having been productive of much good. The novelty of what was facetiously styled by the Press a "Salvation Navy," attracted crowds to hear the Gospel message; and, indeed,

QUITE A SENSATION WAS PRODUCED by the evident earnestness and zeal of the visitors, and those who helped them.

There are, moreover, many Christian residents who are ready to assist one agency or another as need arises, whose labours are no less important than those of salaried workers. Passing visitors even are able to do much to encourage the labourers, whether they speak the language or not, by the enjoyment of fellowship with them, and by showing kindly faces and outstretched hands to the native converts. Of course, those who know the language can afford relief as well as encouragement, and both are ofttimes needed.

There would seem to be at present a special opportunity for further extension of the work, rather by the strengthening of the hands of the agencies already engaged, than by establishing new ones. On every side the same cry is heard, Send us workers, send us money, pray for us. Notwithstanding the whirl of thoughtless gaiety in which so many Parisians live—most, perhaps, who can afford it—there is apparent the same dissatisfaction with it all that is observable in other lands, which should be made an opportunity to sow the seed. Students are growing tired of dilettantism; infidelity and scepticism they find afford no joy, yet they have nothing before them but dry husks to turn to. Pastor Monod remarked to me that even the Press seemed to be adopting a higher tone of late, and to afford less countenance to immorality. It was as though the nation had begun to feel its need of being lifted up, its moral level was so low.

Yet in the midst of all this need, notwithstanding our great command, the pioneers who have gone forward are compelled to spend a considerable portion of their time at home, in stirring up the Christian public to support them. Is not this a disgrace to us? When I arrived in Paris I found that Mr. McAll was sending the Rev. S. H. Anderson to America to preach for funds—a very great expense in itself. Mr. Gibson was already there for a like purpose, and had been over the year before. Miss de Broën had been several months in England, working hard on platforms and in drawing-rooms; and this seems a periodical necessity! If Christians mean to give at all, why not do so without all this waste of time, money, and energy? The practice of thus compelling work abroad to be abandoned to induce us to unloose our purse-strings cannot be too strongly condemned, or its evil tendencies too well made known. Those who come home should come to rest and to recoup their strength, not to go touting for cash. The very nature of these agencies prevents the possibility of their being self-supporting. They are not colonies, but armies, which must ever draw supplies from home. As churches are formed they should become self-supporting; but this, mission work cannot be.

III. FOREIGN.

Under this head come the various undertakings among strangers, who, of course, abound in Paris. There are some twelve thousand English alone, the majority of them being stable-men or employes in gas-works, &c.; but a constantly-changing number serve behind the counter, or in offices, to equip themselves with French. Ten English congregations meet each Sunday in different places—three Church of England, three Methodist, one each Scotch and American Episcopalian, Congregational, and undeterminate American. The Church of England also conducts several mission services. The need for real aggressive and reclaiming work among our fellow countrymen and women abroad cannot be over-estimated.

Miss Leigh's (Mrs. Travers Lewis') Homes for English women are well known, and occupy a most important sphere. But they are more than homes and registries, for they are utilised to conduct schools for English children, and in winter to supply soup and assistance to English poor. They are supervised by a committee of friends on the spot, who make personal inquiry as to the situations from which applications come, and they are deserving of every support. A Y.W.C.A. branch is also carried on.

The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., already alluded to, has about a hundred members, and a much larger number of associates, having doubled during the past year under the secretaryship of Mr. Basil Hewer. It is now over twenty-three years old. The Sunday afternoon gatherings, followed by an informal tea, to which every English speaking young man is welcome, are a special feature of this work, and a most important one.

Mrs. Gibson has a home for Christians passing through Paris at 20, Rue Clairault; and Miss de Broën has a similar institution at 205, Rue St. Honoré, the profits from both—when there are any—going towards the mission work. Ladies finding themselves even one Sunday in Paris will find a hearty welcome at these centres, and those who go to Paris to stay should be provided also with the address of Miss Leigh's headquarters, 77, Avenue Wagram.

For the nationalities besides English and Americans, there are four German Protestant places of worship, and two Swedish. There is also a German Home for Governesses, and another for Servants.

This concludes the notice of all the Protestant agencies in Paris of which I am aware: should any remain unmentioned, so much the better for the cause, though I should regret the oversight on my part.

EDUCATION OF AMERICAN NEGROES.

Mr. M. J. Maddox, principal of the Normal Industrial and Christian Training School, Gainesville, Florida, U.S.A., continues for a short time longer in Great Britain. He has availed himself of many opportunities to evangelise in England, and is now devoting his energies more especially to making known the needs of the important institution with which he is connected. Himself a coloured gentleman, he speaks from knowledge as to the social disabilities under which many of the negroes of America are labouring. He desires to raise £4000 towards enlarging and thereby increasing the usefulness of the Gainesville School. £2000 has already been contributed, a considerable part of it by coloured folk. He has come among us with the endorsement of many prominent Christians in the United States, and has won the confidence and interest of not a few influential pastors and workers in London.

In a large part of America the negro is unable to engage in artisan work because of the prejudices and exclusive union rules of the whites. In the South the trades are generally open to journeymen blacks, but opportunities for learning trades and professions are very limited. To meet this state of things Christian colleges have been established which combine industrial training with intellectual tuition. Since 1884 more than a hundred persons have gone from the Gainesville School as Christian teachers, workers, and mechanics. The desire for education among the blacks, and their warm religious nature, is well known. Mr. Maddox, who may be addressed 30, Avondale-square, North Camberwell, London, S.E., hopes, in a short time, to return home with substantial evidences of the sympathy of English Christians in the welfare of the many thousands of negroes in the state of Florida.

Newquay Y.W.C.A.—A few books (new or second-hand), suitable for a small library in connection with a branch of the Young Women's Christian Association, lately formed at Newquay, will be gratefully received by the Secretary, Miss Michell, The Fort, Newquay, Cornwall.

IN MEMORIAM: MRS. MERRY,

OF THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

For many years three sisters have been linked in loving labour, having consecrated their lives to the Lord's service among the poor: Miss Macpherson at the Home of Industry, Mrs. Birt at the Sheltering Home, Liverpool, and Mrs. Merry, whose ready and tender ministry has long been devoted to the interests of her beloved and honoured sister's East-end and Canadian work. This bond of mutual helpfulness has now, however, been broken for a time by the calling home of her whose bright kindliness endeared her to many. Mrs. Merry fell asleep on Wednesday week (Feb. 24), after two weeks' severe illness. Her end was perfect peace, and calm, restful confidence in Him she had known and served in many a trying and anxious hour.

Rachel Stuart Merry was the wife of Joseph Merry, of Eversham, Cambs, widely known from his close connection with the Home of Industry and his able assistance in organising and superintending the operations in the Dominion. Her introduction to the work dates back to the last visitation of cholera, when, with her husband, she threw herself into effort for the aid of the sufferers. Since that time both have been honorary (but constant) workers in East London and Canada.

Mrs. Merry was specially the friend of the aged widows who have met regularly, ever since the terrible scourge just mentioned, at the Home of Industry—that busy centre of loving and varied service on behalf of the poor and needy. The Home itself owes its origin, in 1866, largely to the great need discovered at that time among the hundreds of widows and the destitute and orphan children. When the plan of taking these little ones to Canada, and placing them out in happy homes and watching over them, was adopted, Mrs. Merry gave herself up to it with delight. Since then she has had the joy of helping to outfit 5500 and seeing them settled beyond the sea. She has accompanied no less than thirty parties, so that she has crossed the Atlantic, out and home, sixty times—not that she loved the stormy billows but that she loved the service. She has, indeed, been "the Mother" in the Homes, and ever seemed on fire with longing for the conversion of the children. How we have seen her eye kindle, and heard an exclamation of praise burst from her heart, when news was brought her of some big lad's decision for Christ and consistent conduct.

Nor was she, in caring for others, forgetful of her own children. Almost her last utterance of praise, ere she passed away, was one of thankfulness to God that her four sons and one daughter are all true followers of Jesus, being brought to the Lord in early years, and are all now witnessing for Him and serving Him in various spheres.

During the past winter she has worked with a burning intensity in every branch of the East-end service. As the foundress of the Bible Flower Mission, she rejoiced over the extent to which such work is now carried on, and in the lovely bouquets, with attached texts, carried by devoted ladies to the sick and dying in the hospitals and infirmaries around. Her great desire was to go home in full work, and her prayer has been granted. The aged and the young miss already her sunny smile and words of cheer. Many a soul redeemed by His precious blood will be her crown of rejoicing in that day.

Beloved Mrs. Pennefather writes:—"I can hardly think of the work I have loved for so many years without her, but she has entered into the glorious rest, and how soon we all may follow. It may be the King Himself is on the eve of returning for his waiting people, and how many will go out to meet Him, to whom she has had the privilege of proclaiming the Gospel of Salvation."

One of the Home of Industry helpers writes:—"As a band of workers, we follow her the little while in all her unselfish, devoted love to the Master's aged widows and orphan destitutes."

No grudging! The heart may bleed
When the ties of this earth are riven,
But, oh! 'tis a joy indeed
When our treasure to God is given.
Yea, joy to the Lord of heaven!

A touching memorial service was held on Monday morning in the Children's Home, London-fields. Many sorrowing friends, representing Christian work of many kinds, assembled; but the specially pathetic feature was the large gathering of weeping widows, reminding us strongly of the scene described in Acts ix. 39. A number of factory girls, too, were present; also the children in training for Canada, and some big lads soon to start for the other side.

After a hymn and prayer, Dr. M'Killiam, who conducted the service, read various Scriptures, and spoke of the sympathy of Jesus in sorrow, and of the comfort inspired by the hope of the joyous reunion at his glorious return. Various brethren followed in earnest prayer for the bereaved ones at home and in Canada.

The funeral took place in the East London Cemetery, Ilford, where the dust of the beloved departed was laid to rest in the sure and certain hope of a blessed resurrection. Amongst well-known friends present we observed Messrs. George Holland, B. Broomhall, J. E Mathieson, R. C. Morgan, Robert Scott, Robert Paton, H. A. Maude, C. Dobbin, Henry Varley, John Stabb, and W. R. Lane, several of whom took part in the proceedings.

We feel sure many will pray not only for the bereaved husband and sons, but also for Miss Macpherson, that she, too, may be supported under this heavy loss.

LIVERPOOL CONVENTION.

An esteemed correspondent writes:—We have just closed the fourth of the annual conventions for the deepening of spiritual life (presided over by Mr. Robert Wilson)—one which in power, and we believe also in definite spiritual results, has exceeded any such previous meetings in this city.

For weeks before unceasing prayer had gone up, and the believing expectation of God's people had claimed a season of special blessing. And this the Lord graciously gave in a very remarkable manner. The pledge was realised in the first opening meeting for prayer on the Monday, when over five hundred assembled to intercede for the longed-for "showers." Then day after day, through his own servants, precious truths were unfolded, and carried home in the power of the Holy Ghost. Although the large numbers who gathered together caused an overcrowding of Gordon Hall, yet on each occasion a spirit of calm and holy solemnity so rested upon the meeting that the presence of the Lord was very specially realised.

The need for heart-holiness, and for the manifestation of this in the daily practical life—the power of Christ to cleanse, to keep, and to endue with the Holy Ghost—these were the blessed truths (with singular harmony of thought) upon which the Lord's servants enlarged, and which were applied powerfully to the hearts and consciences of many present. So that when Friday came, and we gathered for praise and testimony, a large number told how the Lord had revealed Himself afresh, how his light had searched heart and life, had discovered and brought down the lurking idols, and had revealed the willingness and power of Christ to occupy alone his own rightful throne-chamber. "And there was great joy in this city."

Friday afternoon and evening were occupied almost entirely with Foreign Missions. The cause of China was pleaded by Mr. Marcus Wood of the C.I.M.); of Persia, by Pastor Jacob and Moressa his wife; of India, by Dr. Morrison; whilst one of the town missionaries, just leaving for the "North Africa Mission," asked earnest prayer for his future sphere.

Very short and simple, but touching testimonies were given at the evening meeting by a number of candidates training for the foreign field in the Liverpool Deaconess House and Missionary Training Institute. An opportunity was also given to any present who were willing to consecrate their life to this work (provided the Lord should call them) to signify this by rising. Many responded, so that we trust this blessed season will bear definite fruit, in calling forth workers for the "regions beyond."

Towards the close of the meeting Dr. C. Harford Battersby sent up a special request for prayer, as he was sailing next morning, Saturday, for the West Coast of Africa. At the close many felt it a privilege to grasp the hand of this devoted servant of Christ, and to bid him God-speed in this his second attempt to reach Central Africa.

The closing words of the Convention were spoken by Rev. C. Inwood. Thus ended a season of special teaching and blessing—not as a pond, to be dried up and forgotten—but as a channel from the fulness of our risen Head, to follow each dear servant of Christ into his or her life-sphere, and there abidingly and continually to be a source of strength and blessing. "And unto Him—who alone is worthy—we would yield all the praise, the power, and the glory for ever.

DR. PENTECOST IN MADRAS.

Dr. Pentecost is with us in Madras. He has been here for a fortnight, and expects to be with us still for a fortnight. To the many Christian friends at home who are praying for India, and who, being especially interested in this Mission, are praying daily for the Divine blessing on his labours, it will be encouraging to know that the Hearer and Answerer of prayer is faithful to his promise. Drops of blessing were early granted to us, gentle showers are beginning to fall, and we are hoping that they will yet be copious and widespread. News of the good results that accompanied Dr. Pentecost's labours in the North of India led many here to desire his presence, and to pray that he might be with us in the "fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ."

As soon as he came, he was able to begin with a good audience. His large tent, which holds between eight hundred and a thousand people, was pitched between Fort St. George and Black Town, on the Esplanade, and it has been always well attended, and generally full to overflowing. In it a service has been held five evenings of the week, and on Sunday afternoons a meeting has been held at 4 p.m., to allow those to attend who cannot come on the week evenings. On Sundays the Doctor has preached in the churches morning and evening.

At the first service in the tent almost three-fourths of the available seats were occupied, but soon the whole tent was well filled before the address began, and latterly people have had to stand outside. The chapels have always been crowded to the door, and the Bible-reading has been well attended. The bulk of the audience consists of the better class of Eurasians, the class that forms the mainstay of the churches here; well-educated and well-to-do Hindoos and Mohammedans; and a very few of the better classes of Europeans have also attended pretty regularly. The seats are almost all occupied before the address begins, and very few leave before the close of the after-meeting. As a friend said to me this morning, "When a person once comes he wishes to return, and he is sorry to lose a meeting." The same people are coming again and again, and when any who have been once cannot come, it is because business prevents them. The people come to hear God's truth. They feel that the Doctor is himself resting firmly on the same foundation-stone of God's revealed Word, and that from this vantage ground he speaks to his audience of the things he knows to be true for himself and all men. He explains, in clear, forcible language, what is meant by such familiar terms as forgiveness, justification, redemption, and illuminates his exposition by apt illustrations. He began his work by a series of addresses on the "Fulness of the Blessing," and laid a good historical foundation for what was to follow.

As one looked on these crowded congregations, and saw the same intelligent people there service after service, and going from one service to another, which they know will be equally long, and as one saw their rapt attention, one was led to the conclusion that the cause of decay of pulpit power, wherever it exists, is not due to the absence of learning or ability, but to the preaching on topics of little interest to any, to the neglect of the truths that God has given, and which He uses to save men from sin and to fit them as the true children of God for the proper work of life. In spite of the heat and distance a thousand people met every day of the week to hear the Gospel of Jesus preached simply and sincerely. The pastors of churches are rejoicing over many that have taken the decisive step, and we rejoice with them.

A Missionary.

FIVE PENNIES.

Acts xx. 35.

A friend of the Highland Orphanage, Inverness, N.B., has written these verses.

Children's service o'er,
Boys and girls are grouping
To the open door;
Can you spare a minute,
Will you kindly wait
Till five sample pennies
Reach the "Orphans' Plate"?

First goes Miss Louisa,
Elbowing along,
For she calls the meeting
Half an hour too long!
In the greatest hurry
Throws her money in,
Laughing when she clinks it—
Penny hers of tin.

Next is Master Edmund
In the sailor suit;
How he shrugs his shoulders,
Stern and resolute!
Listen to the mutter:
"Really horrid this,
I must do like others"—
Iron penny his.

Smiling Fanny follows,
Twinkle in her eye;
Holds her contribution
You can see how high
"People will admire," Thinks she, "when I pass,
Say I'm so unselfish"—
Penny hers of brass.

Then comes sister Nettie,
Stepping close behind,
Sensitive and thoughtful,
Charmingly refined;
Ev'ry tale of sorrow
Nettie's bosom stirs
Eager to show kindness—
Silver penny hers.

Only just another,
Special notice take,
John, the little Christian,
Gives for Jesus' sake:
Much the Saviour loving,
Blood-cleansed from all sin,
'Tis the golden penny
Little John drops in!

Here, then, ends my story,
Now its purpose know;
For our orphan-bairnies
Present funds are low:
Give your golden penny,
Pound, if wealthy, please;
Jesus will accept it
Through "the least of these."

HERO OR COWARD?

It would be a great mistake to think that the names of all the heroes are written in history. There have been many heroic lives which have been humble and unknown, but which deserve the admiration of the world just as much as those that have been more famous. They, perhaps, sometimes deserve our honour more, because those who lived then knew that they should never receive honour from men. After a battle, men celebrate the deeds of the leaders in the fight; but there has been just as much bravery among the privates, whose names are never heard out of their own little circle, and the fortune of the day depended as much upon their courage as upon that of the general in command.

There is one danger in reading these stories of heroic lives. They may sometimes make us feel as if we were also heroes, when, perhaps, there is very little that is heroic in our lives. We think what we would do if some great occasion offered, and it does not occur to us that we are cowards in the little occasions that meet us any day.

A boy, for instance, walks along the streets, thinking of the knights, the story of whose exploits he has been reading. He wishes that he could have lived in those old times, and thinks what a brave knight he would have been, how he would have protected oppressed ladies, and would have fought the cruel and false knights in the face of any odds. As he thinks about all this, he sees a boy tip over the table of a poor apple woman by the sidewalk, and then run away and jeer at her from a distance. Now the boy that was dreaming about the knights-errant, pities the poor woman, and would like to stop and help her pick up her apples, but he does not, for he is afraid that he shall be laughed at. So he passes on, and gives no sign of the pity or anger that he feels. I hope, however, that he does not imagine himself any longer to be a brave knight of the olden time, for he has shown that he is nothing but a coward.

From this it will appear that there are a great many opportunities for heroism in the life of an ordinary man, and even of a boy or girl.—Selected.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

Once a little boy came to a city missionary, and holding out a dirty and well-worn bit of printed paper, said, "Please, sir, father sent me to get a clean paper like that."

Taking it from his hand, the missionary unfolded it, and found it was a page containing that beautiful hymn of which the first stanza is as follows:—

Just as I am, without one plea,
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come!

The missionary looked down with interest into the face earnestly upturned to him, and asked the little boy where he got it, and why he wanted a clean one.

"We found it, sir," said he, "in sister's pocket, after she died; and she used to sing it all the time when she was sick, and loved it so much that father wanted me to get a clean one to put in a frame to hang it up. Will you give us a clean one, sir?"

The little page, with a single hymn on it, had been cast upon the air, like a fallen leaf, by Christian hands, humbly hoping to do some possible good. In some little mission school, probably, this poor little girl had thoughtlessly received it, afterwards to find in it, we hope, the Gospel of her salvation.

MISSION AT RADFORD.

Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has concluded a nine days' Mission at All Souls Church, Radford, near Nottingham. Many were led, by the simplicity and clearness of the Gospel message, to rest upon the Atonement of Christ for salvation, both amongst the senior scholars and adults, members of the congregation, and much regret was felt that, owing to previous engagements, the Mission could not be continued another week. The members of our Scripture Union have been greatly blessed by the Mission, and many new members have been added to the branch.

BIRKENHEAD Y.M.C.A. INSTITUTE AND GYMNASIUM.—The report just issued declares that the new building has in a pre-eminent degree, and in all particulars, answered the ends for which it was reared. It has been the centre of constant activity, has considerably increased in membership, and promises well. Two hundred men assemble every Sunday afternoon for a Gospel service; a Tramway Mission has been started by earnest workers; the Book Club has distributed a fair amount of useful literature; and the various departments of the Association have been maintained with general success. Our present great need, adds the report, is an increased number of honorary subscribers.

"A TRIP TO BABYLAND."

So, writing in the Jubilee year, I entitled an article giving an account of a visit paid to Mrs. Hilton's famous crèche, and the phrase may be used once more, for it not inaptly expresses the impression left on one's mind after a walk through the charming nurseries all alive with happy, well-cared-for babies.

Last Friday I found under Mrs. Hilton's care nearly one hundred little mites, ranging from three weeks to five years old. In the infants' room almost every cot had its tiny inmate, fast asleep or hard at work at the bottle. In the next room, those a little older were perched on baby chairs having their evening meal, and in a few minutes they would be tumbling about in "the pound," and otherwise amusing themselves with the toys supplied by many good friends. On another floor were the seniors—those who can toddle about—

ALL MERRY AND BRIGHT.

Higher up is the infirmary, not, of course, for serious or infectious cases, but for weaklings needing special attention.

These babies, thus nursed and tended, belong to poor mothers compelled to work for their children's bread. Crèches, or day nurseries, thanks to Mrs. Hilton's initiative, are now widely spread, but without such kindly provision how sad the lot of those tiny dots, who in mother's daily absence must be left in the care of a child scarcely older than themselves, or locked up alone in a dull room all day long, or handed over to the care of some woman who lets them mind themselves. Here, for the small sum of 2d. per day, mother may leave her little one, sure it will be tended with scrupulous care, and even this small fee is reduced or remitted in extreme cases. The minutest details necessary to ensure the health and happiness of so many babies are heedfully seen to, while the nurses in charge are carefully selected for their aptitude and gentleness in handling infants. To the poor mothers of the district Mrs. Hilton's crèche is indeed a relief and joy.

THE TWO HOMES.

But, besides the crèche, there is also a Home which has grown out of it. Here I found about forty tiny ones, orphans, the children of poor, struggling widows and widowers. The Home is for girls, but very young boys are admitted, and on reaching four or five are transferred to some suitable home—that is, if they are friendless.

Yet further, at Feltham, there is another Home—the loving gift of a lady friend, and designed for training the older girls for service.

On Monday in last week the twenty-first anniversary of the crèche was held. Special treats were given to the inmates, and many friends assembled to show sympathy. Every department of the institution was reported to be in vigorous working order. It was stated that the attendance at the crèche is at least eighty a day. The Orphanage is full, having forty inmates, while there are seventeen children in the Country Training Home (Feltham). Toys contributed by visitors and friends were given to the little ones. Mrs. Hilton and several members of her family welcomed the visitors and entertained the children.

The one regrettable feature in all this bright and beautiful work is that the burden of financial need rests heavily on the devoted founder and superintendent. Mrs. Hilton, through the death of several loving helpers, closed the year with an adverse balance, and now requires £300 to clear off the deficiency. Surely this burden will not long be suffered to try her—certainly it would not if many friends would but accept her invitation to come and see. The crèche and Home are open for inspection daily from noon to five p.m. (Saturdays till two p.m.). Those who go will find themselves charmed by the dear, bright, wee faces and the many tokens of care and love. Communications should be addressed, Mrs. Hilton, The Crèche, 16, Stepney-causeway, Commercial-road, E.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.—A missionary meeting was held on Tuesday, February 23, when interesting addresses were given by Mrs. Armstrong, from Burmah, and Mr. F. Marcus Wood, from Mid-China. G. H. Judd (Missionary Secretary) reported that £250 was raised by the school last year for mission work. Mr. S. R. Pearce, the Chairman, read a recent note he had received from the late Mr. Spurgeon, in which he said: "The school is always a fruitful field, and it makes one happy to think of the boys and girls praying for me."

Addresses to Business Men

IN GLASGOW.

BY REV. JOHN McNEILL.

I. THE HEALING OF THE BLIND BEGGAR.

A man that is called Jesus made clay and anointed (or smeared) mine eyes and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam and wash; and I went and washed, and I received sight.—John ix. 11.

Here is personal testimony. And after all, seeing that religion is still the great matter of controversy, there is no better contribution to the generation-long discussion than one's own stone upon the cairn. The scientific method is much wanted to-day; it has always been the best method of the Church's apologetic. We simply point to drunkards converted, harlots made chaste, covetous men made liberal, and ask them to give their own testimony. Right there before they have spoken ten sentences every soul of them will utter the name of Jesus as being the be-all and the end-all of whatever mighty change has passed upon them. I say it is high time that in this tremendous controversy, with the battle thickening at all points, the Church should bring to bear her best weapon of personal testimony.

Jesus Christ is the biggest trouble in Glasgow to-day—in business, in commerce, in the home, and everywhere. I want to ask every man of you if you have made a contribution to this question; and if so, has it come along this line of personal testimony? Has Jesus done something for us that at all corresponds to this man's experience? If not, why not?

Notice that the heart of the testimony is Jesus. I do not care who you are; but if you stand up here to-day and tell your biography, and if it does not run out into the name of Jesus, it is not worth listening to. The man who tells his story, or who writes and publishes it, if the centre and circumference of it is not Jesus, whatever little light is in it will soon flicker out into darkness. Every lamp that He has not lit shall sputter out finally into total darkness, and every lamp that He has kindled shall shine like the stars for ever and ever.

Look at this blind beggar. He is a greater man to-day than Alexander. The most that we know about Alexander, I suppose, is what we got in our school books—that he sat down and cried because he had no more worlds to conquer. I hope, for his own sake, that modern criticism will spoil that story, as it has many another. But this blind man is a bigger man to-day than yesterday, and his light will shine more brightly still to-morrow,

BECAUSE JESUS IS ITS CENTRE.

We all want to live, and to make the best of life. We like to be remembered after we are gone, and to be heard tell of again. And so you shall if Jesus Christ gets into the centre of your life. That young fellow down there, who has slipped in here, calls himself of no account. Let him take Jesus into the heart of his life, and he will be heard of yet. My young friend, He will make you a burning and a shining light to his praise and glory. This is not the story of a beggar. No, no. It is the story of a beggar, PLUS JESUS. And that "plus" is the x that will multiply your life to the nth power—if I may remind you of your algebra. Perhaps the formula is about all we know of it by this time. The darkness, the weariness, the insignificance, the misery, the loss of independence—all old things will pass away, and you will walk under new skies, because the Light of Life has come.

As it was with this blind beggar, so it comes to us still. I waken up some day to discover that Jesus and I are contemporary; and every miracle of bodily healing recorded here is for me a parable of spiritual grace. His work in the visible world is but a picture of how He can cure spiritual blindness and lead men out of spiritual beggary and bankruptcy; how He can enable me to do my own day's work; give me my own independence; make my own life, worked out by my own hand, worth living.

How did He do it? He "made clay and anointed mine eyes." I want to say that just as the Lord dealt with that man physically—in a region where you could see Him and follow Him—so He works in the invisible region of faith and spirit. There is a stage at which Christ's work on me may seem rather to add to the darkness, and

MAKE CONFUSION WORSE CONFOUNDED.

To make clay, moisten it with the moisture from his own blessed mouth, and smear that upon a man's eyes—why, that would ruin eyes that see. So there is a stage, paradoxical as it may seem, at which Jesus Christ and his Gospel seem to deepen the darkness in a man's soul.

If any of you are at that stage, lie low; keep close; but do not lose hope or heart. The Gospel requires no exaggeration and no false notes. Do not say you feel something you do not feel. Do not construct a more or less elaborate make-believe that you are something you know you are not. If some of us to-day are natural—and I trust we all will be, for first there is that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual—we will admit that at the stage we have reached Jesus Christ and his Gospel simply thicken the darkness. In the case of many there is no name on the tongues of men more opaque than the name of Jesus; no book darker than the Bible. Do not force yourself to praise the Bible, because it is the correct thing to do; simply tell the truth.

It may be that the Gospel is the most irritating thing you ever listened to. You are simply glowering into the darkness, as you hear it. You can listen to politics, or science, or commercial matters, and can keep wide-awake; but when you come to religion the darkness deepens. The minister is a weariness; but he is not altogether to blame. There is a good deal of preaching, but there is also a deal of mighty poor listening. It is so in the nature of the case. You are on the road to brightness; but I say there is a stage at which the very Gospel seems to thicken the darkness. It is in grace as in nature; it is the old story—

THE DARKEST HOUR BEFORE THE DAWN.

So it is sometimes at the very end; conscience, reason, memory, intelligence—all fading away and flickering at the dying moment, just before the soul is ushered into the blinding blaze, the larger life, the loftier activities of the world to come. So it may be with some of you who are not young. Grey hairs may be upon you. You are a decent man as the world counts it, and you deserve to be so counted. But you may still be at that stage when the Gospel is a puzzle and a torment. Men round about you are saying it is so bright and clear and simple; but if you are honest you will say, "I can make nothing of it." The explanation lies here: the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit, because they are spiritually discerned. The carnal mind is enmity against God; and the very Gospel itself is an irritation at first.

How did the darkness lift? What a philosopher this man was, though he was a blind beggar. When the man called Jesus smeared his eyes with clay he said to himself, "I will wait." He did not see the man who anointed him, but perhaps there was something on the tips of Christ's fingers that made him wonder whether he was not in his Maker's hands. My friend, do not go away, although it may seem foolish to take clay and make an optic nerve out of it. Hold on a bit. Did Christ not take clay one morning, and make a whole man out of it—a whole man, eyes and all? Christ was wonderfully consistent in what He did. The beggar had got back into his Maker's hands.

So with us when our Lord's fingers in the Gospel are working round about our debility and breakdown. Let Him do his work. I am preaching to you salvation and brightness that shall be eternal to heart and mind and feet, through simple faith in Jesus Christ; though the one looks as foolish as the other to the natural understanding. Suppose you never heard the Gospel before, in the brief way that I have stated it, it seems perhaps to your mind to thicken the darkness. How does it save? "Go the pool of Siloam and wash. I went and washed, and I received sight." Practically, salvation from darkness, from ignorance, and from all that it involves—stumbling on into the outer darkness—comes to me along the simple line of obedience. "Jesus Christ is the Author of eternal salvation to them that obey Him." Obedience is just ringing the changes on faith, lest it should get to be commonplace.

> So coin grows smooth in traffic current passed,
> Till Cæsar's image is effaced at last.

God reveals Him in different phrase, "lest one good custom should corrupt the world." Go on; be and do all as for Him and from Him, and this wonderful change will come. This may not explain every conversion, but it will explain some, and that is sufficient. Do not kick or fret. Do not demand that the Lord and the Gospel should suit your whims, caprices, and foregone conclusions. No doctor would listen to you if you should dare to order him or dictate to him how you think your trouble ought to be treated. So with Jesus Christ. You are in a state of desperate darkness, for the Divine operation of his free spirit has not been upon you. Do not say: I think this, that, or the other thing. Lie in his hand as the clay to the potter's wheel. Be obedient. Solvitur ambulando: the thing will be "solved in the going" in many cases.

I see this man going away to wash, and I believe the hardest part of it was in the first two or three steps. There must have been a strong temptation to turn round and stop and say: "Do not add insult to my misery. What kind of quackery is this—after I have been trying to avoid quacks all my days?" But, whatever he felt, he set his teeth and clenched himself hard, and

SET HIMSELF AGOING.

God be praised, I believe I shall get some of you started to-day to go: no longer to argue and fly in the face of preacher and message, and say: "How is that so-and-so?" Nay; go along and say: "God helping me, I will try."

The man started, and at last he got to the pool. I see him stooping down to wash, and as he did so, that clay mixed with the water literally became the "solution" of his difficulty—the lotion for his blindness. As the Apostle says, "The word preached"—that is the clay to human wisdom—"not being mixed with faith in them that heard it," did not profit. The clay was laid on, but they did not go and wash.

I cannot tell how the cure was effected; neither could he. There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in any of the philosophies. The last link in the process was as mysterious as any of the others. The man would say: "I stooped down and washed; I rose up; and, wonder of wonders, for the first time I saw those blue skies, the Temple turrets and towers, the trees, the sweet faces of my fellow men. I came away from the pool saying: God of Abraham, what a world! and I called it a dark and dreary world. Many a day I wished that I were dead, and at the noontide hour I stumbled and groped for the wall. Now, what a world it is! Surely the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun!"

Why do I ask you to come here? Believe me, I would not be guilty of the rudeness of asking business men to come here that I might speak to them about business. You know more about that than I do. But I think I have a message from God that justifies this gathering to-day. There is a world of light, a world of peace, a world of exquisite beauty; and that world beats all round about thee, as the sweet, natural sunlight beats round the darkened eyes of the blind man. Oh, that thou mayst see that world of which Jesus Christ is the Centre and the Sun; so that when you see Him you are already in eternity; you are away from the mist and darkness of time and sense and sin; the curtain has been lifted; "your life is hid with Christ in God."

> Far from the world of grief and sin,
> With God eternally shut in.

You are translated—beautiful expression!—from the kingdom of darkness to the kingdom of God's dear Son.

There is no more to say virtually; the thing now is to do. You are practical business men. I like to meet with practical men. I am wearied with speaking to unpractical people, who listen and go away and do nothing. God be praised, the Gospel will get on to-day. You say business is business. I have got you into my trap beautifully. Fall to now and believe. Be true to your own creed. Believe, obey, and not a few of you will go out of these doors in the light of life.

EASTBOURNE Y.M.C.A.—At the annual meeting of Eastbourne Y.M.C.A. on Wednesday it was reported that the committee had had during the past year many evidences of the great benefit the Association had conferred upon a large number of young men, and many gratifying testimonies had been received from those who had left the town.

REV. R. A. TORREY,

Superintendent of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago.

LONG ago, in his far-reaching and remarkable evangelistic experience, Mr. Moody came to the conclusion that much energy, zeal, and ability was running to waste, or was being utilised to but a limited extent, which, with proper training, might be turned to real service in the spread of the Gospel. Something, he felt, was wanted, which, without interfering with divinity halls and colleges, as due preparation for the regular ministry, might supply that systematic and thorough Biblical instruction, and that training in practical evangelistic methods, so sorely needed by many earnest but inexperienced young men and women. The outcome of careful consideration given to this matter was the establishment of the Bible Institute in Chicago, of which the subject of our present sketch has been for some years the successful superintendent.

R. A. TORREY was born on January 28, 1856, at Hoboken, N.J., his father being a manufacturer in Brooklyn and New York City. From his earliest childhood he was brought up in the fear and nurture of the Lord, being taught to read his Bible and pray daily; a habit, he himself remarks, he maintained even during some later years of wandering and scepticism. His first definite religious impression came from reading a book on which he stumbled, when but a boy, in the lumber-room at home. Reading this book, the question arose: "Will you be a Christian now?" but with that came the thought that if he said "Yes," he would have to be a minister, and, shrinking from such a calling, he said "No," and for some years seemed to be left alone.

At the age of fifteen he entered Yale College, and having no spiritual life, easily fell into the ways of sin, associating with a fast set, and becoming very reckless, even while continuing constant in attendance at church and prayer-meeting, as well the reading of the Bible and daily prayer. In all this he found, of course, no true happiness; and, indeed, confesses that, "during my junior years life became an utter burden, of which I wanted to be relieved, until, in sheer desperation, one night I rose from my bed and told God that if He would give me relief I would preach the Gospel, should He bid me. I found peace at once, but I did not come out openly as a Christian." This open confession he made in the last term of his senior year. Entering Yale Theological Seminary, after four years in the College, he fell away for a time, and professed to be a sceptic, but was brought by the goodness of God out of the darkness of scepticism into the light of life, through the study of Christian evidences and the illumination of God's Holy Spirit. During his last year in the Seminary, he worked for six weeks in the inquiry-room in Mr. Moody's meetings at New Haven, Conn, where he got his first taste of personal work and the joy of winning souls. This experience, he believes, moulded and influenced all his subsequent service.

Graduating in 1878, he entered the Congregational ministry. His first charge was at Garrettsville, where in a year or two God gave much blessing, "in answer," it is believed, "to the prayers of a woman who had been one of the first converts in the place." Anxious further to equip himself for his work, Mr. Torrey resigned his charge in 1882, and pursued studies at Leipsic and Erlangen, under Professors Delitzsch, Luthardt, and Franck. Returning home in the autumn of 1883, he accepted a pastorate at Minneapolis, becoming subsequently superintendent of the City Missionary Society in that town, founding by-and-by an Independent People's Church. During this period he passed through deep spiritual experiences—doubtless the training of God for his future service. Feeling his lack of power, he was led to call upon God, telling Him he could not preach again until fresh-filled with the power of the Spirit, and made to realise that he was bidden "Go, in this thy might." After days of heart-searching and prayer, he believed himself to have received an endowment of power such as he had never known before. When, therefore, a little later, he was called by Mr. Moody to become superintendent of the Bible Institute, he felt the call to be of God, and hesitated not to accept, and entered on the charge in 1889.

Such were the early experiences of and the leadings of the Lord in regard to one who has now become so closely associated with a great and fruitful undertaking, that the remainder of our space must be devoted to the work rather than the worker, to the Institute rather than its superintendent. The large church in Chicago, built for and still under the care of Mr. Moody, has, like the late Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, become a centre of Christian effort in many forms; and just as the Metropolitan Tabernacle has its Pastor's College and Evangelists' Association, so the Chicago Tabernacle has its Bible Institute and Evangelisation Society, both of which, in the first place, carry on much aggressive evangelistic work in the great business centre of the West; and, in the second place, train efficient labourers for similar service in many lands.

The Bible Institute is built immediately behind Mr. Moody's church. This is the "Men's Department," which is under Mr. Torrey's superintendence; but it must not be forgotten that in an adjoining avenue a similar Institute for women is carried on under the care of Mrs. S. B. Capron. This latter is doing valuable service, but at present we must confine our attention to the particular branch under Mr. Torrey's charge. The object is thus defined by Mr. Moody himself:—

> There is a great and increasing demand for men skilled in the knowledge and use of the Word of God, and familiar with aggressive methods of work, to act as pastors' assistants, city missionaries, general missionaries, Sunday-school missionaries, evangelists, and in various other fields of Christian labour, at home and abroad. All over the land are men who would, with a little well-directed study, become most efficient workers in these fields.
> There are also many men called of God into Christian work at too late a period of life to take a regular college and seminary course, but who would, with such an opportunity of study as our Institute affords, be qualified for great usefulness.
> There is a third class: Men who do not intend to devote their entire time to Gospel work, but who desire a larger acquaintance with the Bible and methods of Christian effort, that while pursuing their secular callings they may also work, intelligently and successfully, in winning men to Christ. The object of our Institute is to meet the needs of these several classes.

The present extent of the work of the Institute and its satisfactory results were shown in our last issue in the course of a review of the report for the past year. Hence, without recapitulating these, we may best illustrate the modus operandi by giving an extract from an able article penned by Rev. John Smith, M.A., of Edinburgh, who lately visited the Institute, and for three weeks gave expository lectures on the Epistle to the Galatians. He says:—

> The superintendent of the men's department, Rev. R. A. Torrey, has proved very successful. By direct exposition, by analysis of the dogmatic contents of passages exegetically studied, he contrives, in a somewhat popular but very thorough fashion, to give the students a clear comprehension, and a real mastery, for teaching purposes, of Holy Scripture. Indeed, while valuing very highly, and regarding as indispensable the more minute examination of the text in Greek exegesis, one often wished that in our theological halls students were carried into the heart of the Epistles, and were enabled to master their theological contents through some such rapid but careful system of exposition and analysis. He also gives them a thorough course of instruction inconduct of meetings, dealing with inquirers, and all matters entering into aggressive Christian work.

Associated with the superintendent are many leading ministers and well-known professors, who come into residence for a month or so, and supplement by expository or theological lectures his more detailed and systematic instructions. Through this arrangement the students are brought into contact with scientific teachers, and also with some of the most forceful personalities in the American religious world.

A little farther on, in the article referred to, Mr. Smith, dealing with the practical and prayerful spirit animating the whole, says:—

The whole scope of the instruction was designed directly to train and furnish for practical and aggressive Christian work. Those only were admitted who had given some evidence of burning zeal and devotion; and every effort was made, while imparting the necessary training, to maintain great warmth of spiritual life. All the students resided in the institution, under the eye of the superintendents, and much time was given to prayer. Throughout the city, too, in the more sunken and degraded parts, were mission-halls and tents, to which the students went night by night under the guidance of skilled evangelists. Here they took part in singing, in dealing with inquirers, and now and again in speaking. A more magnificent training than this hand to hand fight with the devil in his chief seats one could not conceive. The men came back sometimes flushed with conquest, on other occasions baffled and in agony of need. Their common talk was of notable cases—of some notorious thief humbled at the foot of the cross—of work among characters where the bowie-knife and the revolver were as common as swearing or drink. We met after supper (corresponding to our tea), like a regiment before going into action, to lay the whole matter before God, and I shall never forget their brief, burning, and pointed prayers. God was being counted on, there and then, to stand by them, and so they went to the fight.

Nor, on the students leaving the Institute, does all concern in them cease. From time to time forms are sent out, which they are requested to fill up, in order that their whole service may be followed with prayer and sympathy. These returns reveal much of genuine interest. Here is one from S. A. B., a young man who entered the Institute "a green labourer from a lumber-camp," and who, after sixteen months' training, went on to become a "Sabbath-school organiser," a type of effort peculiar to America, but virtually that of a pioneer evangelist in territories freshly settled and not occupied by the churches. S. A. B. appears to have been much used of God, and has developed a remarkable ability for dealing with drinking men. Next we have a return from J. L., a young Englishman, who, after thirteen months in the Institute, is being used of God at Deadwood, in the Black Hills, South Dakota. Another, W. B. W., had been in a theological seminary, and after being licensed entered the Institute, to gain a knowledge of practical methods. He writes: "My stay in the Institute has been an untold benefit to me." He is now being much blessed in South Carolina.

So might we give many instances of labourers in the States and in the foreign field, but these must suffice to indicate the value of the training received in the Institute.

The course of study is described under eight heads: 1, Biblical introduction (inspiration and authority); 2, exegetical study; 3, typology and prophecy; 4, doctrine; 5, in reference to practical use; 6, methods of exposition in Bible readings, &c.; 7, methods of work; 8, music. The whole course covers two years, but is so arranged that those who come for shorter periods find their need met.

This combination of constant and devout Bible study with prayer and effort weeds out the unfit men, while those really called of God are developed and strengthened. As Rev. John Smith remarks: "The interests, sympathies, and aspirations are all centred in the cross. This whole-absorption in the work of winning souls for God gave to our studies of Scripture a vivid reality such as I scarcely ever experienced."

A PASTOR TO HIS PEOPLE.

Rev. Dr. Bullinger, in a pastoral letter to the congregation of Brunswick Chapel, Upper Berkeley-street, W., says:—

It may be well, in this first pastoral letter, to let you know something of the principles which govern me, and which will animate me in my ministry for you. I desire to glorify God, and to work for eternity: to be guided by what God commands, rather than what people demand. Hence my object is to foster spiritual worship, and to preach Christ as a crucified, risen, ascended, and coming Saviour and Lord. Hence such changes as I have made in our service have all been backward towards the Reformation.

At my ordination I was commissioned to feed the flock of God. I was not appointed to be a provider of "entertainments" for the world, but I was exhorted in the name of Christ to have in remembrance the office and charge to which I am called, "that is to say, to be messengers, watchmen, and stewards of the Lord, to teach and to premonish, to feed and provide for the Lord's family; to seek for Christ's sheep that are dispersed abroad, and for his children who are in the midst of this naughty world (i.e., this world of naught), that they may be saved through Christ for ever (See the Bishop's Charge in the Ordination Service)." Further, the difficulty of this work was impressed upon me, and I was assured that I could not "by any other means compass the doing of so weighty a work, pertaining to the salvation of man, but with doctrine and exhortation taken out of the Holy Scriptures." Further, I was exhorted: "forsake and set aside (as much as you may) all worldly cares and studies," and "apply yourself wholly to this one thing, and draw all your cares and studies this way."

Now I desire to profess my full confidence in God's Word, as the only means by which God's work is to be done. I believe that it is still "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. i. 16): that it is still "able to make wise unto salvation" (2 Tim. iii. 15): that "it shall accomplish that which Jehovah pleases and prosper in the thing whereto He has sent it" (Isa. lv. 11). I am not tempted, therefore, to adopt any of the modern methods of the nineteenth century, which all proceed on the implied assumption that the Word of God has grown weak, and has lost its ancient power.

No! "I believe in the Holy Ghost." I have no apologies to make for the truth of his word, and I have no commission to treat with its enemies, I am charged to "preach the Word"; and bidden to have faith in its power, while forewarned that "the time will come when men will not endure sound doctrine" (2 Tim. iv. 2, 3). It is not my business, therefore, to study the tastes of such by what are called "attractive services," which mean that the music is to get longer and longer, and the sermons shorter and shorter, because the time has come when men will not endure sound doctrine.

Many of God's children are led away and deceived with the fallacy that, what we may lawfully enjoy in our homes we may suitably transfer to our churches. It is a fallacy. For in the church at Corinth there were those who acted on this principle. Food is God's gift, and eating and drinking are of God's ordinance. He has also ordained that at his table we are to eat bread and drink wine in remembrance of our Saviour's death for us. But these saints ate and drank as they did at home, and the Holy Spirit by the Apostle rebuked them, "What? have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or, despise ye the Church of God? Shall I praise you in this? I praise you not" (1 Cor. xi. 22). This same principle applies to all the so-called "Bright services" with their music and decorations and other attractions. Have ye not houses to decorate? Have ye not houses to enjoy music in? or, do ye despise the church of God by introducing such things there? The only music that goes beyond the roof of the church and reaches heaven is that of converted people "singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." All other music in his house is an abomination unto Him. "If any man hunger (for such things) let him eat at home."

They that worship God "must worship Him in spirit and in truth" (John iv. 24). There is no choice in the matter. We have no liberty to prefer this or that service: the word of this great rubrick is "MUST." This "must" of John iv. 24 is the same word as John iii. 7, "Ye must be born again"; and of John iii. 14, "Even so must the Son of Man be lifted up." As the death of Christ was necessary for the salvation of the sinner, and the new birth is necessary for the gift of eternal life, so spiritual worship is as absolutely necessary for the support of that life, and for the true expression of it.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

The following letter has been issued by Rev. James A. Spurgeon:—

Dear Friends,—At the unanimous desire of all my dear brother's (the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's) church officers, I have agreed to continue the discharge of the leadership vacated by his removal from us, until the will of the Lord in the whole matter shall be more fully revealed to us, alike as to the future of the Church at the Tabernacle, and of the varied agencies now connected with it.

The past years of his life have been so much broken with long periods of pain and affliction that, under his direction, the whole area of his work, save the pulpit duties, has been otherwise provided for under my supervision. By God's good providence the staff of helpers is ample and efficient, and if we can command the continued confidence and support of his many long-tried friends, we can carry on all his varied works without any change, save that involved in the inevitable loss of that inspiration which his name and presence ever afforded to us all.

It is in calm reliance upon God's promised power, and in obedience to what I believe to be his Divine Will, that I assume for the present the conduct of this great and to me familiar work, though now, alas! as to the leadership, it will be no more unitedly with him.

The gracious Master, whom in all this I wish alone to honour, greatly comforts me with the prayers and aid of a goodly band of brothers in the faith, who have stood by our side many years, and who now promise to remain and share with me the heat and burden of the day, till our Lord's will in all matters shall be made clear.

My heart is and will remain at rest as to the preaching of the Word in our midst, while my true colleague, Dr. A. T. Pierson, continues to carry that load for us with so much satisfaction to us all.

May I not confidently rely in this time of need upon the continued generous support of all who have helped hitherto, and also of many others, who will step in to take the places of many who have of late fallen asleep, and whose kind gifts we shall sadly miss in the future?

May God richly bless and carry on his own work, here and everywhere, prays,—Yours to serve in Gospel Bonds, Jas. A. Spurgeon.

LIVERPOOL.—The Liverpool Mission (Wesleyan) is still, according to its new report, thriving, and maintaining its debtless reputation. With seven missions to support, six of them being important halls, as well as the Lads' Home, and the work lying mainly among conditions more unfriendly than can be found in any other town in England—London not excepted—the marvel is that the work should be done so successfully and at such small cost. £2,237 is the outlay for the year, and the subscriptions rather more than cover the expenditure. The report gives some striking facts illustrating the extreme difficulties which the Mission has to face. The population is by no means English. People of all nations are in its streets. It is the English stronghold of Popery. The drink traffic is a mightier power than anywhere else. Multitudes are steeped in ignorance, crime, and barbarism. Nothing in Whitechapel, Manchester, Birmingham, or Leeds equals the sin and misery of the worst parts of Liverpool. Moreover, it must be remembered that Mr. Garrett and his devoted helpers are wrestling with the worst of Liverpool degradation. Yet, amidst all this, a very real work is being accomplished.

The Revival in Scotland.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

GRANTOWN-ON-SPEY.

Public attention is, of course, chiefly concentrated on the great meetings held by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, which have the advantage of being fully reported day by day in The Scottish Leader. But one of the most remarkable visitations of reviving and converting grace that has marked the past months has been that at the pretty little country-town of Grantown-on-Spey, in Inverness-shire. Passing reference to the work there was made in a recent issue, but the story deserves a fuller recital. It is one that ought to give heart and hope to all true evangelists, and also to all consecrated workers who are earnestly seeking to build against their own houses, without much encouragement or help, it may be, from fellow Christians near at hand.

Some of the good folks at Grantown were very anxious to have a visit from the American evangelists in December, but it was found impracticable to arrange for that, in view of other engagements entered into. There was disappointment, of course, but the failure only threw the local friends more unreservedly on God, who can work by whom He will. It is only stating a patent fact to say that one of the most zealous Christians in the town is Mr. Grant, a leading business man in the drapery line. His brother, Rev. Mr. Grant, of the Free Church, Helmsdale, who was paying a short New Year's visit to Grantown, was induced to hold some Gospel meetings. The snowstorm that came at that time prolonged his stay for several days, and these were well utilised. No striking results were seen at the time, though it has since transpired that some decided for Christ at those first services.

A committee was formed to continue the special effort, and flying visits followed from Rev. A. Lee, Nairn; Rev. Mr. Lister, Dundee; Rev. Mr. Martin, Stornoway; and Rev. Mr. Paterson, Edinburgh. The work had thus gone on for three weeks, with much evident interest in the matter of attendance, but with little sign of breaking down or definite conversions. It was then resolved to seek the co-operation of Rev. J. J. Mackay, of Free Trinity Church, Glasgow, one of the most living evangelistic preachers that Scotland possesses today. He superintends a large and successfully aggressive work in his own district, and, of course, there are many calls on him from other places to "come over and help." He was able to arrange for a four-days' visit to Grantown, and entered on the work in the assured confidence that God was about to manifest his saving power. Indeed, the Spirit of God had already been moving deeply in the hearts of the people, but and prejudice against open profession of salvation, had not been broken.

Avoiding minute detail as to what followed, it may be said that for the first two nights there was shown a wonderful spirit of hearing; the people would patiently sit through two consecutive addresses, but they still kept their resolves and councils locked up in their breasts. One evening the preacher took the unusual step of asking those who were Christians to manifest it by rising. Some of those present professed to be very angry at this, and declared they would not go to any more of the meetings. But some were like the son in the parable who changed his mind and went. Indeed, this was done at the cost of absenting themselves from a public ball, which they had previously agreed to attend. Though no one had yet openly declared for Christ, Mr. Grant, the business man, had encountered and spoken with several young men in the dark street, and had discovered that they were seeking the Lord, Nicodemus fashion.

It so fell out that the next evening Mr. Mackay, at the close of his address, went down among the audience, and, without knowing it, but clearly guided of God, found himself speaking to some of those very young men who had been spoken with the night before. He asked the general congregation to retire and the young men only to remain. A dozen stayed, and before the little company broke up nine out of the twelve had stepped "over the line" of definite decision. The workers had been on the stretch for three and a-half hours without a break, but they went home with thankful hearts.

THE ICE WAS NOW BROKEN, and next night, which was the Saturday, there were further decisions at the after meeting. The specified time for Mr. Mackay's visit had now almost concluded, and he purposed to return and fulfil Glasgow engagements on the Monday. Just then came the sudden thaw, and the floods in the River Spey that washed away part of the railway and blocked all traffic for several days. The evangelist was storm-staid; and surely the hand of God was in that—turning a seeming evil into a certain good.

What remains to tell must be very briefly stated. The Sabbath was a very busy day for the preacher and the other workers. In the evening the hall was crammed with a congregation of some five hundred persons—a third of the entire population of the town. It is computed that at that service as many as forty made the great decision; many of them having done so during the address and without any other human intervention. On Monday night there were more accessions to the ranks of the open confessors. The whole place was now thoroughly stirred; the revival was the theme of talk at railway stations, at the doors of the public-house, and everywhere. The fact that there were opposers, and that some of the converts had to bear the brunt of ridicule, only showed the reality of the movement. Tuesday night saw more in-gathering, and on the Wednesday night the same test was put as that which had roused such searchings of heart six nights before—the professors of Christ were asked to "stand up for Jesus." The contrast in the response may be faintly imagined. The Highland reticence was fully broken down, and the people seemed glad of the opportunity to declare themselves. Before Mr. Mackay was able to leave for Glasgow the list of converts had greatly swollen (like the Spey), and numbered between eighty and ninety In many cases there was no mistake about the change. Young men politely but manfully cancelled engagements, made before conversion, to attend balls, and did not scruple to give their reasons. Mr. Paterson, of Edinburgh, was on the scene again for one evening after Mr. Mackay had gone. For the present the special meetings have ceased, but means are being taken to consolidate the work and keep the converts true to their profession. The local Y.M.C.A. has been reorganised, with a large accession to its membership; and a Y.W.C.A. has been started, in addition to a weekly fellowship meeting for all the young Christians. At a social thanksgiving service recently held there were close on a hundred converts present, and some thirty older Christian friends. All the three pastors of the place were present and spoke.

Some exceedingly interesting facts could be told; but, perhaps, it is wiser not to be too specific. It may be said, however, that Mr. Grant has a large number of persons in his employ in one capacity or another, and many of these are among the converts; so that he, at any rate, has had a full reward for his devoted labours in the movement. Country relatives of converted residents have been invited to visit the town, and have come within the circle of blessing. In one case, a young lady, living in a distant city, hearing that so many of her former companions in Grantown had become disciples of Christ, wrote to her parents there, and gave them the joyful news that she, too, had cast in her lot with the company of believing souls. Surely every reader of these lines will praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful working among the folks at Grantown.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

The attention that the labours of these two friends have received in our columns during recent weeks has not been commensurate with their deserts; but a reporter suffers from the same disability as everybody else in not being able to be in two places at the same time. A friend in Glasgow has supplied the following interesting particulars with respect to Mr. McNeill's visits to Aberdeen and Stirling shires:—

"Many of Mr. McNeill's friends thought that he made a grave mistake when he resigned his charge in Regent-square in London. But those who have had the privilege of following his work in Scotland will thank God for setting free such a man to awaken the conscience of many sinners, and lead them to the Saviour.

"Mr. McNeill's work has been deep and real, and very much fruit has been gathered as the result of his faithful preaching. His three weeks' mission in Aberdeen was blessed in a most remarkable way; and one of the best testimonies that we could have was the sharp criticism that was passed upon his work by the secular press. Those who are interested in the Lord's work there have acknowledged that the "Granite City" has never before been so moved. Christian workers are still coming across many interesting cases of conversion under the preaching of our friend. After a few days' rest Mr. McNeill had a week's mission in Stirling. The large Albert Hall was well filled in the afternoon, and crowded every night. It was the privilege of the writer to visit Stirling on Sabbath, February 14, and he saw unmistakable signs of times of blessing. At the after meeting, held in connection with the Railway Mission evangelistic services, 160 young men remained, and thirty-three in that company testified to blessing received during the services of Mr. McNeill and Messrs. Moody and Sankey; and from what we could hear we understand that scores of others have been savingly converted.

"One of the striking features of the preacher's power is the wonderful way in which the Spirit owns the message as it is being spoken. Many of the conversions that take place happen while the address is being delivered, and we feel sure that the Lord is using his servant. We request Christians to remember our brother in prayer, and to ask that he may be anointed with the Holy Spirit for this great and important work in Scotland."

THE GREENOCK MEETINGS.

Not so many years ago Mr. McNeill was an unknown item in the Greenock community, acting as booking clerk at one of its railway stations. To day he is probably the best-known man in the place; judging from the vast throngs that have been crowding, night by night, to hear his addresses in the splendid Public Hall, he has certainly been the great centre of attraction these past two weeks. His elevation to public fame has been wonderfully rapid, but the abundant entrance he has received into the hearts of Scotch and English communities has been fairly won, and God ought to be praised that this man's natural endowments have been consecrated to such noble ends. Mr. Moody, at any rate, is far-sighted enough to recognise the unique qualifications of his Scotch brother, and he deserves the hearty thanks of the entire Christian world for the share he has had in setting Mr. McNeill free for the work in which he is now so busily engaged.

The hall in Greenock in which Mr. McNeill and Mr. Burke have been evangelising for the past two weeks is a magnificent structure, with two galleries, and a seating capacity of some 2500. The afternoon meetings have grown in attendance, interest, and power, and for the closing days there were very large concourses, mostly of the well-to-do section of society. To these the preacher has addressed himself right earnestly, dividing the word of truth with a master hand and an outspoken, faithful tongue. On Thursday afternoon, when our correspondent was privileged to be present, the subject of address was as described in the inspired record thus:—"David said in his heart, I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul: there is nothing better for me than that I should escape into the land of the Philistines; and Saul shall despair of me, to seek me any more in all the borders of Israel; so shall I escape out of his hand" (1 Sam. xxvii. 1). A better spiritual tonic than this discourse of Mr. McNeill's it would be very hard to find outside the pages of Scripture, and we would strongly commend any timid, discouraged, despairing souls, whose hearts are failing within them by reason of the seeming difficulties of their life's pathway, to get this sermon in its published form.* If it were not thus easily accessible we should furnish notes of it; but our available space is taken up with other utterances of Mr. McNeill's. To speak at these afternoon meetings Mr. McNeill has had to hurry straight away by train from his talks with the Glasgow business men. It must be a heavy strain on him, and we trust he will not unduly tax his physical and mental strength, superabundant though it be.

The great Greenock hall on Thursday evening afforded a truly inspiring sight. Seats and standing room were packed with a crowd that comprised all sorts and conditions of people in the town. Mr. J. H. Burke, who has been singing the Gospel in conjunction with Mr. McNeill since his arrival, early in the year, from America, is meeting with great public acceptance in that line of service. On this occasion he sang with great feeling and power a most pathetic Gospel invitation entitled "Welcome, wanderer, welcome." One might almost have "heard a pin fall," as the saying goes, while the sweet singer's notes, now rising and now falling with appropriate cadence, rang clearly through the lofty auditorium, and the pleading invitation was sounded to the prodigal to "Come home; come home." No. 4 in "New Hymns and Solos"—"The Land Afar"—was also beautifully sung as a quartette. In giving out a congregational hymn Mr. McNeill said: "Duets and quartettes are all very well, but I like to have a hand in it myself"; need it be said that he and everybody else sang with a will. These Gospel songs are doing far more good than most people imagine. They get into the minds and memories—we trust also into the hearts—of the common people, and continue to witness for God and his truth long after the special workers have vanished from the scene.

Mr. McNeill's address on Thursday evening was on the choosing of David as King in place of Saul. The story is one that freely admits of dramatic treatment, and the great gathering was held captive while the preacher passed in review the successive incidents in the old-world narrative, and gave them a very telling

PRESENT-DAY APPLICATION.

His sanctified humour had full play when he described the high looks and swelling pride of Eliab, the eldest son of Jesse, with whose fine outward appearance Samuel was so fascinated that he had almost poured on him the anointing oil; and again, as he portrayed the careless indifference of the rest of the seven, whose chances of the kingdom were lost because they did not deem themselves worthy of such a privilege, and were quite contented to jog along at the plough tail all their days. The choosing of the modest and goodly shepherd youth, David, and his ready acceptance of the high distinction, were made the texts for a most powerful Gospel appeal, in which the glories of eternal salvation and Divine worship were set forth as something to be coveted and accepted far before any mere earthly possession or honour. There was a very large second meeting, which Mr. McNeill conducted with great skill and tenderness. A perfect stream of personal requests for blessing on unconverted and other relatives came from the hearts and lips of those present, and a goodly number also indicated anxiety of soul; with these latter the workers, of whom there is a fine band in Greenock, dealt personally for a considerable time. Mr. McNeill's special mission in Greenock closed on Friday, and on Sabbath Mr. J. Scroggie was the preacher. He had a crowded audience in the Town Hall in the evening, and much blessing. One deeply interesting fact is that during Mr. McNeill's mission over thirty of the men working in one mill in the town have professed conversion. Messrs. McNeill and Burke are following up this week at Paisley, where they have the fine George-Clark Hall for the meetings.

MR. McNEILL IN GLASGOW.

The mid-day addresses to Glasgow business men were continued each day during the past week, and they have proved eminently successful. On the third day the audience fairly overflowed the Merchants' Hall, and the meeting was adjourned to St. George's Established Church in Buchanan-street, close by. This fine, but somewhat dingy, edifice was crowded — passages, pulpit-stairs, and all—for the rest of the week, not less, we should say, than a thousand men being in attendance every day. The auditors were by no means confined to commercials, pure and simple; for there were to be seen many types of "business men"—from the venerable minister to the roughly-clad artisan.

The preacher seemed quite at home among his brethren, and very skilfully adapted himself to the peculiar circumstances. Without any constraint or restraint his soulful utterances came thick and fast—tender appeal, courageous statement of doctrinal truth and playful humour being very happily mixed. The hearers were quite for they frequently broke into applause—not, be it observed, at any of the speaker's declamatory periods, but when he had, in his own genial and decided way, given form and shape to the foundation truths of the Gospel and the glorious experiences of the true Christian life. To see such a sight in the heart of one of the busiest cities in the world, in the middle of a working day, and in an age of fierce commercial competition, was no ordinary treat. One could not help reflecting sadly on the short-sightedness of our Presbyterian friends in London in not providing Mr. McNeill with a similar opportunity somewhere close to the Royal Exchange, when he was a dweller and a worker in the Great City. Perhaps it was better so; if London had been sufficiently wide awake it might have retained for itself a man whom God has most plainly baptized for a world-wide mission. These mid-day meetings are to be continued this week in Glasgow, in response to an acclamatory vote given on Thursday. The meeting of Monday was very large, and the address was a beautifully-simple and pathetic Gospel appeal. There must have been close on a hundred ministers in the congregation.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

As their Scottish mission begins to draw near its close these two brethren seem to get more intense in aim and unresting in movement than ever. When one thinks of the frailties incident to all human life, and the trying conditions of their work at this severe and changeful season of the Northern year, their continued bodily health and elasticity of spirit become marvellous. Of a truth God is having them in his holy keeping.

Our report last week found them in the somewhat unlovely but populous suburban centre of Coatbridge, preaching and singing the Gospel to crowds who flocked to hear, despite the snow blizzard of Sunday, February 21. Before the week closed the evangelists had visited the sister town of Airdrie and the four villages of Strathaven, Stonehouse, Lesmahagow, and Larkhall. Without entering on minute details of the meetings, it may be said generally that the story to be told in each case is virtually the same—ministers of the different denominations rallying around the chief workers, and helping them by prayer and effort; the largest available buildings crowded out, and goodly overflow gatherings to boot; rapt attention to the heartfelt song of the one evangelist, and the cyclonic, burning, soul-stirring, sinner-awakening utterances of the other; the manifest working of God the Holy Ghost in the minds and consciences of believers and unbelievers; great searchings of heart among the Christians through Mr. Moody's vehement indictment of the doings of the whiskey-fiend, and his plain-spoken impeachment of the Christian Church for its connivance at the "infernal traffic"; stricken souls anxiously seeking the way to God, or back to the One from whom they had backslidden in heart and life; not a few making the great decision and receiving the gift of eternal life. This last is a statement not to be made lightly, or at random—and one can but judge from appearances; if these are to be trusted, the good old Gospel of full redemption through faith in the finished work of the Saviour Christ is as much as ever in Scotland the power of God unto salvation. It is no flash-in-the-pan affair. One fact may be taken as a sample of many similar facts. On Saturday evening Mr. Moody, by chance as we say, encountered a young minister at a Glasgow railway-station, as he was about to start for a fresh field of effort on the Sabbath. This young man was converted through the instrumentality of the evangelist in 1874; as a divinity student he got a lift from Mr. Moody's visit of 1882; now he is an active, earnest worker among the Glasgow masses, and full of thankfulness at having the first opportunity of grasping the hand of the man, who, under God, turned his feet, eighteen years ago, into the narrow way that will land him one day in life eternal, with the souls that God has given him. Such a fact is sufficient in itself to keep the hearts of our American friends full of song; and it is but one of many.

SCOTLAND'S GREAT CURSE,

the whisky bottle, has received no quarter from Mr. Moody for the past three months, as these columns have amply testified. Of late the evangelist has seemed to outdo himself in the strength and frequency of his assaults on this giant evil that stalks up and down the land, defying God and man and slaying its ten thousands year by year. The point of Mr. Moody's later references has been the extent to which the so-called Church of Christ has made itself responsible for the continuance and even the growth of such a social and national plague-spot. His contention is that the churches have the disposal of the matter in their own hands, and, therefore, they must bear the heavy responsibility. So long as the makers and the retailers, not to say the consumers of this demon alcohol, get the stamp of respectability and of Christianity put upon them by admission to the membership of the churches, so long will the ghastly farce of attempting to serve God with one hand and the devil with the other go on. How comes it that while in certain sections of society temperance sentiment has made rapid strides these last ten years, the great masses of the population in cities like Glasgow, and in the thickly-peopled suburbs—such as Coatbridge and Airdrie—are becoming more and more the degraded and helpless slaves of the drink? Is it not high time that Scottish churches of every name should with one consent cry truce to their internal squabbles and fall at the feet of God, calling for grace and strength to rid their country of this deadly incubus? One of the most active and best-informed Glasgow ministers has given it as his solid conviction that some thirty thousand men or women go to bed drunk in Glasgow every Saturday night. In view of such a state of things, the new moons and even solemn assemblies of the Churches must be an abomination to God, as was said by the prophet of old time. Mr. Moody, at any rate, has effectually cleared the skirts of his garments from all responsibility for this accursed Achan in the Christian camp; it remains to be seen whether his fellow-Christians in Scotland will hear his message to any purpose. If they do not, there will be a fearful score of reckoning to pay one day.

THE FOLLOWING-UP

continues to be actively maintained. Mr. J. M. Scroggie remained at Coatbridge for two nights, while Messrs. Moody and Sankey were at the adjacent town of Airdrie. Mr. Sankey bore an added burden of labour by driving over to Mr. Scroggie's meetings each night after he had sung and spoken at the central service and the overflow in Airdrie.

The Coatbridge meetings were encouraging in attendance and in result. It is manifestly a difficult task to follow up, in any place, the work of our American brethren, and those who essay to do it are much to be commended for their disinterested courage. This week Mr. Scroggie succeeds Mr. McNeill at Greenock. Mr. Morton Smith, after a brief respite from activity, is busy this week at Wishaw. The close of his recent labours in Kirkcaldy showed a very considerable muster-roll of professed conversions. Mr. Smith is a well-equipped and vigorous worker, and God is everywhere owning his testimony and his teaching.

Rev. Sholto Douglas, who kindly entertained Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey at his country mansion during the Coatbridge and Airdrie missions, did good service in the conduct of overflows, and also in personal dealing with the inquirers. On the last evening of the Airdrie visit the large overflow meeting in Flowerhill parish church was taken in hand by Rev. J. J. Mackay, of Glasgow. He preached powerfully to believer, backslider, and the unsaved, from the familiar text: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," &c. His appeals and forceful illustrations produced a deep impression, and there was a very good after-meeting. At the same hour Mr. Moody was delivering his final message to the people of Airdrie in the public hall, and a very memorable occasion it was.

Friday's work was noteworthy for the meetings held forenoon, afternoon, and evening in the large Established Churches at Stonehouse, Lesmahagow, and Larkhall.

LENZIE AND KIRKINTILLOCH, residential suburbs of northern Glasgow, were privileged with the ministrations of the evangelists on Sabbath. The forenoon meeting in the Free Church, Lenzie, was a very large one. In the afternoon the crowd overflowed Free St. David's, Kirkintilloch, into the Temperance Hall, where Mr. Sankey spoke as well as sang. At night the two Established Churches in Kirkintilloch were crowded out. The building which accommodated the overflow is said to be one of the oldest buildings in the district, and did duty about six centuries ago as a Romish place of worship. It is cruciform in shape, and has some dozen doors or more; telling of days when privileged persons had their private entrance, and did not care to rub shoulders with the vulgar crowd. It is said that an evangelistic service has not been held within these ancient walls for three hundred years at least. On Sabbath, at any rate, they resounded with the music of the Gospel story as sung and spoken by Mr. Sankey and spoken by Mr. Telfer, a Glasgow F.C. minister. Quite a number of requests for prayer were presented, and there was a deep spiritual impression throughout.

On Monday the evangelists held meetings at Kilsyth (a place fragrant with memories of Wm. Burns and of revival seasons) and Campsie, a favourite summer resort of the Glasgowegians.

In last week's report a printer's blunder made it appear that Mr. Sankey, during previous visits to this country, had received word of the death of "mother, sister, and father;" it should have been of "another sister and of his father." His mother, we rejoice to say, is still alive and a hale-hearted old lady.

Referring to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's recent visit to Hamilton, N.B., a correspondent writes:—"Mr. Moody felt Hamilton was ripe for blessing, and it proved itself to be so. There were never such meetings held in Hamilton as when he was here. A third place had to be opened on the same evening for overflow meetings. Between the Victoria Hall, Free St. John's Church, and the Town Hall, over three thousand people were assembled. Since Messrs. Moody and Sankey left, we have had Mr. J. M. Scroggie for a week, and notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather the meetings were well attended. They were brought to a close on Sunday week, when the Victoria Hall, the largest hall in Hamilton, was crowded. During the mission here not a few have entered into peace, through faith in the sacrifice of the Man Christ Jesus.

EPIGRAM FOR THE TIMES.

What next? Shall I give up my creed,
Because some man has writ a screed
Of doubt and scientific fiction?
Never! but firm, so help me God,
I'll tread where burning martyrs trod,
Till God give God the contradiction.

Charles A. Fox.

PAST, PRESENT, FUTURE.

"Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver, in whom we trust that He will yet deliver us."

Past grace, that brought salvation,
Past love, that cheered the way,
Past strength, for all the burdens,
Past songs, for every day.

Present—a Father's blessing,
Present—a Saviour blest,
Present—a Spirit's guiding,
Present—a perfect rest.

Future—a clearer knowledge,
Future—a brighter way,
Future—far sweeter service,
Future—the "perfect day."

Till then—the "patient waiting,"
Till then—a life of praise,
Till then—a glad surrender
To God of all my days.

MR. HERMAN G. HARRIS left on Thursday last for Tripoli, with two more workers for the Central Soudan Mission around Lake Tchad—a region long closed to the Gospel. In February of last year Messrs. Harris and White landed at Tunis, where two months were spent, learning something of Arabic. Then came a tour on foot of 200 miles to the south, to Gabes. From Gabes they went to Tripoli, to continue the study of Arabic. A good many portions of Scripture have been distributed by them among the Arabs both in the province of Tunis and at Tripoli. In September they were on the point of starting for Murzuk, when the news reached Mr. Harris of his father's sudden death, and he felt it his duty to return home for a time. In November Mr. Harris returned to Mr. White at Tripoli, but, before leaving England, appealed for volunteers for the Central Soudan. Various meetings were held, several young men offered themselves, and five were accepted, making up a party of seven endeavouring to penetrate the Tchad region from the north. Prayer is earnestly asked for these pioneers of the Gospel.

University Notes.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

The new President of Queen's College is Dr. Campion. He has been tutor of the college for nearly forty years, and since 1862 rector of St. Botolph's Church. In 1870 he was appointed Rural Dean of Cambridge. His election has given great satisfaction both at the college and elsewhere.

At the University Church Missionary Union, on Monday (23rd), Rev. E. C. Gordon, of Uganda, gave a most interesting account of the work going on there. He first entered into the details of the life of the people and the various classes in the State, and then traced the work of the Mission to the present time.

In the University sermon, on February 22, the preacher spoke from Eph. iii. 20, and in the course of his remarks spoke of the attention that has increasingly of late years been drawn to the person of Jesus Christ. "Men and women to-day want to hear about Jesus Christ, and will listen with very grateful attention to any who will speak to them simply and naturally of Him."

At the Alexandra Hall, on Sunday evening (22), Sir Arthur Blackwood addressed the undergraduates. He read the story of the Crucifixion, as recorded in Matt. xxvii., and spoke of the Lord Jesus having opened a door in heaven for all who are willing to enter. The veil was a symbol of sin, separating the sinner from God; when it was rent it was by a Divine hand, for it was rent "from the top." Had man rent it, it would have been torn from the bottom.

The fifth sermon by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, on Ps. xxxii. was preached in the evening of Sunday, February 22, verse 7, "Thou art my hiding place." The weakest inside his strength, is stronger than the strong. The Lord does not say: "Go to sleep, and I will keep you," but "in your weakness keep awake, and I will keep you." "Thou shalt preserve me from trouble." There will be a rest of faith, a peace of soul, which is power; a humble confidence that the one will never be at the end of his resources, because the resources are Jesus Christ's for all the need of every day. "With songs of deliverance" God can so revive and restore even the soul that has kept sin unconfessed, as to make the life bright and happy. It it not always "forte" or "fortissimo," but it is always a song.

OXFORD.

The Dean of St. Paul's (Dr. Gregory) preached the University sermon on Feb. 28.

All true friends of the Reformation are rejoicing that Newton's statue is not to be placed in Oxford. The protestors, though regarded as a "feeble folk," have, nevertheless, been owned of God in this matter, and much thankfulness has ascended and is ascending to Him for the wonderful answer to prayer.

Rev. G. E. A. Pargiter, C.M.S. Missionary in the North-West Provinces of India, addressed the University Missionary Union on Feb. 23. Much prayer is being offered that Oxford may soon emulate the sister University in missionary interest and zeal, and there are indications that the answer is already coming.

The Principal of Pusey House, Rev. Charles Gore, is drawing large numbers of undergraduates to his Sunday morning addresses, All Saints' Church being crowded. His subjects are: "The Control of the Body," "The Claim of Truth," and "The Claim of Friendship." Notwithstanding his extreme Churchmanship and other peculiar tenets, it is noteworthy how much of vital evangelical truth he seems to have assimilated; so different in this respect from the majority of his fellow Ritualists, and herein we may rejoice, since Christ is preached, even if only partially. Certainly no teacher in the University has the ear of the men in any degree like Mr. Gore.

Three large gatherings in Oxford during the same week, with special reference to missionary work in China, is a noteworthy fact. On Monday, February 22, Rev. D. Hill addressed a large assemblage in the Wesley Memorial Chapel. On Friday, February 26, the Y.M.C.A. Hall was crowded to excess with a meeting addressed by Rev. J. S. Adams, on the opium traffic in China; and on Saturday, February 27, the annual Breakfast of the London Missionary Society was held at the Clarendon Assembly Room, when the speakers were both connected with China.

This Breakfast follows the worthy example set by Canon Christopher, and has now been held for two years by the invitation of Prof. Legge (so long connected with China) and Dr. Fairbairn, of Mansfield. The company numbered about 150 and consisted, in addition to the larger proportion of undergraduates, of several representative men. Canons Cheyne, Fremantle, and Christopher, the Rector of Exeter College, Rev. J. F. Heyes, treasurer of the S.P.G., Rev. Jas. Chapman, Wesleyan minister, may be cited as showing the general response to the invitation.

The first speaker was Mr. Lavington Hart, M.A., D.Sc. (Camb.), who is giving up his Cambridge lectureship and other work in that city, and, with his wife, is about to set sail for China in connection with the L.M.S. Dr. Hart's speech was couched in an intensely spiritual tone, and made a real impression on the men by its effective testimony to past results, its solemn statement of the reasons for missionary work, and its earnest appeal for volunteers from Oxford.

The second speaker was Dr. Glover, of Bristol, who recently returned from a visit to the Baptist Missions in China. After a telling reference to the influence of Carey on modern missions, Dr. Glover gave some general impressions of his visit. He said that he had taken a roseate view of the work before he started, and had seen nothing to dissipate that view, the results being far beyond any expectations. On one point he spoke with great emphasis and vigour, saying that China needs the best men, leaders of leaders if possible, and that it is no place for the cheap, raw celibate missionary, but for men of the manliest and godliest type of character, who can face many of the subtlest of problems. Although some of Dr. Glover's hearers would have liked a few more details of his visit, the address was thoroughly enjoyed and valued. Altogether the breakfast was a most helpful gathering, and cannot but prove of great service to the L.M.S. in Oxford.

The breakfast is now the prelude to the annual sermon and meeting of the Oxford University Branch of the L.M.S. Dr. Glover preached, and spoke at Mansfield College in this connection on Sunday, February 28.

Personalia.

Mr. Mitchell-Carruthers has, we hear, resigned his post at the C.M.S. house.

Rev. Dr. Kennedy will deliver the Merchants' Lecture during March, his subject being, "Christ and Paul."

Rev. Walter Bradbury, of Weston-super-Mare, intends sailing on March 21 for the Cape, in order to enter on a mission tour in the colony.

Rev. W. F. Clarkson, of the Church Aid Society, has been ordered to the Riviera for some weeks, partly by reason of an affection of the throat.

Rev. C. A. Berry, who last week returned home from his Australian trip, finds himself fairly restored to health, and hopes to resume his ministry on Sunday.

Mr. W. R. Lane is, we are glad to note, recovered from his illness and regaining strength, though not yet able to resume his evangelistic labours.

Rev. George Nickson, M.A., well known in Cambridge as an earnest evangelical and a preacher of some promise, has been instituted to St. Benet's, Cambridge.

Mr. Eugene Stock, who has been staying at Bournemouth since his arrival from the Continent, returned to town last week, and hopes shortly to resume his duties.

Rev. Thomas Smith, D.D., the Moderator of the Free Church, has, we understand, resigned his post of Professor of Evangelistic Theology at the New College, Edinburgh.

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts, who has been suffering from the effects of a severe illness, is now, we are glad to learn, making favourable progress towards convalescence.

Alderman R. Cory, of Cardiff, has felt himself compelled to withdraw from the Baptist Union, for doctrinal reasons, given plainly in a letter written to Dr. Booth and published in the Press.

Bishop Tucker, according to latest letters, intended starting for Kilimanjaro, on January 25, so as to cross the waterless desert ere the pools in the wells dried up. He had himself passed through a week of fever.

Rev. Francis Paget, D.D., in his first sermon as Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, on the theme, "The power of the Bible manifested in the formation of Christian character," delivered, what is said to be, a discourse of singular eloquence and ability.

Dr. Harford Battersby sailed, we are informed, for West Africa last Saturday in the s.s. Boma, full of heart and hope. Before entering fully upon missionary work he intends investigating the causes of African fever, with a view to the wiser distribution and development of missionary agency.

Miss Charlotte Murray. — Our readers are familiar with the name of Miss Charlotte Murray through her striking, stirring, and very practical poems. It will interest them to know of her change of address. Hitherto she has lived at the Manor House, Hastings, where her father and then her brother kept a high-class boys' school for thirty-five years. But being gradually enclosed by the advancing buildings, the school has, with marked advantage, been removed by the present principal, Mr. A. E. Murray, to St. Clare, Upper Walmer, Kent—a noble house, whose extensive and delightful surroundings cannot but afford our friend poetical inspiration. It must have been a painful uprooting for Miss Murray and her relatives to leave Hastings, and the Christian work so long engaged in; but the loss to Hastings will be gain to Walmer.

Letters to the Editor.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOL, CAIRO.

Dear Sir,—As you have been kind enough to insert from time to time appeals from me on behalf of the British Mission Schools, I think it is due to your readers, to inform them, through your columns, of my withdrawal from any connection with the work.

The Committee here having found it necessary to resign, owing to the apparent impossiblity of introducing certain much-needed reforms, I did not feel that I could conscientiously remain on in the post which I had undertaken as joint-superintendent with Mr. Shakoor, of the Mission.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully, D. Vernon.

PERSECUTION IN GREECE.

Sir,—With deep sorrow I have read the account of the savage and unprovoked attack made on the Mission premises at The Piræus, Athens, by a mob of Greek Church fanatics. Dr. Kalopothákes, who superintends that good work, is well known, and he deserves the warm and practical sympathy of all who are interested in the spread of the Redeemer's Kingdom. During the winter I spent in Athens some years ago, I had ample opportunities of seeing the good work he was then doing, which has spread and flourished ever since. Last year I gave a letter of introduction to him to the son of a leading physician here, who has gone out to study Modern Greek on the spot, and he has written to me in terms of warm commendation of the worker and his work. When I was there a reforming young monk, Lotas by name, preached some eloquent sermons during Lent, in one of which I heard him quote the whole of St. Paul's speech on Mars Hill, with the fire, and (as I think) the pronunciation of the Apostle himself. But he disappeared soon after; for, of all Churches, the Greek Church is one of the most intolerant.

Yet the good work goes on, and it is earnestly to be hoped that the wrecking of the Mission premises will be soon repaired, and that no delay or hindrance may take place. Remittances may be sent direct to Rev. M. D. Kalopothákes, M.D., Athens; or you would, I am sure, gladly receive and transmit any sums. No time is to be lost.—I remain, yours faithfully, W. Millar Nicolson, D.Sc.,

Minister of the Presbyterian Church, Bristol.

"A QUESTION FOR CHRISTIAN FARMERS."

Dear Sir,—Mr. Albert Rivett's letter under the above heading in your number of February 23 fairly raises an important issue. If he is one of those who, after prayerful consideration, have come to the conclusion that the use of alcoholic drinks is not warranted by Holy Scripture (our only rule of life), then Mr. Rivett can have no difficulty in giving up the growth of barley, the principal use of which in this country is the manufacture of beer.

If, on the other hand, he believes that such passages as Numbers xxviii. 7, Judges ix. 13, 2 Sam. xvi. 2, Deut. viii. 8, 1 Kings iv. 25, Ps. civ. 15, Matt. xi. 19, John ii. 10, Ephes. v. 18, 1 Tim. v. 23, Prov. xxxi. 6 clearly indicate that it is not the use but the abuse of such products of the vine and grain which is forbidden, Mr. Rivett will thankfully avail himself of the opportunity afforded by the soil and climate of this country to produce a sample of barley so specially suited for the brewing of a beverage which the great majority of our doctors tell us is the most wholesome in existence.

Mr. Rivett will further have the great satisfaction of feeling that he is, however slightly, increasing the quantity of genuine malt available, and to that degree discouraging and rendering unnecessary the resort of brewers to other and less innocent substitutes, such as sugar and molasses, with their inevitable correctives in the shape of those brewers' drugs which, with raw, immature, adulterated spirits, are the chief source of the drunkenness and misery of the lower classes.

It is remarkable that vines in Palestine and barley in England grow on soils evidently more suitable for the production of those crops than any other; from which we may gather that good barley ground is as distinct a gift to us as good vineyards were to Israel. The drinking habits of fifty years ago, prevailing amongst the upper and middle classes, were not changed by teetotalism, but by the introduction of the lighter and more genuine wines of France, and by greater knowledge of the hygiene of foods.

And so great good would be done now if some of the energy expended on the total abstinence propaganda were made useful in stopping the sale as beer of poisonous concoctions, as innocent of malt and hops as they are guilty of the ruin and degradation of those who imbibe them.

Or at least those Christians who feel that nothing less than total prohibition is worthy of their own attention and support might hail with sympathy and thankfulness efforts of their less advanced brethren in the above direction.—Yours faithfully,

Caversham, Oxon. M. J. S.

OBITUARY.

MR. W. H. H. MORGAN.

On Sunday last, at Bournemouth, William Henry Hawker Morgan, elder son of R. Cope Morgan, entered into rest, at the age of 35, after a long and painful illness. During several months of suffering he was able to magnify the Lord, and to "rejoice in His salvation."

PROFESSOR L. F. STEARNS.

Many will have heard with regret of the death of Professor L. F. Stearns, D.D., of Bangor Seminary (U.S.A.) who took a leading part in the Congregational International Council. He was regarded as a promising young theologian; his best known work being devoted to the evidence of religious experience.

MRS. CLARK, FORMERLY OF JAMAICA.

A sweet and active presence, of which fragrant memories are strong in Jamaica, has passed away. Mrs. Clark, wife of Rev. T. H. Clark, who for forty-three years ably seconded her husband's efforts in that island, has entered into rest, and was interred at Abney Cemetery on Saturday, Feb. 27.

MRS. J. HALERO.

Sunderland is mourning the loss of a noble and useful servant of God in the falling asleep of Mrs. J. Halero. A correspondent writes: "We can ill spare such earnest, untiring workers. The Religious Tract Society, the Bible Society, the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, the Town Mission, and the Girls' Industrial School have lost a true friend and warm supporter. Many a poor widow and weary sufferer will now look in vain for her kind help and sympathy. Though 82 years of age, yet until very lately she might have been seen out in all weathers collecting subscriptions and inspiring younger persons, by her persevering labours, to bestir themselves to more earnest zeal."

REV. JOHN HEWLETT, M.A., OF BENARES.

We deeply regret to announce the death, on Sunday, Feb. 21, of Rev. John Hewlett, M.A., one of the foremost missionaries of the London Missionary Society. Seventeen of the thirty years of his laborious life have been spent in Benares, the stronghold of Hinduism, and in many respects the most difficult post in India. He was well qualified for such work, being both talented and amiable. He knew many eminent Hindu priests and teachers, who allowed him to visit them, to state and explain the great leading truths of the Gospel. The fierceness of the feeling against Christianity has been in this way reduced at headquarters, although even now the prejudice of rich Hindus in the city is still so strong that those who have come under the power of the Gospel have had to seek employment elsewhere. Mr. Hewlett was the Principal of the Mission College, and in addition to much educational success he made every possible effort to maintain its missionary character. The Scriptures were read and expounded, and prayer offered daily in the presence of all the students. Although the telegraphic announcement does not state the cause of death, it is well known that the strain of overwork has for some time been telling upon Mr. Hewlett. While feeling that the Church can ill-spare such workers it is a mournful satisfaction to know that this loving and faithful missionary has pursued his course without slackness to its very end. We hope to give in an early issue some account of his career.

Anti-Opium Meetings in Dublin.

Archbishop Plunket presided over a conference held a few days ago in the Leinster Hall, Molesworth-street, Dublin, at which stirring addresses were delivered on the various phases of the Anglo-Asiatic opium question.

Mr. Cheok Hong Cheong graphically pointed out the deadly enemy the opium drug is to the Chinese, and said the whole strength of arguments for the traffic rested in the one word "revenue." Miss Soonderbai Powar followed, and earnestly pleaded on behalf of her sisters in India, who are broken-hearted and shedding tears, because (as they said) "the Christian Government wants money." Miss Lucy Guinness entreated the ladies of Ireland to join the "Anti-Opium Association." At the close of the meeting a memorial was adopted and signed by the Chairman, and forwarded to the Prime Minister.

A public meeting was held in the evening in the Antient Concert Rooms, at which the Lord Mayor presided, and addresses were given by the deputation and others. The hall was crowded to its fullest extent.

HORSTED KEYNES.—Last autumn Mr. John Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, commenced services in an old cottage in this small Sussex village, and the interest growing rapidly, the committee (of four labourers) had to pull down the internal walls to increase the accommodation. These Gospel services are now being continued regularly, and certain structural alterations, estimated to cost fifty pounds, have become necessary to provide for the people attending. Should any feel interested, communications may be made to Edward Awcock, Church-lane, Horsted Keynes.

The Book World.

Night and Day. This annual volume of Dr. Barnardo's magazine contains a fairly full chronicle of the progress and position of the institutions under his direction up to the close of the year, when 4219 children were in residence in the homes. (3s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

"Some Time We'll Understand." This hymn, which was sung by Mr. Sankey at a meeting held in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on the day of the funeral of the Duke of Clarence, has now been published—music by James McGranahan, and words by El. Nathan. (3d. Morgan and Scott.)

The Sword and Trowel. The March issue is a special memorial number. It opens with Mrs. Spurgeon's message of thanks to the many correspondents who so lovingly shared her sorrow, and then gives an account of the last days of Mr. Spurgeon, and a report of the memorial services. (3d. Passmore and Alabaster.)

North Africa. The monthly parts of the record of the North Africa Mission contain much that is instructive and encouraging; and the annual volume is rendered specially valuable through being furnished with an excellent map of its large and important field of evangelistic operations. (S. W. Partridge & Co.)

The Story of the Exodus, told in Simple Language for Children. By Frances Younghusband. (2s. 6d. Longmans.) An ever-memorable story is here told in an admirable manner, and the book will be useful to many who are no longer young in years. The author has given due attention to Egyptian antiquities, which are represented by a number of excellent illustrations.

Notes on the Book of the Revelation. By Thomas Newberry. (Shaw.) This is the second edition, revised and enlarged, of a little book which is the result of much independent thought, and as useful for its indirect suggestiveness as for its positive and direct teaching. The "notes" will be welcome to students of all schools of interpretation, although the author, generally speaking, holds what are called literal and futurist views of the book.

Palestine Re-peopled. By Rev. James Neil, M.A., formerly incumbent of Christ Church, Jerusalem. 3s. Lang Neil and Co., 66, Chancery-lane. The fact that this work is in its ninth edition is evidence of the widespread interest in the fulfilment of prophecy, in which the gathering of scattered Israel occupies such an important place. We spoke highly of it when it first appeared, indicating the impending accomplishment of predicted events; and we now give it our hearty commendation, in view of the fact that the Divine programme which its pages outline is being enacted so marvellously before our eyes. Mr. Neil says in his latest preface: "When the first edition appeared, in 1875, the Jewish population of Palestine was about thirty thousand. It is now upwards of seventy thousand, some say a hundred thousand—it is believed that there are forty thousand in Jerusalem alone—and the cry is, 'Still they come.'" Quite recent events are included in the survey, and there is a good index. In prophetic interpretation Mr. Neil seems to combine features of both schools—the historical and the futurist. The book should be read by all, for it demonstrates the inspiration of Scripture by pointing out how prophecy is being fulfilled; and it gives an explanation of current history as regards the Jews by setting forth God's purpose, past, present, and future, as it affects the chosen nation.

The Clifton and Bristol Pictorial gives an entertaining historical sketch and general description of Bristol and neighbourhood. The illustrations are numerous and well executed. (6d. W. F. Mack, 70, Park-street, Bristol.)

The "Devotional" Series of Booklets, by Rev. F. C. Spurr, are made up in packets of eight varieties at 4d. (Penman and Co., 33, Furnival-street, E.C.) They are on subjects of supreme practical interest, and are specially suited for enclosing in letters to correspondents.

The Epidemic.—Mr. James Van Sommer has reprinted, from Word and Work, two articles, entitled, "A Call to Personal Reformation," and "A Call to Confession, Humiliation, and Intercession." The booklet is emphatically a word in season. (1d. each, 50 copies 2s. 6d. J. F. Shaw and Co.)

The History of Relic Worship, by Rev. J. Campbell Strickland, D.D., vicar of Christ Church, Tunbridge Wells, is a succinct exposure of wickedness and folly found alike in sanctuaries dedicated to Christ as well as in Pagan temples. The author properly urges his readers to pity and enlighten the victims of Romish superstition. (6d. Tunbridge Wells: W. J. Speirs, High-street.)

Messrs. Deighton and Co., 53, High-street, Worcester, have published, in pamphlet form, a deeply interesting memoir of Rev. Samuel Strong Forster, M.A., for nineteen years Head Master of the College for Blind Sons of Gentlemen, Worcester. From the pen of Rev. Charles E. Medhurst, M.A., this brief account of Mr. Forster's life and work will be read with pleasure by all friends of the higher education of the blind.

SUNDAY, MARCH 6.—HEBREWS XII.

Chastening (1-13).—The saints enumerated in the vious chapter are regarded as the spectators, king down on an arena, where we are running our e. Weight, i.e., encumbrances. There are ghts, which may not be sins, but they must be d aside no less than sins. The sin which so easily ets us is probably unbelief. We must not look the difficulties or length of the course, but away Jesus. 2. He is the Leader (ii. 10) and Perfecter, He is the complete Exemplar of that faith ich characterises all sons. We may not expect joy v, but count on it afterwards. Faith fetches cup- s of joy from the future. 3. When the gainsaying sinners long-continued makes us wax faint in soul, us consider Christ. 5. "Which reasoneth with i" (R.V.) If we compare this verse with the pre- ding ones, it will appear that God's chastenings metimes come through the gainsayings of sinners. Oh that God's children had the faith to take their ses and sorrows as marks of his tender love. Your urging proves that you have been received as a . 7. What you suffer is not punishment, but astening. 9. It is not enough to bear suffering ggedly, because we cannot help it; we must sub- t ourselves to the Father, then we shall live. 11. e results of chastening are Righteousness and ace. 12. "Feeble," i.e., palsied (R.V.) 13. Let make plain paths for others.

Esau (14-17).—There are three lests in these verses, l we are to look carefully that not one of these ce contingencies shall take place, if we are able prevent it. Lest any man should fall back m. Lest any root of bitterness, as Deut. xxix. 18, ere the sin was idolatry. Lest as Esau, &c. The thright was to be in the line of spiritual blessing, l the progenitor of the Messiah; this he sold for ne mess of meat" (R.V.). What he did he could undo. Tears cannot recall or alter the past. You y be forgiven, but you cannot undo. Beware of act or habit by which you may sell your birth- ht—communion with God—for some mess of red, thly pottage.

Mount Sinai and Mount Zion (18-29).—In this wing passage we are taught that the spiritual vileges we enjoy in this dispensation are immea- ably superior to the material ones in the Levitical. , too, have our mountain, Sion; our city, the venly Jerusalem; our festive gatherings, of saints l angels; the Judge, the Mediator, and the blood. wever lonely we are, or bare and uninviting the ce where we assemble, in all spiritual worship we one with all holy souls in heaven and on earth. The blood of Abel spoke from the earth, and cried vengeance, that of Jesus speaks and cries for rcy. 27. The shaking is permitted that all mere ms and shams may pass away, and that only the litics may remain. 28. "A Kingdom that cannot shaken," R.V. We may be therefore free from iety, and at leisure to give ourselves to God's vice. 29. God's fire will consume our sins, and us alight.

MONDAY, MAR. 7.—HEBREWS XIII.

Exhortations (1-10).—2. "Forget not to show love strangers." R.V. There is allusion probably to raham's hospitality on the plains of Mamre. 3. ause you are in the body, and therefore exposed similar griefs, you ought to have quick sympathy h others. 4. "Let marriage be held in honour" V.). There has always been a tendency to con- r celibacy as higher than the married state, hence necessity for this inspired command. 5. Do not ager after money, you have got God, and in Him have the Giver of all. There are five negatives this promise. We might read it with two nevers ore fail, and three before forsake. 7. Three times meet the phrase, "them that have the rule" (17- . "Considering the issue of their life, imitate ir faith." Do you want the influence over other n, the manifest beauty of character, which they oyed, there is but one way of obtaining these ngs—"imitate their faith." 8. Human teachers s away, but Jesus Christ is the same (i. 12; vii. . Let us seek permanence by adhering, not to s and ceremonies, but to Him. Oh for the estab- ed heart, rooted in the changeless grace and love God.

Strangers and Pilgrims (11-16). Lev. xvi. 27.—Our d was "made sin," hence He was cast out of the vish camp. 12. "By his blood" our Saviour chased us for Himself, that we should be set rt from the service of the world, and sin, and self, devoted only to Himself, his glory, and his use. As the people gathered around the outcast David, let us gather to the outcast Lord. He will make nto an army, as David did the debtors and others came about him. 15. "That is, the fruit of lips ch make confession to his name." There is no ice so dear to God as this. 16. Doing good and contributing to the relief of others is another form of sacrifice. The smoke of these two sacrifices should never be permitted to die down.

Doxology and Closing Words (20-25).—How quietly God does his work, "the God of Peace." What can He not accomplish since He brought Jesus from the dead? If the Shepherd is so exalted, may not we, the flock, claim to be made even as He is? But there is no ascension except through death, no covenant without blood, no crown but it is preceded by a cross. 21. "Make you perfect" means literally "set you in joint." When we are so, He will work through us unhindered, and will accomplish his will in us and by us; and all the issues of our life will please Him well, it always being understood that we stand before Him accepted in Jesus Christ. Glory to God (21) means Grace to Man (25).

THE EPISTLE OF JAMES.

This James, who must be distinguished from the brother of John (Acts xii. 2), was the Lord's brother (Matt. xiii. 55; Gal, i. 19), and was President of the Church at Jerusalem (Acts xii. 17; xv. 13-29; xxi. 18-25). Probably he joined the disciples after the Lord's death and resurrection had taken place and convinced him.

He was a strict observer of the moral and ceremonial Law, and lived an eminently holy and spotless life. His raiment was white linen, and he was known as "the Just."

He was, therefore, specially qualified to address Hebrew Christians, and to exhort them to holiness of character, and patience amid their many trials.

The Epistle was written, perhaps, about 60, James being martyred about the year 62.

TUESDAY, MARCH 8.—JAMES I.

Trials (1-4).—"To the twelve tribes which are of the Dispersion" (R.V.). Many of these had been converted on the day of Pentecost, and during the first years of the early Church history; but scattered through the Roman Empire, were meeting the trials with which the new faith was being assailed. 2. These "temptations" were trials which put their faith and patience to the test, but there was comfort in knowing that opportunity was thus being given for the acquisition of patience, i.e., endurance (Rom. v. 3). The only way to acquire spiritual graces is to practise them. 4. A full-orbed life, lacking in nothing, can only come through the patient endurance of sorrow.

Unwavering Hearts (5-8).—We specially need wisdom in trial. However heavy the demands we make on God, He does not find fault. But we can only count on what we believe for. 8. A double-minded man is a man of two minds, hovering between certainty and uncertainty. Such a man has no power with God, and his life-course is unsteady and disappointing.

Temptation (9-18).—We do not always realise, when we ask not to be led into temptation, that we may be praying for great changes to be wrought in our outward circumstances, the low being exalted, the rich made low. The poorest is the heir of the great King; the rich must needs boast in the unsearchable riches of Christ, because riches are as perishable as wild flowers. 12. Love best endures trial. Wear life as a crown. 13. God permits us to be tempted, but He cannot tempt. Probably it could not be otherwise than that we should be exposed to the solicitations of the tempter. (Luke xxii. 31.) 14. The inordinate desire which is in us either to have too much of good things, or to satiate itself with forbidden ones is the cause of outward things becoming sin to us. We need constantly to ask that the Holy Spirit should contend against the flesh, so as to keep us from acting as otherwise we should (Gal. v. 16, 17). 15. Learn the genesis of sin. An unholy desire may not always give rise to a sinful act at the moment, but it will breed it. 17. So far from God being the originator of temptation, He is the Fountain and Source of good And He does not turn aside from his course of divine benevolence; "in Him can be no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning." 18. These Hebrew believers were the firstfruits of a mighty harvest. Born of the will of God through the truth (John i. 14; 1 Pet. i. 23).

Not Hearers only (19-27).—Swiftness in hearing, and slowness in speaking is the reverse of the world's maxims. 21. The daily reception with meekness of God's word, grafted into and planted in the soul, will save us from the love and tyranny of sin. 23. But we must be careful not to hear only. We must do, and we are blessed in doing. The real blessedness only begins when we begin to practise all we have heard. "This man shall be blessed in his doing" (R.V.). The Gospel is a perfect law, full of liberty, because its constraints are love. But we must continue therein. 27. We must not divorce religion and morality. We serve God best, not in singing hymns and attending services, but in living an unspotted and ministering life.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 9.—JAMES II.

Respect of Persons (1-13).—How contemptible are our distinctions in the face of Christ's incomparable glory! True faith in Jesus leads to perfect equal love. 2. "Into your synagogue" (R.V.): appropriate to Hebrew converts. 5. It would almost seem from these words that we must look for God's special favourites among the poor. 6. There is no need for the Church to pay homage to wealth, since God can supply her needs, and wealth has often been distinctly cast into the balance against her, with some noble exceptions. 8. This law has a sort of kingly supremacy over the rest. Our love to men must not be determined by their ability to help us, but by their need of our help. 12. The Gospel is called the law of liberty, because, though it is a positive rule for life, our obedience is prompted and inspired by love. 13. Only the merciful obtain mercy (Matt. v. 7).

Faith without Works (14-26).—A holding of a creed; which is all that many mean by faith, cannot fulfil the Divine requirements any more than mere professions of kindness will clothe the naked or feed the hungry. There is no kind of collision between this paragraph and the teachings of the Apostle Paul in the Epistle to the Romans. For each agrees in demanding that saving faith should be considered to belong, not to the head, but to the heart; that it is not simply an intellectual attitude, that it moulds character and life and action. 17. The only test whether a herb has life in it is to put it in the ground and see if it will grow, and the one sufficient test for faith is to see whether it affects heart and life. 18. This challenge really points to an impossibility. As a matter of fact, it is impossible to show faith except by works. 19. The devils have an intellectual belief, but they are devils yet. We must have something more than that if we are to be saved. 23. It is still true that the man who will walk with God by faith will be taken into the shrine of God's inner intimacy and friendship. 26. What the spirit is to the body, that faith is to our work, giving vitality, nerve, beauty, sustenance. But where the connection is broken, the faith is the mere dead adherence to a formulary, and the works are also dead.

THURSDAY, MARCH 10.—JAMES III.

The Sins of the Tongue (1-12).—No man need wish to teach others, for larger light means heavier responsibility and a more terrible reckoning if we fail. 2. Even the best of us stumble in many respects, but oftenest our failures occur in connection with speech; if we are watchful there, we shall be able to control our whole nature. So often the refusal to express an evil thought kills the thought. 3. The way in which we use our tongues determines the entire course of our lives. The tongue is the bridle, the rudder of the nature. 4. "Governor," i.e., steersman. 5. "How much wood is kindled by how small a fire" (R.V.). A wrong word has sent families and states into conflagration. 6. Sinful words defile the entire nature, and being themselves set on fire by hell, pass that fire on to "the wheel of nature." 8. Untameable, a restless evil, full of poison deadlier than that of the rattlesnake. It is well to remember such words, that we may be led more earnestly to appropriate the keeping power of Christ. 12. "Neither can salt water yield sweet." These questions teach us that what the mouth is, that the heart is. We must judge the heart by the words the lips speak in daily ordinary talk. What need there is to ponder the meaning of our Master's words (Matt. v. 37), and to ask Him to set a watch over the door of our lips, and to entrust the tongue to Him that He may fill it with sweet and wholesome messages from Himself; stilling it when we ought to be quiet, prompting it when we ought to speak.

The True Wisdom (13-18).—The true wisdom is not the child of the intellect but of the heart, and consists not only in what we know, but in what we are. Throughout the Book of Proverbs, wisdom is evidently the product of the moral nature, so here. Works, a good life, and meekness of wisdom, are absolutely needful to the wisdom that cometh down from above. 17. What an exquisite string of qualities! Above all things, strive to be stainlessly pure, peace will then begin to reign within and keep the heart, then gentleness and mercy will follow, whilst "partiality and hypocrisy" will be alike impossible. 18. Peace is the seed germ of righteousness, and those who make peace shall be first permitted to enjoy the result of their own autumn sowing. Those that in peace sow peace, shall reap righteousness, the fruit of peace.

FRIDAY, MARCH 11.—JAMES IV.

Wars and Fightings (1-10).—Referring to the bitter "jealousy and faction" of iii. 14. These evils are traced to the prevalence of lust, that is, the desire to enjoy pleasure, inordinately in right directions, and at all in wrong ones. The restless inward war is the origin of so much failure in speech and act. 2. In our eager desire to gratify our evil propensities, we go so far as to murder in thought and intention, and even then fail to obtain, whereas, if we would pray more, one of two things would happen. Either we should find the fire of unholy desire dying out, or we should be able to trust God to supply all that He knows to be needful. 3. How much prayer is abortive, because its petitions are prompted by unholy desire. 4. Infidelity to God is constantly in Scripture compared to infidelity to the marriage vow. Whoever is "minded to be" the world's friend, drives, so to speak, the Spirit of God to jealousy. God must have our exclusive love and devotion. We have no right to seek after any other approval than his. 5. This is the purport of many Scriptures, as Rom. x. 19. "Doth the Spirit which He made to dwell in us long unto envying?" That Holy Spirit longs for the complete possession of our whole being, and is jealous when aught is given away from Him. Or the passage may mean, that the Spirit which dwells in us could never prompt us to those unholy lustings to which our attention was drawn above, but instead is prepared to give more grace for their subjugation and removal. 7. Yield to God and you will conquer and overcome the devil. 8. Notice the antithesis. Resist the devil, and he will flee; draw near to God, and God will draw near. We determine the repulsions and attractions of the spiritual life. But if we would draw nigh to God, we must cleanse our hands and purify our hearts. (Psa. xxiv. 4; Heb. x. 22). 9. We must put away the frivolous hilarity of the world, and get low in contrition and penitence before God, and He will exalt with a joy that cannot be taken away from us. (Luke vi. 20-26.)

Evil-Speaking (11-12).—To speak evil of another, is to usurp the functions of the only lawgiver and judge. And especially if that other is modelling his life by the law, to speak evil of him not only calls his action in question, but the law also. Would that we always searched and judged ourselves as we do others; merciless on ourselves, whilst we are merciful to all else. When you see wrong in another, first ask whether the same thing is not in yourself, if so put it away, and you will see clearly how to remove it from another. Do not speak of men, but to them, as to their faults.

The Need for Submission and Trust (13-17).—We are apt at making plans without reference to God's will. All plans may be upset by the transience and vanishing away of life, which is like the will-o'-the-wisp, a miasma, a meteor. Our one endeavour should be to discover what God's plan is, and to do it. If we do not constantly say, "if the Lord will," it should at least be ever in our hearts.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12.—JAMES V.

The Rich (1-6).—"Your gold and silver are rusted" (R.V.) The rust of unused and misused money shall not only eat into the metal, but into the miser's flesh. 4. These terrible denunciations are intended for those who have gathered wealth by fraud and oppression. By an inevitable Nemesis, either in this world or the next, all the wrong they have done to others will return on themselves. And in the thought of the Apostle, it is as great a wrong to hoard up for selfish ends money entrusted for use as God's steward, as it is to obtain it unrighteously. Sabaoth is the Hebrew word for "hosts." 5. Luke xxi. 34; Acts xiv. 17.

The Oppressed (7-11).—7. Though the just is led as a lamb to the slaughter, God will avenge his cause. 8. All oppressed ones may possess their souls in patience; the day of the Lord is nigh, and He will redress their wrongs. 10. That those suffering wrong may be still further encouraged, James cites the case of the prophets and Job. These endured the pressure of their sorrows with commendable fortitude and patience, and learned the secret of blessedness (11); and at the end the Lord vindicated and delivered them. Wait for the end of the Lord, He will do more than justify Himself.

Various Exhortations (12-20).—Let our words be few and simple, that we may be saved bitter regrets (Matt. v. 33). 14. The oil is the symbol of the Holy Spirit. The body is his temple, and in this act He is asked to expel the intrusion of disease. The one condition to be fulfilled in this case is the ability to pray the prayer of faith. Where this is not offered we fail to fulfil these conditions, and cannot count on recovery. The raising up is entirely the Lord's work. 16. The confession and putting away of sin, so far as known, must precede physical healing (1 Cor. xi. 30). The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working. Prayer is something more than a holy reverie, with reflex action. It works and avails much. Ought we not more and more to use it, and especially in cases of bodily or spiritual ill-health, not once only, but repeatedly. 17. It is comforting to see Elijah who had stood for God on the Mount, and by his fervent prayers had secured the drought and its removal, prone on the desert sands. It shows that he was made of the same materials as ourselves. He was as he was by faith and prayer. The ladder on which he climbed did not start from a higher level than that which is placed against our feet. He probably prayed that it might not rain in the hope that suffering would drive his people back to God. 19. We may "convert," i.e., turn souls back from wandering, by our entreaties and remonstrances, and shall thus save them from eternal death, and lead to the covering of sin under the precious blood of Christ.

PACIFIC GARDEN MISSION, CHICAGO.—The testimonies of salvation wrought by God through this Mission include the following:—"A few years ago a man of some thirty-five years of age came into the Mission in a deplorable condition, nearly naked, and crazed with liquor, having been on a long debauch. This man was cared for, and is now doing a vast amount of good." Another says:—"I was totally ruined in body and mind by the drink; it robbed me of character, money, family, health, friends, and everything; and at last cast me into prison. But through this Mission I found salvation and peace." The report adds:—"Our mission work has now gone on for fourteen years, and last year was by far the most fruitful we have ever had." The lease of the existing premises (East Van Buren-street) expires in May, and it is doubtful at present what the future may reveal. Col. G. Clarke is the superintendent.

International S. S. Lessons.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, MAR. 13.

The Promise of a New Heart.—Ezek. xxxvi. 25-38.

Golden Text: Ezek. xxxvi. 26.

This lesson is full of rich promises of grace to be fulfilled at the restoration of Israel (24). The return from Babylon was but partial; a future restoration "from all countries" is to be expected. With this will be connected a spiritual revival. Outward prosperity will be associated with true holiness; so that the heathen who saw in the captivity of Israel a reason for profaning the name of Jehovah (20), as though He were not able to deliver his people, will see that sin was the only cause of Israel's distress. God will so restore his people as to make his name known to the heathen (35-36).

The prophecy finds present fulfilment in the spiritual blessings of this dispensation. We shall best hasten its literal fulfilment by seeking a present appropriation of its blessings for ourselves. Notice that Grace speaks in the whole lesson by its frequent "I will's," in contrast with Law, which says, "Thou shalt." Grace gives what Law commands. A useful way to deal with the lesson is to take each separate "I will," and present it before God with the prayer, "Thy will be done."

Full Salvation (25-28).—Four things are included in this: Justification (25), regeneration (26), power for obedience through the indwelling Spirit (27), and communion with God (28). These four follow one another like links in a chain. The aim of all God's dealings with us in grace is to restore us to that fellowship with Him in which consists our only blessedness, but which sin has destroyed. Jesus is "the way" to the Father (Jno. xiv. 6); He suffered to "bring us to God" (1 Peter iii. 17). Full salvation admits us into the land on which his favour rests from the beginning of the year to its end. The land of the promises is the antitype of the land of promise.

Clean Water (25) is not merely water that is pure, but that possesses the power of making pure. The reference is to Numb. xix, where running water was mingled with the ashes of the red heifer and sprinkled upon the unclean. Christ is the anti-type of the Red Heifer. His blood applied to the conscience by the Word of God cleanses from sin (Heb. ix. 13-14; x. 22). All your filthiness reminds us of the unlimited efficacy of the atoning blood (1 Jno. i. 7). Only by the power of the atonement can men turn from their idols to God (1 Thess. i. 9).

Conversion is incomplete unless the outward cleansing is accompanied by an inward change (26). See David's prayer:—not only "Purge me with hyssop," but "Create in me a clean heart" (Psa. li. 7, 10). Acts of sin are the natural outcome of a heart of sin (Matt. xv. 19). Holiness was defined by a Sunday scholar as being "clean inside." Christ makes the life holy by changing the heart from which the life issues (Prov. iv. 23). Heart of flesh does not mean "carnal"; but impressible in contrast with hard and stony. Notice xviii. 31, where what is here promised is there commanded. The promise makes obedience possible.

The renewed Spirit within is not enough to secure a holy walk apart from the indwelling of the Spirit Himself (27). God renews our spirit that it may be the fit abode for his own Spirit. The great distinguishing feature of the New Testament is the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. Do you think it hopeless to attempt to "do all his statutes"? Look at the word "He shall cause you." There is a difference between you trying to do it with the help of the Holy Spirit and the Spirit causing you to do it. In all your striving remember who works mightily within you (Col. i. 29).

The Results of Full Salvation (29-36).—In those who are saved the effects are continual dependence (29). Salvation is never so complete that God can leave us to ourselves. The most perfect saint needs to be constantly saved from sin. Self-loathing (31). Pride and holiness are as wide asunder as the poles. He who is not lowly cannot be holy. Nothing so melts us into grief concerning our own sin and unworthiness as rich displays of unexpected grace. Full Satisfaction (29-30).—"There is no want to them that fear Him" (Psa. xxxiv. 9). All needed blessings are obedient to his "call." But there are results upon others as well (33-35). An individual life quickened and filled with the Spirit soon tells upon others (Jno vii. 37-39). A community of people thus blessed makes a powerful impression upon "the desolate places" around. If the promised effects are not realised is it not because the necessary condition is not fulfilled? The world may oppose and persecute, but it cannot ignore a living, Spirit-filled Church.

The Condition on which all Depends (37-38).—What is it? Some difficult, almost impossible thing, that can only be expected of the most eminent saints of God? "I will be inquired of"—that is all. Earnest, united, expectant prayer. Any Church that will fulfil this condition will find these promises true. Why should Pentecost be regarded as special and never to be repeated? What other church has ever spent ten days in quiet prayerful waiting upon God for the Holy Spirit's power? The conclusion is irresistible,—we "have not because we ask not" (Jas. iv. 2). The desire for blessing should be intensified by the manner in which the promise is given. Picture the highways around Jerusalem at the time of the Passover Feast, when multitudes of the very pick of the flocks of Israel are being taken to the Temple for sacrifice. Is not that a promise of large increase of holy, consecrated men? God says "Inquire, and I will do that for you."

Note also that concerning Israel's future the matter is not left doubtful. This is one of the "I will's" of God, and is as sure to be fulfilled as the rest. (See Psa. cii. 13-22; Zech. xii. 10-14.)

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a seven-days' mission at Launceston, Cornwall.

Hanley.—Rev. G. M. Smith has held a week's mission in this busy town, with encouraging results.

Upwell.—Rev. J. Edmunds, of the Pastors' College, has concluded an evangelistic mission here, and many cheering results were granted.

Nottingham.—A ten days' mission has just been held in Canaan Church by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker. Men and women have professed to decide for Christ and Christians have received blessing.

Mr. Ned Wright is preaching for eight consecutive Sunday evenings in the Assembly Rooms, Friar-street, Reading. Helpers are needed to point the anxious to Christ.

Rev. R. Leitch has been holding a ten days' mission at Dudley, and apart from the special services in the Presbyterian Church, has been visiting some of the large works and factories and addressing the employés.

Lydd.—Evangelistic meetings have been started here by the local Y.M.C.A., the services being held after the various places of worship are closed. Prayer is desired that this new departure will prove fruitful.

Rev. F. T. Hallowes concluded, on Sunday last, an eight days' mission at Trinity Congregational Church, Birmingham. Believers were greatly edified, and many evidences of the Lord's presence and blessing have been granted.

Mr. James Neech, of the Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a fortnight's mission in the Railway Mission Hall, Wisbech. Sinners have been saved, and the afternoon Bible-readings were very helpful to believers.

Wolverhampton.—A successful series of evangelistic services has just been held in this great manufacturing centre by Rev. John More. Much interest appears to have been awakened, and it is believed blessing has been granted.

Aylesbury.—Mr. William Forbes gave last week an address at the Assembly Hall. Mr. Day is now conducting services in this hall, in connection with the Bucks Evangelistic Mission. The gatherings are encouraging, and conversions are professed nearly every night.

Mr. J. Brown, of the Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a three weeks' mission at St. Barnabas' Church, Blackburn. The afternoon meetings for believers were well attended, and the gatherings in the evenings very large. Believers have been blessed, and over 330 have professed conversion. Prayer is asked for a mission now being held at Bembridge, Isle of Wight, by the same evangelist.

Mr. J. W. Moodie conducted a series of meetings at Wishaw, N.B., during the first fortnight in February. The meetings were held in the Town Hall and in the Baptist Chapel, and were largely attended. Mr. Moodie preached the Gospel faithfully, making the Bible itself illustrate the great truths of sin and salvation. As a proof that the Word was approved of God there was not one night without manifest fruit.

Ireland.—A ten-days' series of Gospel services has just been held by Rev. James Kirkwood in the Methodist Church, Wexford, and at the closing meeting about forty persons testified to blessing received during the mission; a fortnight's series of similar services has been held in the First Presbyterian Church, Magherafelt, by Rev. W. G. Strahan and others, and was largely attended. Mr. William E. Lawson has held a ten-days' Gospel mission in Ballyfarnon, co. Roscommon, which has resulted in much good.

High Wycombe.—An evangelistic mission has been held here by Mr. William Sampson, the Cornish Evangelist. On Sunday afternoon a men's meeting was numerously attended, and at the evening meeting many entered the inquiry-room, and sought the Saviour. Throughout the mission there has been a manifestation of power, and it is asserted that many who came to mock, criticise, or to be amused, remained to pray. Several noted drunkards have been reclaimed, and many pleasing cases of backsliders being restored have occurred.

The Helpless Blind.—For three years past efforts have been made in Brighton to maintain a lending library of books, embossed on the Braille system, for the benefit of persons afflicted with the terrible calamity of blindness. A minimum expenditure of £10 per annum would give a liberal supply of the required books, but much more than this could be well spent in the scheme.—Donations will be received at D. B. Friend and Co.'s Library, 77, Western-road, Brighton.

"OUR COLONY OVER-SEA!"

300 Trained Lads (our First Party this year) will (D.V.) "Swarm Off" from our various "Homes" for Canada, on March 17th. Of this number about 70 will be bound for our New Industrial Farm, Manitoba, the remainder for Ontario.

Dear Friends,

After the trials and struggles of another Winter's toil amid the Slums of London, I am now ready to commend to GOD'S care my first party of Young Emigrants for this year, consisting of about 300 dear Young Lads, trained and tested in our Workshops and Homes, many of whom have undoubtedly yielded their own selves to the Lord and have for some time been actively engaged in His service.

The prospect before my Boys is, indeed, a bright and hopeful one, for already I have received more demands for them from Farmers in excellent positions in Canada than would suffice to engage this whole party.

Although the OUTFIT given to each Young Emigrant is ample in quantity and of the best quality (experience having taught me the prime importance of this), yet, by the exercise of rigid economy in all the arrangements, I find that £9 per boy entirely covers the whole cost incurred in settling him happily in Ontario, after which no further expenditure will be needed on his behalf, except that involved in some measure of supervision for awhile.

£54 will therefore give Six Boys a start in life, or £108 will do the same for Twelve Boys.

To send great Youths (of 17 to 20 years of age) to Manitoba is more expensive, a railway journey of 2000 miles further West having to be paid for, which involves an additional cost of £2, or in all £11 per head; but the greater advantages of placing these big fellows from our Labour House there, rather than in Ontario, are well worth paying the higher rate to secure.

£66, therefore, will give a start in life to Six Lads sent to Manitoba: £132 will do the same for Twelve Lads; or £220 for Twenty Lads.

No truer, wiser method has ever been devised for effecting four desirable objects than this scheme of well-organised Christian Emigration of trained and tested Young People, for

1*st.—It* saves the boy, delivering him for ever from the perils of his former lot.

2*nd.—It* relieves our over-crowded cities, the labour markets of which are hopelessly congested, and in which the struggle for existence is growing fiercer every day.

3*rd.—It* supplies Canada with her greatest need: additions to her population of the choicest materials—honest, industrious, and piously-trained Youths, who, by God's blessing, will grow into the successful Citizens of the near future.

4*th.—It* provides room for the immediate admission to the Homes of as many fresh cases, to be rescued from the streets and lanes of our great Cities all over the land.

It will greatly strengthen my hands if readers of THE CHRISTIAN are led this year, as on former occasions, to manifest prayerful and practical sympathy with the present undertaking, and so to give a real start to these Young Fellows rescued from utter destitution and evil surroundings, and carefully trained for years or months past in our "Homes." Our need is pressingly urgent, for the time for preparation is very short. Elsewhere will be found an announcement of the Farewell Meeting at Exeter Hall on the 15th March.

I hope during the present year to be permitted to place out at least 600 trained children in the Dominion, far from the squalor and wretchedness of the East End of London. Last year I sent out 422 such.

Gifts of £9 or £11, or, indeed, of any sums, however small, in aid of our Emigration Fund will be gratefully received and acknowledged by

Temperance Notes.

The new patrol waggons to clear the streets of Liverpool of drunken people will contain compartments for eight inebriates.

Mr. W. S. Caine, speaking on Tuesday week at Liverpool, delivered an impeachment of moderate drinking which, for simple and yet severe logic, could hardly have been more perfect.

A very successful Juvenile Temple, consisting of eighty members, called the "Gordon Crusaders," is working and meeting in the same room at Greenwich in which General Gordon used to teach his boys.

The fifty-fifth annual meeting of the Bath Temperance Society was held on a recent Monday at the Guildhall. Mr. Isaac Pitman presided, and the hon. secretary, Mr. W. Manchip, read an encouraging report.

The National Temperance Society of America has memorialised Congress to appropriate no more money to the World's Fair unless the same shall be closed on Sundays, and no intoxicating liquor shall be sold on the grounds.

"You may convince me," said a talented votary of drink, "that it is bad for my body, bad for my soul, and bad for my pocket; but there is one thing you cannot convince me of—you cannot convince me that I do not like it."

The Temperance Festival—one of the great gatherings of the year at York—has just been held in the Great Exhibition Hall, addresses being delivered by Canon Barker, Mr. C. Fenwick, M.P., Rev. J. Jackson Wray, and others.

The art of imitating brandy distilled from grapes is now so perfect that only by analysis can it be discovered to be an imposture. An enterprising Frenchman is said to have succeeded in producing delicious wines without any grapes at all.

Relief, the organ of the Workhouse Drink Reform League, declares that a pension of four shillings weekly for nearly six hundred paupers could be procured with the sum now wasted every year upon alcoholic stimulants in pauper institutions.

One little child brought her father to a temperance meeting. He had been a great drunkard for the first few years of his married life, and on one occasion he spent £100 in six weeks. He signed the pledge, and appears likely to keep it. Truly a little child shall lead them!

The Boston Traveller, in an article on "Moderate Drinking," says:—"We feel it our duty to say distinctly that no agency is so effectually baffling the efforts to save the young men of our land from physical and moral death as is fashionable drinking, assumed to be moderate."

Dr. Bull, one of the most eminent surgeons and physicians in New York city, in addressing a medical class of the New York Hospital, on "The Use of Alcohol in Cases of Pneumonia," claimed that sixty-four per cent. of pneumonia patients receiving alcoholic medicines died.

The Committee of the Band of Hope Union have, through their President, Mr. George Williams, addressed a letter to the School Board for London, calling attention to the importance of giving to the children in elementary schools fuller and more specific teaching as to the nature and physiological effects of alcohol than has hitherto been provided.

Sir George Trevelyan, M.P., speaking at a political meeting last week, said, that at Bristol there were 287 public-houses in the hands of one person, while at Blackburn one person held 132, and in Liverpool 143. In St. Margaret's parish, Westminster, there were thirty-eight public-houses owned by two brewers. It was necessary that a reform should be brought about.

Under the School Scheme of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, since 1889, 6770 illustrated lectures, on the nature and physiological effects of alcohol, have been given in day schools; 742,000 children having attended, from whom 261,000 written reports of the lectures have been received. Similar work has been done under the auspices of the National Temperance League and other temperance bodies.

The Temperance Movement is gaining a hold amongst French Christians. The French organisation is known as "La Société de la Croix Bleu," and the earnest secretary is M. Maillet. A section has been formed at the Rue St. Denis, and meetings are held monthly. At one of these recently the large hall was crowded, and some forty pledges were taken. At Rouen also, amongst a community of working men, the movement has gained a remarkable hold. Though France is often spoken of as a temperate nation, it is all too apparent that the drinking of ardent spirits, and especially of the deadly absinthe, is working havoc amongst the masses.

At the annual meeting held last week of the Dundee Temperance Union, Rev. J. E. Houston said that to him it seemed there were two things necessary for them to do. The first was to endeavour and get the Church to shake itself free from all complicity in the drink curse, and if there were those who spoke with no bated breath on the one side, it became them to speak with no bated breath on the other side. A man in his congregation informed him the other day that he was endeavouring to drink himself to death. That man's name was on his communion-roll. He tried to see him on the Saturday night, but failing in this, he went on the Sabbath evening, and found him, if not in a state of delirium tremens, almost bordering upon it.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Bishop Oxenden died on the 22nd ult. at Biarritz. His life-work belonged largely to the past.

It is announced that £32,000 has been raised towards the £50,000 required for the Birmingham Bishopric Fund.

Rev. F. N. Eden, so well known in connection with the Niger Mission, has accepted the vicarage of Belvedere, Kent.

In the church at Hatcham, associated so sadly for years with the extremest ritualism, Rev. W. H. Stone is now carrying on a valuable and faithful work.

It is intended to revive the practice of holding an annual public meeting in connection with the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, no such gathering having taken place for twenty-five years.

Mr. J. Inskip, speaking the other night at Hatcham, showed how England had for forty years been going backward to Rome. Unless God graciously interposed a serious state of things must ere long be manifest.

The Leeds Mission is said to be one of the best organised ever held. Five bishops and eighty special preachers have taken part. The Bishops of Ripon and Wakefield have paid daily visits to the great workshops and manufactories of the town.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Edwin Legg has accepted the pastorate of the Church at Arundel.

An eight days' mission has been held at Hundon by Rev. W. Courtnall, of Sudbury, Suffolk.

Rev. T. Mann, after fifty years' service as secretary of the Wilts and East Somerset Association, has just resigned his post.

New Court Chapel, as shown by its manual for 1892, continues a centre of earnest thorough-going work. The pastor, Rev. W. Pierce, has been greatly encouraged during the past year.

House-to-house visitation is being carried on very thoroughly and systematically in Bradford, and it is reported that comparatively few sceptics have been found, the vast majority being simply indifferent.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have received a copy of the diary kept by Rev. J. Parker, their missionary, who had to escape from Mongolia during the recent rebellion, and, after running many hazards, arrived safely at Tientsin.

The Yorkshire Congregational Union are endeavouring to secure Rev. W. H. Skinner, of Lodge-street Church, Bristol, as organising superintendent of two churches at Middlesborough, which are to be worked on the lines of the Forward Movement.

Sir William M'Gregor, in his annual report on the administration of affairs in New Guinea, bears testimony to the value of the schools of the London Missionary Society at Port Moresby, and to "the invaluable work performed by this mission in educating the natives."

The Welsh Weekly, referring to the criticisms on the action of the committee in appointing a secretary of the Union, remarks: "A prophecy of future woe is declared, on the ground that the action of the committee is unconstitutional. The important facts are overlooked that this office has been vacant for a long period of time; that the organisations of the denomination are suffering in consequence; that the churches are impatient of this long delay; that Mr. Woods is an excellent man, with an excellent record; and that the churches will soon forgive and forget all the wrong-doings of the committee if, as is sincerely hoped, they have succeeded in making a wise appointment."

BAPTIST.

A week's mission has just been concluded by Rev. J. T. Mateer at Moulton.

The North Wales Prayer Union has held special and profitable meetings at Nantmawr, Buckley.

Mr. D. Thompson, of the Pastors' College, has been welcomed as the minister of Bunyan Church, Norbiton.

The manual just issued by the church at Queen's-road Chapel, Coventry, exhibits a great variety of agencies vigorously worked and liberally sustained.

Pastor Brown's annual "Thankoffering Day" resulted in £491 8s. As the Tabernacle was opened on the 22nd February, 1872, the work has now entered on its twenty-first year.

The manual of Graham-street, Birmingham (Rev. W. Hacknen, pastor), describes the various branches of church work during the last twelve months to have been generally encouraging.

At the annual meeting of the church at Enfield (pastor, Rev. George W. White), held on Monday week, it was reported that ninety-one persons had been received into membership during the year.

Rev. J. H. Miles, of Cardiff (formerly of Whitland, Pembrokeshire), has accepted the pastorate of the English Baptist Church at Porthcawl, and intends commencing his ministry there the first Sunday in March.

Rev. J. J. Brown, in the twenty-ninth year of his pastorate at Cirencester, has intimated his intention of retiring from the ministry in May next. By that time he will have seen forty-four years' service, first in mission work, and then, for thirty-six years, in two pastorates.

It will be remembered that Rev. T. Lardner, who recently resigned the pastorate at Battersea-park Tabernacle, where he has laboured for the past fifteen years as a faithful and devoted minister of the Gospel, is still suffering from the effects of an amputation of his left arm some three years ago, caused by being thrown from a vehicle, which followed a dislocation of the same limb by an accident two years previously, entailing many months of severe and acute suffering through repeated but necessary operations. A few friends desire to give practical expression to their esteem and affection, and to show their appreciation of the good service rendered by him to the Master's cause, by subscribing for some suitable testimonial, and a committee has been appointed to carry out this object, Rev. V. J. Charlesworth, Stockwell Orphanage, being amongst the co-treasurers.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Henry Norwell, of Dunblane, has accepted the call to Islington Church.

Trinity Church, Canonbury, appears to be steadily progressing in various directions.

The work of the church at Grange-road, Birkenhead, has during the past year greatly prospered.

The earnest work carried on at Silvertown by Rev. W. A. McKee and others appears to be building up a strong church.

At the annual meeting of Camden-road congregation Mr. Clark spoke of the important mission work carried on at Leighton-road, Kentish-town, by that congregation.

The annual examinations under the Synod's scheme for the Higher Instruction of Youth are fixed for March 21, 22, 23, and 24, and cover portions of the Old and New Testaments, the History of English Presbyterianism, and the Art of Teaching.

Mr. Robert Thomson read a paper, at a recent Conference in Hull, on the "New Testament Elder," an office not connected with the priestly service of the temple, but with the worship of the synagogue, from which it was taken by the Holy Ghost and put on a permanent footing in the Church. The sole spiritual office in the Church is that of elder, which is identical with that of bishop. The special function of the elder is to rule, though he may also teach if he possess the necessary gifts. The qualifications of an elder are laid down in Scripture with much minuteness.

METHODIST.

A promising men's Sunday afternoon Bible-class has been formed at Market Rason.

The anniversary of the Central Mission, Leeds, just held, has proved most successful.

The English Calvinistic Methodist chapel at Treorchy will be opened next Sunday.

Rev. S. H. Hall is conducting deeply interesting Sunday afternoon services for men in Bradford.

The first Foreign Missionary meeting in connection with the West London Mission, held on Friday week, was addressed by Revs. David Hill and W. Macdonald.

Mr. Raymond Preston, a Joyful News evangelist, has been conducting successful mission services at Risca. On a recent Sunday over forty persons professed their anxiety to lead a Christian life.

At a conference of working men, convened on Monday week in the Wesleyan Chapel, Middlesborough (in the heart of the iron district), the men (iron-workers) declared that Sunday labour at the steel works and blast furnaces could be dispensed with.

Since October last the West Parade Mission Band (Wakefield) has conducted services on Sunday evenings in the Ragged School for people who attend no place of worship; and the workers, while intensely anxious for the salvation of souls, take pains to let it be seen that they care for the bodies of the people also.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

There are twenty Bands of Mercy in Glasgow.

The United Presbyterian Church raised upwards of £41,000 for foreign missions last year.

The semi-jubilee of the ministry of Rev. W. Reid, of the Free Church, Airdrie, on Tuesday week, was an interesting occasion. Principal Rainy, Professor Lindsay, and others delivered congratulatory speeches.

During the past year the Carr Night Refuge in Dundee has sheltered a total of 10,280 persons. Many of the cases of real rescue effected by the devoted workers are of a remarkable and even romantic character.

Mr. J. Campbell White has been elected hon. president of the Glasgow branch of the National Anti-Gambling League. Branches have been formed at Ayr and Paisley, and a conference is to be held in Aberdeen early this month.

General Booth had a reception in Glasgow from his Scotch followers on Wednesday last week. There was a parade through the centre of the city, an afternoon banquet in the City Hall, and an evening mass meeting in St. Andrew's Hall.

After a year's work in Glasgow Rev. John Robertson finds increasing acceptance with the people. At the last three Communions at his church in Gurbals the accessions were 150, 250, and 170. Even at noon on Sundays the great National Hall is crowded.

There are two professional vacancies to fill in the Free Church colleges in Edinburgh and Glasgow, through the resignations of Principal Douglas and Professor Thomas Smith. The retirement of the venerable Principal Cairns, of the United Presbyterian College, is referred to in our leading columns.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A working-girls' club has been established in Newtownwards, co. Down, under the auspices of the Marchioness of Londonderry.

The annual meeting of the Brown-street Sunday and day schools, one of the oldest institutions in Belfast, was held on Tuesday week. The schools were reported as having now 1,246 pupils.

At a largely-attended meeting of ministers and laymen held last Friday night in Belfast, it was resolved to establish a Methodist Council for the city, with the object of promoting social, moral, and religious work, and encouraging spiritual aggressive efforts.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At King's-heath, Birmingham, Mr. E. N. Cooke, aged sixty-nine, for many years a devoted mission worker; at Eshott Hall, Felton, Northumberland, on Sunday, 21st ult., Mr. E. M. Bainbridge, J.P., aged seventy-five, a true and faithful helper of the Lord's workers; at Wellingborough, on Wednesday, 24th ult., Rev. Thomas Bromage, the president of the Wesleyan Reform Union; at Widdrington, Northumberland, on Saturday, 20th, Rev. Matthew Edwards, aged eighty-seven, beloved and honoured as self-denying and faithful labourer in the Gospel; at Blackburn, on Tuesday, 23rd, very suddenly, Rev. J. Ogmore Davies, Congregational minister; at Saintfield, co. Down, Rev. Samuel Hamilton, senior Presbyterian minister; at Ballinderry, co. Antrim, Mr. Alex. Addison, an earnest Presbyterian elder.

THE STARVING AND HOMELESS POOR OF LONDON.

One of the most difficult problems of this or any other age is how to help the Poor without pauperising them, or being imposed upon. Both of these difficulties are now easily avoided, thanks to General Booth's "Darkest England and Way Out" Scheme. Any generous or philanthropic resident may now effectually help the homeless and destitute without giving them money, which, alas! too often is spent in drink.
FOOD TICKETS varying in value from ½d. to 2d. may be purchased, which entitle the bearer to Food of the value marked on the ticket.

PEPSONYMIN TONIC

THIS is a Genuine Remedy. It cures INDIGESTION. This is not mere assertion. It is a fact. Experience has proved it. DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., says:—"The many martyrs to the ignorant use of unsuitable and crude drugs will benefit largely from its use." MRS. HENRY KING-PARKES, F.R.S.A., says:—"I have had its efficacy tested in several severe cases of dyspepsia, and invariably with beneficial results." One patient says:—"I have derived more benefit from Pepsonymin Tonic than from any of the remedies so much advertised." Another writes:—"The headache, dizziness, and drowsiness have entirely, and, I hope, permanently left me." Try it. Ask your Chemist for it. If he does not keep it in stock, ask him to order it for you. If difficult to obtain, order direct from FRANCIS SPITE & Co., Ltd., St. ENOCH SQUARE, GLASGOW, who will send it post free for 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., or 4s. 6d. per bottle. Notices.

A correspondent would like to know where the hym may be found which begins:—

"Jesus, no tongue can ever tell
All that Thou art to me,
The fulness of the joy and peace
My spirit finds in Thee."

Also, who is the publisher of the "Invalid's Hymn-Book," if it is still to be obtained?

Westbourne-grove Y.M.C.A.

The 6th annual gathering of the Westbourne-grov branch of the Y.M.C.A. (172, Queen's-road) was hel on Thursday last at the Paddington Baths. A brie extract was read from the annual report, showing th branch to be prospering and free from debt. Letter were also read from members who had gone into th foreign mission field, one at Cape Colony and anothe at St. Vincent, West Indies. Mr. J. D. Allcroft, th chairman, in opening the meeting, spoke with muc appreciation of the large gathering before him, an said that such an assembly greatly cheered the heart of all workers in the cause of the Y.M.C.A.

Rev. F. B. Meyer desired to address especially th young men present on the subject of moral and spir tual strength. The Christian Church ought to be gymnasium, not a hospital. The first condition o such strength was purity, such as Tennyson had se before us in "Sir Galahad." The second was goo food for mind and soul. The value of the Bible i this direction must be tested by personal experienc and by its effect upon character.

Rev. E. A. Stuart delivered a cordial and helpfu address on the dangers and difficulties which woul beset the young Christian in the search for practica faith. The speaker dwelt particularly upon th temptation of the patriarch Abraham, enforcin lessons of self-sacrifice and perseverance, with man telling illustrations and anecdotes.

A Touching Trait.

"OUR OLD BOYS' NEW YEAR'S GIFT" for this year amounts to £272, as against

1889	-	£108.	1891	-	£204, increase £56.
1890	-	£148, increase £40.	1892	-	£272, „ £68.

Thus in four years these rescued Street-Arabs have sent OUT OF THEIR OWN POCKETS £732 in support of their "Old Home," and to "help other lads out."

We are now preparing to send out 120 boys, if possible, this Spring. Nothing will delight our "Old Boys" more than to learn that their self-denying gratitude has moved Christian friends in the Old Country to give other poor boys a helping hand. Any kind messages of appreciation and encouragement to them I will gladly insert in the next number of "The Home Budget" we send them. A copy will be sent to any friend wishing for one."

The cost of placing each boy far away from the wretchedness and temptations of London street-life in the healthy, self-reliant environment of a Canadian homestead is only £10. Particulars and photograph of special boy thus benefited will be sent to donor.

Who will help us in this interesting work? Even the smallest token of Christian interest will be gratefully received.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Bds., Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

A Review from The Baptist Magazine:—"We have here the large verbal familiarity with Scripture; the raciness of style; the profuseness and aptness of illustration; and the intense spiritual earnestness—which are always to be expected when Mr. Moody opens his lips to speak or takes his pen to write."

"The word 'Gospel' is very little understood: few words in the English language are so much misunderstood. We have heard a great deal about it; but a great many people do not know what it is. Man looks on the Gospel as bad news; but it is good news, glad tidings of great joy."—Extract.

A Review from The Sunday School Chronicle:—"Beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift-book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from their perusal without feeling consciously strengthened of God, and inspired afresh for a godly life. Sunday-school teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the Sacred Word."

A Review from The Sword and Trowel:—"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. Meyer would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical. Oh, that hundreds of our younger men gave signs of such real godliness, such true devotion, and such clear knowledge of the Gospel as we see in the author!"

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. 7th Thousand.

Cloth bev. boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

Joseph: Beloved—Hated—Exalted.

With Nine Illustrations, Specially Engraved for this Volume.

A Review from The Preachers' Magazine:—"The great charm of this very beautiful monograph is its clear setting forth of the way in which the life of Joseph mirrors, to use the author's own phrase, the life of Jesus. This idea is not at all unduly pressed, but it runs through the volume, and adds immensely to its homiletic and devotional value."

THIRTY-NINTH SERIES OF CASES.
CASE FOR THE WEEK.
CASE of PHTHISIS with CONGESTION of the LUNGS.
Mr. H—— H——, of Alcester, wrote me first about three years ago. He had lost a sister in Consumption. His illness commenced with a cold, which continued for five months, by which time it had developed into decided disease. His symptoms were accompanied with extreme depression. The expectoration was dark and profuse, with occasional blood. There was constant difficulty of breathing, coughing, with sharp, frequent pain; the strength had failed for about three months; there had been loss of flesh in every part of the body.
The patient commenced my treatment according to my directions, and shortly after came to Coombe Lodge. On inquiry as to his previous history, it appeared that his constitution had been weakened by rheumatic fever in Africa, some years before this, and then by a severe attack of pleuro-pneumonia. On examination, his right lung was clearly touched with phthisis, the upper part was breaking down, and the base much congested. Instructions were given to continue as advised, and take also a simple mixture for diarrhœa.
The patient wonderfully improved, and entirely recovered his health; after which I lost sight of him until recently. Writing me on the case of a friend he says:—"I am quite well, thanks to your very valuable medicine. I was given up by two doctors before I applied to you."—H—— H——, Alcester, Warwick.

Liver Complaints Understood.

A sluggish liver is recognised by a dull pain between the shoulders, or in either shoulder-blade; inability to lie on the left side, muscular pains about the loins and limbs, nausea, giddiness, thirst, drowsiness, yellow or white-coated tongue, flatulency, dry, harsh, yellow skin; biliousness, yellowness of the eyes, with gradually-increasing bad health. Nothing necessitates so much absence from business, cessation of ordinary duties, and disinclination to resort to amusements as a torpid, inactive liver. There is no medicine that so speedily restores this organ (however gravely or chronically affected) as Guy's Tonic. Congestion and other biliary derangements are cured with unerring certainty. The complete and permanent restoration resulting from a short continuance of this valuable remedy causes universal wonderment, a cure invariably taking place although all other remedies have been used without benefit.

We invite the careful attention of our readers to the following statement, told in the very words of a real correspondent, who has a local habitation and a name:—

Albert-st., Wednesbury, Staffs., Sept. 18, 1891.

Dear Sirs,—Having suffered from severe liver complaint for the last three years, with pain in the back and mental depression, I have tried nearly everything without benefit; but after taking three doses of Guy's Tonic the pains in the back have entirely gone. I now feel as I have not done before for years. I shall recommend it wherever I go.

Yours truly, J. H. Kight.

THE REV. CHARLES LEACH, D.D.,

writes on February 10, 1892, to the proprietors of Guy's Tonic:—"I have myself used some of your medicine with considerable benefit, and believe it to be a really excellent Tonic."

TO ANY ONE DESIRING to test our remedies, we will send, securely packed in a special box, a bottle of Guy's Tonic, together with a free sample box of Guy's Fruit Pills and complete "Guide to Digestion," containing simple instructions as to the Guy's Tonic Treatment, post paid, for 2s. 9d. Address all letters to Guy's Tonic Company, 4, Ludgate-circus, London, E.C. Guy's Tonic is sold retail of all Chemists at 2s. 9d. per bottle, and Guy's Fruit Pills at 1s. 1½d. per box.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY, since this work began, 33,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual pressure, and from present appearances a very hard season is apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary; the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, office of The Christian.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon wrote of this book (see Sword and Trowel, March, 1892):—"We sorrow that the pen of our dear friend, Mr. Haig Miller, will no more write for his Lord upon pages scanned by mortal eye. Ah, he could write! He had been a mighty reader, and a great taker of notes, and so his writing was like a fountain which flowed from an inexhaustible fulness within. We never enjoyed any kind of reading more than that which he produced; he was a master of the art of simple, touching, illustrative book-talking. We would have all men read this, his last book, they desire peace of mind and joy of heart."

THE STARVING AND HOMELESS POOR OF LONDON.

One of the most difficult problems of this or any other age is how to help the Poor without pauperising them, or being imposed upon. Both of these difficulties are now easily avoided, thanks to General Booth's "Darkest England and Way Out" Scheme. Any generous or philanthropic resident may now effectually help the homeless and destitute without giving them money, which, alas! too often is spent in drink.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Mr. William Taylor, the navvy evangelist.

Well might Luther say that justification by faith is the article or test of a standing or a falling church. Assurance of justification is fatal to priestly power, and the exercise of priestly power is fatal to the enjoyment of peace with God. Justification in regard to sanctification is not as the vestibule to the inner apartments, but as the foundation to the building; and anything that could sap the foundation must be jealously guarded against.

The function of an accuser belongs to Law; but we are "not under Law, but under Grace." An accuser laying charges against an accused person means that a process of judgment is being carried on; but "he that believeth shall not come into judgment." A judge upon the judgment-seat listening to an accusation implies possible condemnation of the accused; but "there is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." An accusation laid against a believer, before God the Judge of all, implies the possibility of the death-sentence, for "the wages of sin is death"; but "He hath put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself"; we "have been baptized into his death"; we "are risen with Christ"; "our life is hid with Christ in God."

Sin in the believer is not dealt with at the bar of judgment, but in the Father's house. God's Advocate, the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, is not exercising legal functions toward the saints on earth, nor is Jesus Christ the Righteous, our Advocate with the Father, pleading as a barrister in a court of justice in opposition to an accuser accusing us before God day and night; for, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."

When Jesus had cried "It is finished," and, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," no further indignity was permitted to be perpetrated even upon his dead body. Not a bone was broken; loving hands took it down from the cross and buried it, in a grave where none other had been laid; honourable counsellors anointed it with abundant and costly spices, and angels guarded it until the resurrection morning. Is it possible or credible that God is allowing his Son, the Prince of life, at his right hand, to be insulted by the presence of Satan, the accuser of the brethren, accusing before God day and night, those whom He has justified by his blood? Is not such an idea foreign and antagonistic to the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God, by which life and immortality have been brought to light?

With deference to those of our brethren, preachers of the Gospel, beloved in Christ, who may not have been thinking of the accuser of the brethren from these points of view, we submit that the supposition that Satan is accusing Christian believers before God day and night is incompatible with the Gospel of the grace of God—is a piece of Law brought into the Gospel; and that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

The root of Sacerdotalism consists in the spiritual power supposed to be possessed by "the Clergy" over "the Laity." But Peter calls the people the clergy, and thus exhorts the elders:—

> Feed the flock of God, which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint but willingly, not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. Neither as being lords over God's heritage [God's cleros—God's clergy], but being ensamples of the flock.

So far from the clergy being an order distinct from the so-called laity, it is the flock of God who are the clergy—God's clergy, over whom the elders are not to "lord it" (R.V.). Matthew Henry thus comments on the passage in 1 Pet. v. 2, 3:—

> These poor, dispersed, suffering Christians were the flock of God, redeemed to God by the Great Shepherd, living in holy love and communion according to the will of God. They are also dignified with the title of God's heritage or clergy; his peculiar lot, chosen out of the common multitude for his own people, to enjoy his special favour, and to do Him special service.

Compare with this the words of the Lord Jesus, Luke xxii. 24-27. According to Scripture, there are no priests on earth, except as all God's people are priests (1 Pet. ii. 5; Rev. i. 5); there are no clergy, except as all God's people are his clergy, his heritage, his peculiar lot. This was strongly insisted on very early after the Revival of 1859. It needs to be emphasized now, when all Protestant Christians should put away from themselves all pretensions which savour of Rome. The title "Rev." and the term "clergy" may be convenient as indicative of occupation, but as involving spiritual dominance they are of Papal not to say Pagan origin.

A well-known Roman Catholic writer, Mr. W. S. Lilly, speaking on Tuesday week at a Catholic Reunion in the Town Hall, Birmingham, devoted a long address to "The Temporal Power of the Pope," endeavouring, as he said, to meet the objections felt by Protestants to the restoration of the temporal sovereignty. He maintained that the civil princedom > has throughout the history of the church (of Rome) proved the bulwark of Western Christianity, and has prevented it from sinking into the degradation of the Eastern Church....An effective civil sovereignty—a sovereignty which assures the Pontiff's political and financial independency—is as necessary as ever for the peaceful and complete discharge of his œcumenical mission.

Strong as the case may seem (from the speaker's point of view) for the importance of the temporal power to the Romish Church, we gather that Mr. Lilly is altogether without hope of any such miracle being wrought as would be required for its restoration. Nor do we think that any who recall the abuses of the past and the cry of the Romans for deliverance from the Papal rule, will admit that its restoration is either desirable or possible.

On the pages of history few lessons are writ more plain and clear than Rome's undying hostility to and merciless crushing of freedom of conscience. Yet Mr. Lilly makes the astounding claim that—

> An effective civil sovereignty is necessary for the free and perfect exercise of the sovereign Pontiff's œcumenical office—that it is inseparably bound up with the spiritual freedom which, if conscience has any rights at all, is the God-given heritage of every man and woman....It is his (the Pope's) special office throughout the ages to bear witness to the truth, and specially to the supreme truths of man's moral freedom and moral responsibility.

Rome posing as a witness to moral freedom, a conservator of liberty of conscience! Where, and how? By rack and gibbet, torture and massacre, wherever her power has reached, she has ruthlessly destroyed those who dared to think for themselves; and yet in face of these historic facts, this bold advocate speaks of her as guaranteeing "spiritual freedom." No one familiar with the simple recitals of history, or with the experiences of missionaries in Papal lands, can yield a moment's credence to any such plea.

Father Eager, from one of whose sermons preached at Liverpool, for the enlightenment of Protestants, we quoted in the last issue of The Christian, has since given utterance to his views on the subject whether Catholics may read the Bible; and in protesting against what he termed "the honest opinion held by Protestants that the Bible was a sealed book to Papists of all classes, and that the Roman Church feared and hated the Scriptures because they contained the complete refutation of her errors," made, of course, the usual defence of "interpretation," as opposed to the Protestant claim to "private judgment." He went on, however, to exhort Catholics to the more frequent reading of Holy Writ, on the ground that "the salutary practice would result in a confirmation of their faith, a greater facility in dealing with honest religious inquiry, and would prove an antidote against the pernicious errors, the decay of faith, the intellectual immoralities and spirit of worldliness which pervade the present age."

This advice we can heartily endorse, and we, therefore, give it a wider circulation than the preacher anticipated, especially as we are satisfied that students of the Word of God will find there the Divinely-appointed way of salvation, as distinguished from the misleading "sacramental system," for which, in a previous utterance, Father Eager claimed the power of supernatural healing.

Lady Aberdeen, in the current number of The Nineteenth Century, deals with the somewhat pressing question of domestic service, especially in regard to the growing disinclination of young girls to join the class of servants. Her ladyship, of course, recognises two or three causes as potent in creating this unwillingness—the first, and, perhaps, the chief, being that of the greater freedom of other occupations—a freedom which, alas! only too often is an unhealthy one; and the second being the "great gulf" between the employers and the employed in a large household. It is not reassuring to find Lady Aberdeen anticipates a time not far distant when the standard of domestic service will be still further lowered. Yet the best means which her ladyship believes would bring about a better state of things are not difficult of attainment—a little more consideration on the part of the master and the mistress for the servant, and a clearer recognition of the rights of the domestic to periods of leisure.

In how many houses does the servant-girl's week consist of seven days of toil, unrelieved by any kindly recognition, the Sunday being, of all others, the day for additional cooking and attendance upon guests. Setting aside the higher and spiritual considerations which are involved, what other class of workers are treated with so little consideration in regard to their claims for a Lord's Day of rest? Yet the Fourth Commandment has its definite clause as to the observance of the Sabbath being obligatory upon "thy man-servant and thy maid-servant."

Without entering in any way into party politics, we note thankfully that the London County Council Election, held on Saturday last, has resulted in the return of several members of the old Council who had drawn upon themselves not a little odium in certain quarters by reason of their courageous crusade against the immorality and other evils associated with low music-halls, theatres, and similar places of resort. Two of these—Messrs. F. N. Charrington and J. McDougall—were at the head of the poll in their respective divisions, while a third—Mr. W. C. Parkinson—has been returned by a good majority. Our friend, Mr. W. J. Orsman, was also at the head of the poll in Haggerston. Certainly some have been elected who cannot be welcomed from a Christian point of view, but on the whole we rejoice that the cause of temperance, public morality, and the social well-being of the people seems to have gained considerably in the contest.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has amply justified its existence. In an appeal just issued, Rev. Benjamin Waugh says that since the Society got its new Act, in 1889, it has had to interfere on behalf of more than thirty thousand child victims of cruelty—in most cases very little children, a shameful proportion of them being quite babies. For almost all of these who are still living the Society has secured more food and clothes and better treatment, and for the small number still remaining whose parents are hopelessly inhuman, it has found homes either with relatives, under the power of the new Act, or in institutions. Besides London, the Society is making itself felt in eighty provincial centres, where "children's men" are at work; but not a third of the country is yet touched, and all the while the cruelties are going on, and are causing needless pain, languor, and death. An agency, at once so essentially humane and like minded with "the Friend of Little Children," ought not to ask in vain for the needful financial support. The offices of the Society are at 7, Harpur-street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

The circumstances which led to the painful sights in Vienna, where women and children and starving men have been fighting fiercely in the streets for a loaf of bread during the public distribution of food, illustrate somewhat forcibly the prayer in the Church of England Litany for forgiveness for "our ignorances." In the gay city there was an amount of utter wretchedness unequalled in but few other centres of population, yet, say the correspondents, "the better classes in Vienna had no idea till now that the distress was so great." It is to their credit that, when it is brought under their notice, they take some steps to relieve it; but must not the cry come to many, as it did to Cain, seeing that whilst they were "enjoying life," and tasting its good things, others only a few streets distant were dying of hunger?

Mr. George A. Huntley, of the China Inland Mission Station, Ch'en-ku-hsien, has collected the opinions of many medical missionaries in China regarding the protection of Europeans against the small-pox scourge. The urgent importance of missionaries being successfully vaccinated before leaving for China has often been expressed, and in the judgment of careful observers in various parts of the Empire the need was never more pressing than at present. Remarking with sorrow that some of the youngest, strongest, and most promising missionaries have been removed by the disease during recent years, Mr. Huntley gives a number of "cases," showing the serious risks of such as are unprotected by vaccination.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, M.R.C.S., the director of the Mission, writes:—

It is most desirable that the home officers of the various missionary societies should not merely recommend, but insist on all candidates being vaccinated shortly before leaving for these shores.

Other correspondents agree with this, and Dr. Randle (of Tungshin, Chefoo), adds:—

Small-pox is one of the most prevalent diseases in China, and I think of the more dangerous diseases it is the most common. It is not specially deadly in its ravages among the Chinese, but Europeans are apt to suffer considerably, mortality among them running very high. We have lost a good many valuable workers in the C.I.M. through small-pox.

The subject is of great importance, and will doubtless receive the careful attention of missionary societies and intending missionaries also.

A letter, which appears on p. 23 entitled "God's Dealings with England," is from a highly respected and very aged friend. We cannot but say, however, that we think it very dangerous to suppose that God is dealing with this or any other country upon any special principles. He was righteous in his dealings with Israel, and will be in his dealings with Britain; and in proportion to her privileges—as in every other case, individual and national—must be her responsibility. In view of Britain's national crimes, we look forward to the future with an awful sense of impending judgment.

Gen. Booth on Confession.

In reference to our note of last week we have received the following extract from General Booth's last Letter to Backsliders, with a request for publication:—

ABOUT CONFESSION.

3rd. You must confess your sin to God and before his people.

I believe in confession, but not the confessional. The honest practice may be carried too far, but that would be difficult. The sincere confession of ill-doing is profitable in several ways.

First, it is good for the soul of the one who makes it. It helps him to realise the evil of his sin, and brings it out before him in its true character. It is calculated to break up the fountain of emotion in his soul, and to lead the wrong-doer to feel how deeply he has sinned.

Secondly, it is good for those who stand by; for all who hear it. My beloved wife used to say confession is often of far more use than profession. For the husband to confess his backsliding before his wife and children is almost certain to lead some of them to Christ. For the master to acknowledge how far he has diverted from the path of rectitude before his servants is equally certain to break somebody's heart.

For the comrade of bygone days to stand up and confess his backslidings and hard feelings and hard words and suspicions and misrepresentations before his brethren, is calculated not only to bring other wanderers to do the same, but to wake up a whole corps to a sense of their own backslidings and unfaithfulness.

Then confession is pleasing and acceptable to God. If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Backslider, you must confess. I believe this stands between many wanderers and the salvation they need.

Perhaps it keeps you back from the fold, from the forgiveness of your brethren and the favour of your Father.

Now, do pride and obstinacy hinder? Put them behind you, and come out before heaven and earth with the acknowledgement of your sins. Hear David cry out, "Against thee, thee only have I sinned and done this evil in thy sight."

Oh, copy the poor Prodigal when he cries, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee and am no more worthy to be called thy son. Make me as one of thy hired servants!"

IS CONFESSION NECESSARY IN EVERY CASE?

Does any poor backslider inquire whether it is absolutely necessary that in every case he should make a public confession of his sin? I reply that I think in most cases it is the best and most useful course he can take; but where the sin has been hidden from the gaze of men and where it is honestly confessed to God, the open confession may be dispensed with; but where sin has been publicly committed, I certainly think it should be as publicly confessed.

Again, some one says, "My sin is not suitable for the public ear; it would damage the cause and dishonour the Master for it to be published on the housetops; indeed such a confession would do more harm than good." Well, my friend, tell it to your Captain or find out some officer or friend in whose heart or judgment you can confide, and tell it in the ear of that brother or sister as the case may be, but it may be necessary for you to confess in some form.

We have no wish to misrepresent the above teaching, which in the main we welcome as Scriptural and timely, and useful to everybody. We entirely agree with the statement that "where sin has been publicly committed it should be publicly confessed." If it has involved a church, it must be confessed to that church. If an individual has been wronged, confession must be made to that individual. But it will be observed that the passage from 1 John i., which speaks of confession to God, is used as if it meant confession to man, and insists upon such confession as pleasing and acceptable to God.

In the last sentence of the above quotation, it is not public but private sins which are under consideration; for public sins, as has been already shown, are to be confessed publicly. Now we think that the suggestion that into the ear of the Captain or some other friend it may be necessary to confess sins which the Holy Ghost never directs to be confessed to any other than to God, has in it, at least, the germ of Auricular Confession, and we are seeing every day how rapidly germs of Romish error develop and increase.

Having, however, submitted these remarks to "Headquarters," we append the following reply:—

We abhor what is understood by "confession," as you do, or as you would wish us to.

Every one knows that men who have grievously backslidden often seek for help from God's servants, and, seeking that help, confess the wrong they have done to others. If a man has sinned against a church, and so sinned that to confess to the church as such would perhaps bring evil and disrepute upon it, and yet being repentant, he still desires to confess to someone, who so fitting as the leader of that church to hear the wrong committed against the whole flock of God under his care? If he ought to confess to the church, why not (when such a confession may be disastrous to others) to its pastor?

You see that the confession to the individual is only suggested as an alternative to the confession to the church when unsuitable.

We have much pleasure in publishing this explanation, and frankly admit that, so understood, the words are not open to the same objection.

MISSION WORK AMONG THE BLIND.

Mrs. R. B. Pim and other Christian ladies carry on in Belfast useful and earnest work among the blind in connection with which a home was opened just over a year ago. The annual social reunion of this Mission was held lately in the Exhibition Hall, Belfast, when some four hundred poor guests, blind and guides, were present, the Mayor presiding.

Mrs. J. O. Wallace read the report, which showed that the Mission is carried on with simple trust in God; that in cases of distress money is lent (small sums), and has been honourably repaid; that the Bible woman continues her good work; that the Home, opened in February, 1891, with seven women and two children, has gone on well; that the library (Moon's type) proves most valuable; and that the weekly meetings for the blind and the evangelistic efforts have been blessed to many. The report concludes:—"Our one great desire is to be helpful both spiritually and temporarily to our blind brothers and sisters, the true way being to help them to help themselves. We commit our work and the many friends who enable us to carry it on into the care and keeping of Him who has promised, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.'"

It appears also that a warm friend of the blind offers £500 towards endowing the Home, provided an additional £2500 is raised within the year.

Addresses followed by Messrs. R. L. Hamilton, F. Green, and L. Shields, and Revs. W. Park, J. Robertson, and Dr. Watts. Full details of this interesting work may be had of Mrs. Pim, West Elmwood, Belfast.

TAKEN.

"God took him" (Genesis v. 24).

Miss Charlotte Murray's poem, written some years ago, will speak a message of peace in many homes at the present time.

"Taken:" our boy is taken
From earthly honour here,
By a loving Hand,
To a holier band,
And a nobler, wider sphere.

"Taken:" we could not give him;
We tried to hold him fast;
But it might not be:
Then in agony
We were forced to yield at last.

"Taken:" we do not murmur,
But seek to kiss the rod;
And to find it sweet
At the Saviour's feet
To behold the love of God.

"Taken:" ah, yes! God took him
To His own bright home of joy;
And our spirits yearn,
As they homeward turn,
To behold again our boy.

"Taken:" but soon in glory
We all shall meet once more,
And together raise
Glad songs of praise,
And our Father's love adore!

Is Christ's Coming Imminent?

BY HENRY VARLEY.

CONCLUSION.

It is clear that we are close to the appointed time when the words concerning Jerusalem, which closed my second paper, shall be fulfilled. How this great subject was presented by the Holy Spirit to the mind of the Church of Christ in the Apostolic days. The distinction between the Church, which is his body, and Israel's future earthly nationality, the early disciples appear scarcely to have apprehended. The Church, which is Christ's body, partakes of his Divine nature, and awaits "the manifestation of the sons of God." This takes place when the Lord descends into the air and certainly precedes, in order of time, Israel's national reinstatement and the Lord's occupation of David's throne (Rom. viii. 19 and I Thes. iv. 14-17).

THE JEW, THE GENTILE, AND THE CHURCH OF GOD.

It is melancholy how few believers intelligently understand the distinction which exists between the Jew, the Gentile, and the Church of God (1 Cor. x. 32). The future of the Church, dating from the time of the Lord's descent into the air, is to be with Him where He is, and to be like Him even in bodily glory; to be his associates, the heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ (Rom. viii. 17). These will not sin, neither can they die any more for ever.

The future of Israel is to be Christ's national and theocratic executive upon the earth, partakers, as now, of human life, sharing the knowledge of the Lord, but not members of his body nor partakers of the "Divine nature." The Church, in her completeness and glory, may well be called the Elect of God, the Bride, the Lamb's wife. Israel, on the contrary, is an earthly people with a nature human, their position being on the earth, amid great splendour of national glory. They will be "a righteous nation" and completely loyal to their Lord and King.

Israel will be reigned over by the Lord in whom, at that time, will be fulfilled the words spoken by Gabriel to Mary. "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the highest, and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of his father David; and He shall reign over the House of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke i. 32, 33).

It is certain that the Lord Jesus never yet has occupied the throne of David. In the light of Gabriel's word He must so reign. Is it written in vain: "God is not a man that He should lie; neither the son of man that He should change his mind? Hath He said and shall He not do it, or hath He spoken and shall He not make it good?" (Num. xxiii. 19). Fulfilled prophecy is a sheet-anchor to the believer in these days of the rejection of the Inspiration of the Scriptures. It is written: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away" (Luke xxi. 33).

AN IMPORTANT DISTINCTION INDICATED.

In this connection let it be carefully borne in mind that there must be no confounding of the Father's throne in the highest heaven with the sovereignty of Christ, the Son of God and King of Israel (John i. 49). See, e.g., 2 Chron. xviii. 18; Psalm xi. 4; ciii. 19; cx. 1; Matt. v. 34; Heb. i. 3; viii. 1; xii. 2; Rev. iii. 21; xx. 11.) Failure to distinguish here has proved to be as mischievous in regard to Christ's coming kingdom as the confounding of Israel with the body of Christ has been. The Word of God needs rightly dividing at all times, but especially in regard to this great question. I am anxious not to make this paper one of undue length, and can but ask my reader's careful attention to the following passages—Psalm lxxii.; Isaiah ix. 6, 7; Dan. vii. 13, 14; Zech. xiv. 9; Matt. xix. 27, 28; xx. 20, 21; Luke xxii. 28-30; Rev. iii. 21; xx. 6. The sovereignty in all these passages has relation to the earth, and to the Son, and is to be distinguished from the throne of God. The spheres of heaven and earth must not be confounded. Far from the throne of Christ on the earth being confounded with the Father's throne in heaven, the word distinctly declares that when the Son has subdued all things unto Himself, them He will deliver up the kingdom to the Father and Himself as the Son be subject to the Father, that God may be all in all. (1 Cor. xv. 24-28). Then will the Lord's prayer of faith be answered, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." To this end the competent King cometh. He cometh, He cometh to judge the earth. With righteousness shall He judge the world and the people with his truth (Psalm xcvi. 13).

THE CONFERENCE AT JERUSALEM.

Further, I note the fact that the Assembly in Jerusalem possessed the knowledge of, and were guided by, this important truth (see Acts xv. 13-18). Paul and Barnabas having spoken of their ministry among the Gentiles and the grace of God seen by them, James leads the thought of the assembly to the prophetic Scriptures, which told of the purpose and course of the Lord in regard to the Gentiles. These are his words: "Men and brethren, hearken unto me, Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name" (referring evidently to the Gentile members of the body of Christ). And to this agree the words of the prophets, "As it is written, After this I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up that the residue of men might seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles (nations) upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things" (Amos ix. 11, 12).

The order of the Lord's working is thus given: The taking out of the Gentile members of his body, the Church, in view of his coming kingdom. After this is complete the Lord returns to the earth. Observe the words, "After this I will return." And one great object of his coming again is to restore the kingdom to Israel, according to Divine purpose. Meanwhile, the earthly conditions are as God declared they would be. "The whole creation groaning and travailing in pain together until now, is waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." For this stupendous crisis heaven and earth waits (Rom. viii. 19-23). The time is at hand.

THE BITTER CRY ANSWERED.

Thank God the bitter cry of his people Israel in Russia will soon be over, and the time of Jacob's great sorrow past. The days of dark Africa are numbered, and the times of the submerged masses ready to come to an end. Darkest England and the still blacker darkness of eleven hundred millions of the heathen world await the light, the salvation, and glory of our Great King's magnificent reign. As Peter, taught of the Holy Ghost, said after Pentecost be it noted, "And God shall send Jesus, who before was preached unto you" (Acts iii. 20).

He comes to break oppression,
To set the captive free,
To take away transgression,
And rule in equity.

In conclusion, I ask my readers' attention to what with reverence I would call the commonsense of this Divine programme. The close of the times of the Gentiles finds human government and kingly authority a miserable failure. The peace of Europe and the world is not to-day worth six months' purchase. Incompetency, to use no stronger term, is the condition of every earthly potentate and Government so far as righteousness and peace are concerned. Were I asked, as a politician, the world's greatest need, I should answer, a wise and competent ruler; as a student of Scripture, I reply, "God's anointed King, the Lord Jesus Christ" (Zech. xiv. 9).

Who need fail to see that, given the supreme sovereignty of Christ as King over the whole earth, and war must cease unto the ends of the world? Given, that which is to take place when He comes, viz., the reversion of all property and power into his almighty hands, and the earth must be filled speedily with the knowledge of the Lord, and of his glory also—e.g., Let one supreme will rule the whole earth, not a ruler such as Alexander, Cæsar, or Napoleon, but "Jehovah's fellow," the Christ of God, and at once the military and naval forces which exist might be disbanded. Supremacy can have no peer or rival.

THE BLESSED AND ONLY POTENTATE.

The logic of "the position of the Great King over all the earth," is that peace must become universal, and the nations learn war no more. Then shall be fulfilled Isaiah's welcome foreview, "And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be prepared in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people, and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks, nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" (Isaiah ii. 2, 4). The oath sworn to David stands thus, "That of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh God would raise up Christ to sit on his throne" (2 Sam. vii. 13-16, 24-29; Acts ii. 30).

THE EARTH'S ANTHEM—PSALM XLVII.

Then shall the prophetic anthem of the forty-seventh Psalm girdle the whole earth, "O clap your hands all ye people, shout unto God with the voice of triumph, For the Lord most high is terrible, he is a great King over all the earth." "Sing praises to God sing praises, sing praises, unto our King, sing praises." "For God is King of all the earth; sing ye praises with understanding," In the light of these glorious words how striking is our Lord's answer to Pilate's inquiry, "Art thou a king?" (See Matt. ii. 2-11). His reply was, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I might bear witness to the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice" (John xviii. 38).

How powerfully does the Apostle vindicate the truth of Israel's coming reinstatement to national pre-eminence in Romans xi. How he reminds of God's ability and willingness to "graff them in again" (23); "And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in." "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?" "And so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my Covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins—for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance" (change of mind), verses 26—29; Isa lix. 20, 21.

Israel's restoration as a theocratic kingdom in Syria, Palestine and the Euphratean valley is thus declared to be contemporary with the commencement of "the times of the blessed and only Potentate." The coming of the Lord FOR his people must be imminent, for the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ takes place before the close of the times of the Gentiles, even as his coming WITH his people in power and great glory inaugurates his reign. His coming, therefore, is not only the hope of the Church, but will yield after the great day of his wrath the final deliverance and salvation of the world. To what end or purpose the post-millennial view of our Lord's presence as King on the earth at THE END of the reign, I am quite at a loss to know. Certainly in all earthly kingdoms the presence and coronation precede the reign. His manifestation in power and great glory, with ten thousand of his saints, will gloriously inaugurate his coming and his magnificent reign over the whole earth. Such manifestation in power and great glory is according to the testimony of the Word (Psalm xlv. 1-7 Rev. xix. 11-21).

Finally, a few thoughts on two other items. It will be seen that the Scriptures are strongly identified with the direct and, in that sense supernatural intervention of the Most High in regard to the government of the earth. "The world is his and the fulness thereof." To limit the Divine operation, either to morals, ethics, or the spiritual forces which pertain to the ministry of the Holy Spirit during this dispensation, shows a lack of comprehensive discernment.

The Lord distinctly stated concerning the Holy Ghost, "Whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him: but ye know Him for He dwelleth with you and shall be in you" (John xiv. 17). The judgment of the world at the close of this age arises from the rejection of the Holy Spirit's testimony, as Heb. x. 28-30 clearly shows. How, then, doth this sufficiency and adequacy to the subjection of the world to Christ appear? The truth is that the Scriptures do not declare that the Holy Spirit will convert the world. "He convicts of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment,"—these are very different issues.

Am I asked, Is the Lord Jesus Christ, as "the great King over all the earth," going to dwell in Jerusalem, after the fashion of a temporal monarch? If by this is meant permanent residence, certainly not. On the morning of the resurrection, after comforting the heart of Mary, He ascended to the Holy Father, as John xx. 17 and 18 clearly prove, and as Levit. xxiii. 10, 11 absolutely required the Great High Priest to do. (See also 1 Cor. xv. 20-23; compare Heb. ix. 11 to 14.)

These items show that after the Lord's resurrection He was no longer subject to the limitations which pertain to the human body in the present condition. With the rapidity of the activities of the mind, so will resurrection personality pertain to and inhere in each member of his Glorious Body. The principal dwelling-place of the King and his august Bride will be the magnificent residence which his own wisdom and power during nearly two thousand years has been fashioning, and is now completing (John xiv. 2, 3).

Absence, either of personality or locality, is not thinkable. "Nowhere," "Nothing," and "Nobody" are simply terms of common stupidity. That we will come with the august King, the Blessed and only Potenate, to the earth, is as clearly revealed as that the Scriptures are inspired of God. The Body of Christ will not be separated from the Great Head, the Lord Jesus. The occasions of our coming will be many, the manifestations magnificent, and, if necessary, as swift and sudden as our present mental activities. Probably, the glory on the summit of the Mount of Transfiguration was indicative of that which will pertain to the heirs of God and the joint heirs with Christ. (See Matt. xiii. 43.)

The dwelling-place of the incorruptible saints with their Lord must necessarily be in the inheritance which is incorruptible and ready to be revealed. (1 Pet. i. 4).

Accurately stated, the Church of Christ, with her King and Lord, will reign over the earth, rather than upon it. An earthly illustration is to hand. Her Majesty the Queen reigns over India and the Australias, but she usually resides either at Osborne, Balmoral, or Windsor.

In conclusion, I have no sympathy with any statement which gives a crude localising on the earth (e.g., at Jerusalem) of the Great King. When our Lord said to Nathanael: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, hereafter ye shall see heaven open and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man," He probably intimated a fact which will then be common.

REST AND CHANGE.—Mrs. Bloy, who has lately gone to reside at Birchington-on-Sea, has found her own health so greatly benefited that she has taken a house, furnished and opened it for other poor sufferers needing rest and change. The idea is to open it free to poor Christian workers and other women, who would have to find their own food, provided help is forthcoming to pay rent and rates. A good work is also carried on amongst the village lads. Communications should be made to Mrs. Bloy, Lenlah, Prospect, Birchington.

MISS DE BROEN'S BELLEVILLE MISSION.

"Now it's done!" said a young man, whose serious face had long caught the attention of the preachers in the Iron Room. He meant that he had accepted the Lord Jesus as his Saviour, and believed on Him from the heart. The person to whom he spoke was herself one of the fruits of the Mission, and has for years been consistent in her life and influence. The young man had for some time past seen himself a sinner before God, which is very difficult, for a spirit of self-satisfaction, of opposition to God, or of patronage of Him, which is equally blasphemous, reigns in France. The young wife shared her husband's feelings, and on being asked if she had accepted the Saviour, she replied, "Yes, indeed I have!" Of course these persons have been faithfully visited, to see if the happy news is true; it appears to be true, and we ask the prayers of Christian friends for these and many others, that they may be brought into complete light and freedom.

A few weeks ago, a request was brought from a poor woman to be visited, in order that she might receive spiritual instruction. Very lonely in her life, sitting at her handicraft, with her wooden leg straight out before her, she told the story of her life. A servant in America, years ago, she worked in a Christian household, and scoffed much at the religion and prayers of the family. For some time past, however, she has attended the Iron Room, and truly regrets the mocking laughter she used to indulge in at the expense of her pious employers. She says: "Such great peace overflows my soul, that I desire to give myself up entirely to the Lord Jesus. But how am I to do this?" "Oh!" said the person we have already mentioned as a consistent follower of Jesus, "his arms are open to receive you, just let yourself drop into them." "That I shall do," said the first, "Je veux m' abandonner au Seigneur."

How true are the words, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days." How encouraging that a steady testimony for God, such as was borne by the unknown American family, cannot be neutralised in spite of the mockery with which it may be received. Ought we not ever to realise that we are to be shining lights for Him who saved us, and who said, "He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without Me ye can do nothing." ANOTHER SEAMEN'S REST FOR LONDON.

In connection with the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, a new Seamen's Institute and Rest on the Isle of Dogs, at the entrance of the Millwall Docks, was, a few days ago, dedicated by praise and prayer, precious testimonies, and the word of the Lord, for the use of seamen of all nations. Louisa, Lady Ashburton, the principal founder, and host of the occasion, was unable through severe indisposition to be with us. We all thanked God for her ladyship's personal consecration of living service and generous means to the Docks of London, and prayer was made to God for her. The building is not quite finished, but a letter was read from H.R.H. Princess Mary Duchess of Teck, to say that she would gladly attend at the public opening, in July next.

Mr. T. A. Denny presided over the dedication meeting. The vicar of the parish (St. Luke's) Rev. J. Hewlett, Rev. Dr. John Gritton, the missionaries of the different London Docks, with other friends and workers, took part. Mrs. Matthews sang the Gospel, and an evangelistic meeting followed.

Arrangements will be made for services among seamen in Spanish, German, Scandinavian, and English. A telegram was received from Mr. John Cory, who, with his friend Mr. Denny, had given £100 each to this extension, to say that he would give £50 to purchase the old Jolly Sailor public-house in the West India Dock-road, and join Lady Ashburton and others in immediately going forward to establish a "Sailors' Rest" in that much-needed quarter. Mr. and Mrs. Welin, of the Scandinavian Temperance Sailors' Home, were present and rejoicing at the growth of the work of the Lord. A memorable day was closed in the history of sailor work in London with hearty praises to God, who has visited us with his grace. It was beautiful to see seamen of several nations leaving their ships, some for only a few minutes, to see and rejoice. Communications can be sent to me as Secretary of the parent Society.

DEACON ABRAHAM'S WORK.

In a letter dated Oroomiah, Persia, January 23, Deacon Abraham says:—"By the grace of God, and with the help of our Christian friends in England, we have been able for another year to carry on our work among orphans, and to preach the Gospel to the poor in different places, and we trust our labours have not been in vain. Our Lord said, 'In the world ye shall have tribulation.' So we have met with many trials, some of them very severe, but we have learned where to go at such times. Praise the Lord, to Him we have gone; He has been a refuge to us.

"What a firm foundation have those who trust in the Lord. Lately I was under great need of supplies for our work, not knowing where to get help, nor whence it would come. I did not expect help at the time, as I knew not where it could come from. Two elders of our church visited me for a conversation, and one of them sighed hard. I said, 'You must not sigh so, brother, for a Christian must not be unduly careful and anxious. No sorrow for a Christian. Christ has borne all our sorrows.' The other brother said, 'You have hope of relief, but we have not.' I answered him, 'Indeed, I have no hope or expectation for a long time to come, but I must rejoice in the Lord.' Two hours after that I got the letter from England, in which I found £100, help sent for our work. I then praised the Lord, and continued to do so for some days.

"Let me ask your readers to sympathise with our work, and pray for it, that its chief object may be God's glory."

CALL FOR MEDICAL MISSIONARIES.

Dr. R. Lynn Heard, joint hon. secretary of the Medical Missions Aid Society of Ireland, writing from Eversley, Monkstown, co. Dublin, sends us the following appeal from Dr. W. W. Colborne, C.M.S., Canton (itinerating):—

"I do not wish now to apply to you for a money grant, though at another time I might be glad of assistance in that way. What I would wish to get by means of your Society is something more valuable than money—namely, a man. Owing to present arrangements in our Mission I am without a European companion when intinerating, and likely to remain so for some years. There are openings in connection, I think I may say without exaggeration, for six medical missionaries; but when I speak of needs or openings the truth is that the requirements are those of a land parched with drought, in which there have been some local showers here and there.

"I could give any one who came out room for him and his teacher on board my boat, and he could travel with me until he knew something of the language and of the character of the people. I can guarantee his allowance for all necessary expenditure for three years out of money at my disposal, if he be unmarried and does not live at Hongkong or Canton. I think the man most suitable would be an unmarried and unengaged man of about twenty-five to twenty-eight, who has distinguished himself as a practical surgeon, who has held good resident appointments, and who has good prospects of distinguishing himself at home. There is, I think, scope for good qualifications of a practical sort in the service of Jesus out here. The great qualification is that he himself should know himself to be saved, and have a fervent desire to be the means of saving others, and furthering God's plans with that end in view. Such a man, the more he gave up to come out here, the more earnest would he be, I think, in realising the inheritance laid up for him in heaven. He could, I think, only give up good prospects at home by the power of the Holy Spirit given in answer to prayer; and after going through the experience of seeking and obtaining this, of being really made willing to give up all for Christ, he would be the fitter for the mission field.

"If he applied to the C.M.S. at once, he might come out in time to go up country with me for the winter trip next October, as I expect to do."

"MAY MEETINGS."—Mr. E. J. May writes to us from 100, Fleet-street, E.C., "I am anxious to include in the 'Handy Guide to May Meetings,' now in the press, a complete list of the Christian Conventions and Holiness Meetings to be held in all parts of the country, between May and December. I have particulars of many, but would esteem it a favour if those of your readers who may be acquainted with details as to date, chairman, or speaker at any such meetings, would kindly send them on to me."

GOD'S PRESENCE OUR REST.

Exodus xxxiii. 14.

This assurance of rest is as applicable to the esent age as to that of the Exodus. Nay, rhaps there is a special message in it to these verish days, so filled with discord, confusion, d strife. Its very utterance shows a deep quaintance with the heart of man. For there a settled conviction with us all that we are not live ever thus, the victims of merciless dis-ict.

Every revolution, the Anarchist's plot and e Socialist's dream, the well-meant effort to ing about the kingdom of heaven by social construction, is a plea on the part of men for st. But that rest must be sought deeper down an in circumstances. It must begin at the ntre of our being, and in its accord with the ing of God. His presence must be welcome to , and accompany us, or rest is a vain dream.

I. The Circumstances by which this Assurance was Called Forth.—(1) Moses was a very nely man. Perhaps more lonely in the midst the two millions of people whom he was lead-g as a flock than he had been amid the solitudes the desert, tending the flock of Jethro. The ry contrast between his lofty enjoyment of vine communion, and the people, always set on nsual pleasure, must have lent intensity to the olation of his spirit, which reared itself amid eir sensual longings, as the peak of Susafeh ove the lower ranges of Sinai.

In this his loneliness he has been compared to ijah at Cherith or on Carmel; to Paul standing ed and friendless before the tribunal of Nero; Alfred when, in the words of the old ronicler, he "lived an unquiet life in the odlands of Somerset"; to Columbus when, h his great secret locked in his heart, he ll prosecuted his quest over the weary waste waters. But perhaps no one ever lived who uld so sympathise with him as the Lord. member how He went to and fro in the rden, and how Himself He said, "Behold the ur cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be ttered, every man to his own, and shall leave alone; and yet I am not alone, because the ther is with Me." Jesus was the most lonely n that ever lived. He drank the cup of lone-ess to its dregs. He trod the winepress alone, l of the people there was none with Him. ver and friend stood afar off. Men miscon-ued his motives, failed to appreciate his aims, ected his tender advances, left Him alone at hour of his betrayal and amid the scenes of trial and death; and at last our sins built an awful wall of separation between Himself d his Father, so that He cried, "My God, why t Thou forsaken Me?" No one has ever ched that extreme of lonely sorrow, but ses, perhaps, comes next to it, more especially en he suddenly awoke to find that Aaron, on om he had leaned since that memorable meet-; in those very parts, was unable to stand the ain of the common burden. And Moses said o the Lord, "See, Thou sayest unto me, Bring this people: and Thou has not let me know om Thou wilt send with me." Note that last use, "whom Thou wilt send with me." Do they contain a sigh for a comrade, a companion, a nd, in whose sympathy and judgment he ght confide.

t is certain that these words will be read by ny whose lives are outwardly solitary. Some eft during long hours to bear the burden of home, or of suffering, or of foreign service, a sentry on night-duty at a lone post. Others d crowds are not less solitary; many soldiers, no brother-officer; many voices, but the one e missing; many companions, but no friend. In the physical world we are told that in the most solid bodies the atoms do not touch; and how often though the crowd throngs us we are not conscious that any one has touched us. It is to that state of mind that the assurance of the text is given.

(2) In addition to this, the hosts were soon to leave the mountain region of Sinai, with which Moses had been familiar during his shepherd life, in order to take the onward road through unknown deserts, infested by daring and experienced foes. What though the pillar and cloud led them slowly along those solemn desert pathways, and at night shed a broad flood of light on the clustered tents of the desert encampment, yet the prospect of that journey through the great and terrible wilderness was sufficient to abash the stoutest heart.

Such a summons to arise and depart is often sounding with its bugle-call in our ears. We are not like those who travel by the metal track of the railroad, on which they have been to and fro every day for years, and are able to tell exactly the names and order of the stations; but like an exploring expedition in an absolutely unknown district, and even the leader, as he leaves his hammock in the morning, does not know where it will be slung at night. What seems a monotonous life, always the same, does not revolve around a beaten circle, as the horse or ass winding up buckets from a well, but is ever striking out over new tracts of territory, which we have not traversed before.

(3) Still further difficulties had lately arisen in connection with the people's transgression. From a careful study of the passage it would seem that a change was proposed by their Almighty Friend. Hitherto He had gone in the midst of them. Now He avowed his intention of substituting an angel for Himself, lest He should suddenly consume the people because of their stiff-neckedness (xxxiii. 3). Already the people had been bidden to strip themselves of their ornaments, and the tent, which was recognised as the temporary pavilion for God, must be pitched without the camp, afar off from the camp, so that those who sought the Lord were compelled to take a considerable journey to reach his visible shrine. But now it seemed likely that some sensible diminution of the evidence of the Divine Presence and favour was about to take place; and the fear of this stirred the soul of the great leader to its depths. Like Jacob at the fords of the Jabbok, he felt that he could not let God go, and he told Him so: "If thy presence go not with us carry us not up hence." Better abandon thy mighty scheme, slay us at once, and wrap us in a winding sheet of sand than allow us to take another step without thy presence.

Are there not times with many of us when we have reason to fear that, in consequence of some sad failure or sin on our part, the Lord may be obliged to withdraw the conscious enjoyment of his love? A chill fear lays its icy hand upon the strings of our heart, and almost petrifies it into silence. Supposing He should be compelled to leave me to myself, to withdraw his tender mercies, to shut up his compassions. Supposing that I should be like a sledge abandoned in Arctic snows, or a ship abandoned by its crew in mid-ocean. Supposing that the fate of Saul should be mine, and that of me God should say, It repenteth me that I have made him king. Such thoughts quicken the pace of the soul as it goes to his footstool.

II.—The Place Where this Assurance was Given.—The earlier intercourse between the servant, faithful in all his house, and Him who had appointed him, seems to have been on the mountain summit. But after the outburst of the people's sin, a change was made which did not necessitate such prolonged or distant absences from the camp. Indeed, he was absent for only one other period of forty days till the time of his death, some thirty-eight years afterwards (xxxiv. 28).

During the prolonged interview which he had been permitted to enjoy, God had spoken to him much of the Tabernacle which was shortly to be reared. He at once saw the blessedness of this proximity of the shrine for worship and fellowship, and his ardent soul seems to have been unable to brook delay. A tent was therefore selected, it may have been his own, or one specially prepared, and was pitched without the camp, afar off from the camp. It was known as the Tent of Meeting (7), and it came to pass that every one which sought the Lord went out into the tent of meeting, which was without the camp.

But its special benefit was obvious in the case of Moses himself. It was no longer necessary for him to climb to the mountain summit, entrusted with errands on behalf of the people, or eager for advice in difficult problems. He was able to transact all necessary business by going out to the tent. And when it was rumoured through the camp that he was about to do so, all the people rose up to see the marvellous spectacle, and stood, every man at his tent door, looking after him, because, so soon as he entered into the tent, the pillar of cloud descended from its position in mid-heaven, and stood at the door of the tent, the vehicle and emblem of the Divine Presence. Thus the Lord spake with Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend; and Moses spake to his Father, who is in secret, with the freedom of a child. And as the people beheld that wondrous sight of God stooping to commune with man, they rose up and worshipped, every man at his tent door.

It was there that this amazing colloquy took place. Moses spoke of his loneliness, and asked who was to be associated with him in his great task; and contrasted this silence on the part of God in a particular which so closely concerned his comfort and efficiency with all his other dealings with him, Yet thou hast said, I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight. Then it seemed as if that faithful heart suddenly caught sight of a blessing more transcendent in glory than any he had yet dared to ask. His petition was couched in great humility, sandwiched between a double reference to the grace to which he owed everything; but he ventured to suggest that God should Himself show him his ways, that he might know Him. It was as if he said, Wilt thou thyself be my comrade and companion, my Referee in difficulty, my Adviser in perplexity, my Friend in solitude? Thine angels are strong and fair and good, but none of them will suffice me, nothing short of thyself. Without Thee, it were better for me to relinquish my task and die; but with Thee, no difficulty can baffle, no fear alarm, no obstacle deter.

And God's answer came back on his spirit with music and balm, "My Presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." Nothing was said as to the people. The promise of the Divine Presence was made apparently to Moses alone.

But faith gets bolder as it mounts. Each answer to its claims makes it claim more. We may seriously question whether our faith is of the right quality if it is unable to compass more in its hand to-day than it did a year ago. And, therefore, Moses not only took the assurance of the Divine Presence for himself, but asked that it should be extended to include the people. "Wherein now shall it be known that I have found grace in thy sight, I and thy people? Is it not that Thou goest with us, so that we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth."

In this request also he was successful. And the Lord said unto Moses, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken, for thou hast found grace in my sight. There are moments of holy intercourse with God, rapturous, golden moments, in the lives of all his servants; when next they visit us, and we would make the most of their brief, bright, rapturous glow, let us plead, not only for ourselves, but for others, asking for them an equal blessedness.

III.—The Blessedness which this Assurance Guaranteed.—There was, first, the Divine Presence; and there was, secondly, the promised Rest; not the rest of Canaan, for this Moses never saw, but a deeper and more blessed inheritance, which may be the portion of all faithful souls. But at their heart these two are one. The Divine Presence is Rest.

Of course the conscious Presence of God with us is only possible on three conditions. Firstly, we must walk in the light, as He is in the light, for He will have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, or turn aside to go with us on any crooked path of our own choosing. Secondly, we must recognise that the blood of Jesus Christ his Son goes on cleans'ng us from all sin, not only that which we judge and confess, but that also which is only seen by his pure and holy eyes. Thirdly, we must claim the gracious aid of the Holy Spirit, to make real that Presence, which is too subtle for the eye of man, unless it be specially enlightened. And, above all, we must remember that for us, at least, that presence is localised in the man Christ Jesus. For us there is no attenuated mist of Presence, though a mist of light, but a Person in whom that Presence is made real and touches us. But when these conditions are fulfilled, the blessed soul enters upon an experience of the Presence of God, which can find no better words to express its bliss than the Psalmist's, as he turned from the prosperity of the wicked to consider his own estate, "Nevertheless, I am continually with Thee, Thou upholdest me with thine hand. Whom have I in heaven but Thee, and there is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee."

God's Presence is Rest from the Conscience of Sin. It silences accusing memories, it stands as a rearguard between the believer and the pursuit of the past; and as one sin after another arises from the vasty deep of bygone years, each is met by the assurance of forgiveness so utter that God's memory has lost record of its having taken place. "I will remember their sins no more."

God's Presence is Rest from Anxiety. The future is dim, and we are apt to strain our eyes as we peer into its depths. We listen for its voices, but only weary ourselves in our effort to distinguish what they say. Sometimes the veil of mist grows golden with auroral light, and we think it is on the point of parting before the touch of the sun; at other times it seems more opaque and dense than ever. Now we are elate with building castles of light, and again we are immured in dungeons of foreboding. We cannot rest tossed to and fro like this, but when we can look from the mist to the face of our Guide, who goes with us, such wisdom and kindness mingle there that we are at rest.

God's Presence gives Rest to our Intellect. The mind of man turns sick before the trifles and frivolities with which men, for the most part, seek to satisfy its insatiable appetite, and craves eternal truth, and this alone can be found in God.

God's Presence is Rest to our Judgment. This regal faculty is constantly being called into play to select out of one or two paths, which offer themselves, that which we should follow. And many are kept in perpetual agitation by the necessity of choosing their course. They have so often chosen amiss. But when God is there the burden of the choice is left to Him. It is left for Him to choose, and to make known his choice, whilst the soul waits, exercising careful thought indeed, but concentrating its whole power in seeking to know the Divine will.

God's Presence is Rest to our Will.—The will of the self-life, which chafes like an unquiet sea, can only come to rest in the will of God, compelled by the powerful attraction of his near Presence, just as we might conceive of a body passing from the earth to the sun, increasingly losing the attraction of the planet as it feels the pull of the mighty orb of day.

God's Presence is Rest from Weariness.—There is in each of us a fund of natural energy, determined largely by health or temperament, or favourable circumstances. But at times this is crushed by disappointment, and failure, and the sense of its inadequacy for some great task. But when God is near, it falls back on Him like a tired child on a father's strength, and is at rest. Granted that my arm cannot stem the tide that is sweeping me out to sea, God is with me, and He can. Rest! weary arm and tired brow, God is here and God is strong.

God's Presence is Rest to our Heart.—Who is there that does not pine for love? In most of us the cry for love is an insatiable passion! Nor can any find in man or woman its sufficient good! As well fill the Atlantic with wheelbarrows of soil! But to know God, to love God, to be loved by God, to delight in God's perpetual Presence—this is Rest. The eddies of the affections are smoothed out by the pull and the fall into that fathomless abyss; inclinations are stilled; sighs are hushed; desires are satisfied; and the nature enters on the Rest, not of drowsy inaction, but of complete fruition.

I have a vision of a woodland glade. A group of tired, frightened children are cowering around the bole of an old tree, dropping the fragile, withered flowers from their hands and pinafores, as the first great drops of the thunder shower, which had been darkening the sky, begin to fall. They have lost their way, they sob bitterly, and crowd together. Suddenly through the wood there comes a quick step, beneath which the twigs crackle and break—Father has come, and as he carries some in his strong arms through the storm on the nearest track for home, and the others run at his side, they have learnt that there is a Presence which is Rest.

THE FEAST OF PURIM.

The Jewish month Adar commenced this year on February 29th, and therefore its dates keep just one day behind our month of March. It contains three days of note to the Jews which fall on the 10th, 13th, and 14th March, called respectively the "Fast of Esther," the "Feast of Purim," and "Shushan Purim."

The Fast of Esther is in memory of the fast observed by the Jews in Shushan, as recorded in Esther iv. 16, when the whole of the Jews in the kingdom of Ahasuerus were condemned to extermination. The Feast of Purim commemorates the glorious deliverance of the Jewish people, wrought out for them by God, through the mediation of Esther with King Ahasuerus. Purim means lots; see Esther iii. 6, 7; ix. 22-25. The spirit of the feast, with its "portions" and "gifts," is maintained by the Jews of our own day, to whom Purim still is a time of peculiar festivity and joy.

On the evening of the 13th of Adar, when the feast really commences, devout Jews attend synagogue, where, after the usual service, the whole book of Esther is read through. It used to be customary, whenever the name of Haman occurred, for the worshippers to make various demonstrations of disgust and indignation, even stamping on the floor and saying, "Let his name be blotted out; the name of the wicked shall rot." The names of Haman and his sons are now read rapidly through, sometimes in one breath, signifying the sudden destruction that befel them.

Jews and Christians alike, on reflecting upon the events which gave rise to these ceremonies, are reminded of the treatment to which the Jews are in our day subjected by a modern Ahasuerus. Both kings are similar in more respects than in having names of equal length, and commencing with "A." Both are powerful sovereigns, despots, and influenced by their councillors against the Jews. "And Haman said unto King Ahasuerus, 'There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and their laws are diverse from all people; neither keep they the king's laws: therefore it is not for the king's profit to suffer them.' This, especially the last clause, is substantially the creed of Russian Ministers of State. Oh, that in place of Esther another mediator might strive with the heart of Alexander, that the King of the Jews Himself might conquer by his grace the Russian monarch's heart, and teach him to revoke his oppressive decrees!

But, meantime, God is using Alexander III., not merely to drive out his people from dark Russia into more enlightened lands, where they may hear the Gospel freely; but also to be a means in breaking that other chain, which binds the Jewish mind as tightly as any Siberian prisoner's body may be bound, the chain of Talmudism. Shall the Jew at this juncture be presented with the Gospel of Christ, which maketh free indeed? The answer must come from the Christian Church.

THE FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

"Shall the Russian Peasant Starve?" is the title of the second appeal issued by the Society of Friends. The committee having charge of the relief fund acknowledge with thankfulness the assistance already extended to them, about £26,500 having been subscribed directly to the fund, in addition to £1000 handed over to it by the committee organised by Lord Monkswell and the Hon. Gilbert Coleridge. The greater portion of this sum has already been remitted to Russia, where it is now being distributed by the Society's Commissioners, E. W. Brooks and Herbert Jones.

Before leaving the capital for the famine stricken districts, the commissioners had many opportunities of meeting with persons who had been assisting in the relief of the distressed peasantry. They describe a condition of abject misery scarcely to be exceeded. Mr. Brooks adds: "We find the prevailing apprehension is already heightened by what must happen at the break of the frost, when all the land transit of food will become impossible for at least a month. If the heart of the great City of London could be moved so as to call forth large donations from City bankers and merchants, we should then feel liberated to give at once with a more free hand, and thousands of lives might be saved, which I fear will now be lost."

Some idea of the extent of the famine may be gathered from the fact that, although the Russian Government has already devoted the sum of £15,000,000 to purposes of relief, a sum which would be a heavy drain on the resources of any nation, however wealthy, there is nevertheless ample scope for the exercise of private charity. The committee remind their fellow-countrymen that, at the time of the Irish Famine in 1847 the Russian people generously sent their contribution in aid of the starving peasants. Subscriptions may be forwarded to Joseph Gurney Barclay, Treasurer of the Friends' Russian Famine Fund, care of Barclay and Co., 54, Lombard street, E.C., and 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.

THE CRY OF THE STUNDISTS.

Sterile and grim, the frost king's reign,
And fierce the piercing breath,
That spoke to Russia's outcast ones
Of famine, pain, and death.

Like phantoms dim, the mountains stretched
Deeply the sunset's glow
Dyed, in that icy northern land,
The silent, stainless snow.

But sterner far than winter's hand,
Dark superstition's rod,
And deeper than the sunset's flush
The blood which cried to God.

Hell's antichrist is not yet dead,
Since darkness hates the light,
'Tis pain and death on Russian soil
To dare to do the right.

Hated of all, for Christ's dear sake
In this sad land of woe,
His followers share the bitter cup
He drank for them below.

O Lord! how long? the piteous cry,
The agonising prayer,
Of those who count all things but loss,
That they his cross might bear.

How long, O Lord? our hearts reply,
Shalt Thou be put to shame,
And persecution be the lot
Of those who love thy name?

Return, O Christ! avenge thine own,
Give all to live in love,
And let thy will be done on earth,
As it is done above.

A YEAR'S WORK IN PARIS.—The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A. (160, Rue Montmartre) reports increasing interest in the study of the Word of God, also the doubling of membership during the year. "Other agencies" include educational classes, a bureau, receptions, "and every endeavour to promote the interests and comfort of young Englishmen and Americans." The announcement of the removal of previous deficit through the special contributions of a few friends is gratefully recorded in the new report; and the present need is for a larger annual income, so that the sleeping department of the institution may be re-opened. This branch is an important one, and an immense boon to young men. The Hon. treasurer is Mr. C. E. Lord, 13, Boulevard des Italiens, Paris.

The Revival in Scotland.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

While their colleague Mr. McNeill is, to e a military metaphor exploding his Gospel mbs in the very centre of Glasgow's citadel, ese two evangelists are laying active siege to e suburban outposts of the city. Owing to e shortness of their stay at the different ints, the most they can do is to lay the train t it thoroughly alight, and leave others who llow them to complete the attack on "Man- ul." Mr. Moody may not inappropriately be lled the general in this special campaign gainst the forces of evil, but he does not direct erations from a safe distance; he is always in e very hottest of the battle. He leaves behind m many wounded, besides not a few who have en captured outright for his Master and Com- ander Jesus Christ.

Let us pass from halting metaphor to the nar- tion of simple fact. The workaday week began ith an afternoon meeting at

KILSYTH.

This quiet country spot was the scene in 1839 a wonderful revival, in which Wm. Burns, cCheyne, and the Bonars were the leading man agents. The meeting on Monday week as in the Free Church, and very large. Most the shopkeepers in the place had closed their ors for a couple of hours so as to set buyers d sellers free to hear the Gospel. Rev. John obertson, of Gorbals, and others did the work o llowing up. We have no definite information as results ven miles distant, was visited the same even- g. This place, unlike Kilsyth, is said to famous, or perhaps notorious, in never ving had anything that could be called season of revival. It has a population of five ousand, many of the people being workers in e print works and chemical works. To the ening meeting contingents came from the sur- unding districts, many walking five or six iles to be present. It is affirmed that the cient parish church, in which the evangelists livered their messages, had only once before all its history been lighted up artificially for evening service. A lot of paraffin lamps did ty instead of gas. The father of the famous orman Macleod was once minister of this parish, d the remains of the illustrious Presbyterian vine himself now mingle with the dust in the urchyard. Having kindled the torch of iritual interest that evening, Mr. Moody and r. Sankey left it to be kept alight by various lasgow ministers, who held after-services in the ee and U.P. Churches.

The two evangelists next took a clear jump ross Glasgow to the southern suburb of here meetings were held on Tuesday afternoon d evening. Ru'glen (as it is colloquially called) a very ancient burgh, older than Glasgow elf. Indeed, it claims to be the parent of otland's great commercial capital. Large owds came out to see and hear the American iends on both occasions. In the evening the ors of the central meeting-place had to be shut ng before the hour, and a large overflow con- egation in The Institute was addressed by Mr. Campbell White. Good and solid work was ne for eternity, and the impression was epened here also by following-up meetings on bsequent evenings.

CAMBUSLANG

s almost adjacent to Rutherglen, and to this ace the evangelists tranferred their services on ednesday. There are several points of interest out Cambuslang that might be noted. One m of painful interest is the fact that the main reet of the place contains twenty drink shops, ve one. There are large steel works in the ighbourhood, and many of the skilled artisans rn wages ranging from three to five pounds a eek. One would like to know exactly what pro- rtion of these big weekly earnings is diverted from the homes of the workers into that bag without a bottom—the till of the publican. Local Christian workers greatly lament the prevalence of drunkenness and religious death.

The two chief meetings of the day were held in the Kirkhill Parish Church. An interesting thing about the building is that near by is the spot where Whitfield preached to twenty thousand persons some 130 years ago. In the prayers that went up to God from the two congregations on Wednesday there were some earnest beseechings that God would bring back again the manifestations that marked those olden times. The probable thing is that the Christian Church of to-day can do a great deal to answer its own prayer in that respect. Any other supposition would be flatly blasphemous. Mr. Moody proclaimed the Gospel message in the evening with as much abandonment and intensity of soul and fervour of utterance as any Whitfield could have done, and to all outward appearance he easily swayed the vast throng, as wave after wave of emotion rolled over it. The after meeting was large and good. There was an overflow in another church some distance off; here Mr. Sankey sang (having given three Gospel songs, with the help of Mrs. Oatts, in the big meeting), and Mr. Oatts preached. The gathering was not large, but some ripe fruit was gathered. At the main meeting almost all the ministers in Cambuslang and Rutherglen were present. Surely they must have caught some of the fire that Mr. Moody's utterances always generate! But, indeed, observation throughout Scotland leads one to the belief that the average modern minister is a very incombustible entity!

is in the Hamilton district, and was passed by when the evangelists were there, for reasons of local convenience. To it, therefore, they directed their steps for Thursday and Friday. The growth of the industrial population has been rapid, and, of course, the devil has taken good care to impress the licensing magistrates into his service. The Christians have not been asleep meanwhile; and the Lanarkshire Christian Union, which has its headquarters here, is doing all it can to drive back and arrest the tides of evil. Its President, Mr. Colville, is also Provost of the town, and, no doubt, if he were able to exercise a benevolent autocracy, there would be short shrift to the drink-shops. But in this democratic era every community has to work out its own salvation—generally at a heavy cost in blood and tears and the souls of men.

The meetings in the Public Hall were in every way encouraging. On the first afternoon Mr. Moody expounded the doctrine of the resurrection of the body. Next day his congenial topic was the Second Coming of Christ. His address on that comforting truth fairly warmed up some of the congregation to shouting point; while many others were suffused in tears by some of the pathetic passages. At the close of Mr. Moody's last evening address to a densely-crowded house, the kingdom of heaven seemed to be very near. In urging the bold and open avowal of faith he took the unusual course of asking all who truly believed in Christ, or desired now to confess faith in Him, to rise. It seemed as if nineteen-twentieths of the congregation took to their feet. At the afternoon meeting, Mr. Moody had specially requested the Christians to stay away and allow the unconverted to get seats. If they complied with the request, the manifestation in the evening was a truly wonderful one. An interruption on both evenings from a man under the influence of potent liquor gave Mr. Moody opportunities of delivering his soul on the whisky question in a way that thrilled everybody, and must have staggered some. The overflow on Friday evening was conducted by Mr. Sankey and Rev. Mr. Hutchison, of Coatbridge; the latter, with several other ministers, will help in the work of following up every evening this week.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

Between them Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey took part in five meetings last Sabbath in the pleasant little town of Dunbarton, on the north bank of the Clyde. At 9.30 a.m. there was a goodly gathering of Christian workers in the Burgh Hall, whom Mr. Sankey exhorted in song, and to whom Mr. Moody gave an exceedingly practical and helpful address, based on the outstanding lessons of Mark's Gospel. The "three incurable cases" recorded in chapter v. were made the theme of some very stirring words about never giving up any one outside of hell, however bad they may seem to be.

Mr. Moody preached to a large congregation in the Free High Church in the forenoon, and in the evening spoke to crowded audiences of men and women in the Burgh Hall and the parish church respectively. There was an overflow women's meeting in the United Presbyterian Church, conducted by Mr. J. Campbell White, of Overtown (who is entertaining the evangelists). Major Colquohoun (late of Glasgow, and now of Mentone), briefly spoke, and Mr. Sankey sang. At the evening meetings there was a good deal of reaping work done. The evangelists continued the Dunbarton mission on Monday and Tuesday evenings, holding afternoon services on both days at Helensburgh, a few miles further down the river.

REV. JOHN MCNEILL.

This redoubtable champion of the faith has passed another very busy week. The midday meetings in St. George's Church, Glasgow, have been as crowded as before—sometimes more so. The manifestations of genuine interest from day to day have been remarkable enough to be described as phenomenal. One very hopeful element in the case is the fact that the bulk of the daily audience is gathered from all the points of the compass in the Glasgow social firmament, while there are not a few casual visitors from outlying places. Many brethren of the "white tie" are regularly to be seen in the crowd, drinking in enjoyment and inspiration from the preacher's unconventional, but most powerful presentations of Bible truth. Straight Gospel talk is freely mixed with clever ethical counsel, and the claims of God are made very real to those who are in close daily touch with the seen and temporal. Much good fruit must inevitably come from these meetings, which are being continued for the first three working days of the present week.

Mr. McNeill and Mr. Burke have been valiantly holding the fort at Paisley for the afternoons and evenings of the past week. "Paisley bodies," to use the curt and rather contemptuous outside designation, are said to regard their town as the pivot of the kingdom, if not as the "hub" of the universe. At any rate, they are being drawn in their thousands to the splendid George-Clark Town Hall, where Mr. Burke has been ringing out the Gospel music and Mr. McNeill has been preaching as only he can preach. At first the people were stiff to show what they must have felt, but the later meetings showed more of the Spirit's melting and softening power. The Sabbath gatherings and the closing up meetings of the first half of the current week are sure to be seasons of great interest.

Messrs. McNeill and Burke had a busy day at Paisley on Sabbath, the George-Clark Hall being crowded with audiences of 2500 souls three times, at 9.30, 5, and 7. At the last of the three, for men only, quite a number indicated that they had received blessing since the mission began. It was to close, so far as Mr. NcNeill is concerned, on Wednesday evening this week. After a fruitful stay of a few days in Greenock, Mr. J. M. Scroggie began on Sabbath a fortnight's mission at Rutherglen.

THE FOLLOWING UP

is being vigorously sustained at different points. You have no space for detailed notes, but it may be said generally that in the meetings held by Messrs. Smith and Bell at Wishaw, by Mr. Richard Hill at Lesmahagow, by Mr. W. J. Taylor at Larkhall, and by Mr. J. M. Scroggie, at Greenock, the word spoken has been with power, and it is confidently believed that many have been led to the point of true spiritual decision. A large and interesting meeting of converts and workers was held on Wednesday evening last week at Kirkcaldy, despite the fact that that district was in the throes of a hot and many-cornered Parliamentary election contest. Some interesting facts are to hand also respecting the work at Coatbridge. Mr. Hutchinson, of Coats Established Church, reports that he has met with a dozen men in his own parish who trace their conversion to the Sabbath-evening meeting in the theatre. Gospel meetings are to be arranged for now in the theatre each Sabbath evening.

THE ALL-DAY MEETING, to be held in Glasgow this day (Thursday), is sure to be an occasion of much concentrated interest and blessing. There will be three meetings in St. Andrews' Halls. Mr. Moody, Mr. McNeill, Dr. Bonar, Dr. Stalker, Rev. John Smith, Professor Simpson, and other well-known friends will give addresses, while Mr. Sankey and Mr. Burke will lead the song.

A large number of responses have been received by Mr. Moody in answer to his recent appeal for helpers for the Chicago World's Fair. The cases of the applicants are being carefully considered.

Arrangements are in progress for getting Rev. John McNeill to conduct a month's continuous mission in Glasgow, beginning soon after his visit to Dunbarton next week. There is a likelihood of the evening meetings being held in the East-end exhibition building at Dennistown, just vacated by "Buffalo Bill's" Wild West, with afternoon addresses to Christians in another part of the city.

Mr. W. J. Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting meetings at Wishaw, under the auspices of the Ministers' Evangelistic Committee. In spite of the inclement weather, excellent services were held at the Town Hall and Free Church. Mr. Taylor afterwards proceeded to Larkhall, where he again followed up the remarkable work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. At this place it pleased the Lord to grant splendid meetings and a great deal of spiritual blessing. The Free Church was crowded to the doors each night, with increasing interest at all the services.

MR. C. INGLIS AT YEOVIL.

After an absence of eighteen years Mr. Charles Inglis has visited Yeovil, under the auspices of the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A. We had heard what God was doing in Bridgwater through his honoured servant, and our hearts were full of expectation, and truly our God has not disappointed us. We hardly ever remember, in the history of our town, such a widespread interest in eternal things as we have experienced during the past ten days. The largest building in the place has been too small to hold the crowds who, on week nights, were eager to hear the Gospel, while on Sundays the hall has been filled an hour and a-half before the time announced. It has been a new experience to see hundreds of Christians and others, at the early hour of eight o'clock on a Sabbath morning, wending their way to the Town Hall.

Never have we seen men and women under deeper conviction, and through the Spirit of God we attribute this to the way his servant has preached night after night on sin and its awful results. Large numbers have gone into the inquiry-room, which has been a "Bochim" and a "valley of decision" to many. The Spirit has worked among all classes. One young lady, who was converted the first night, has been the means of leading six of her companions to Christ. It has been touching to see men, who have been the victims to intemperance, broken down under a sense of sin; and to see sisters weeping for joy, as they have realised that years of prayer have been answered in the salvation of their brothers. We cannot and dare not tabulate results, but with the large number of names taken by the workers, we expect to see many in the presence of the King as the result of this mission.

God's people have been greatly helped and quickened in the afternoon Bible-readings, and the notes taken by them will help many a worker in days to come. We are deeply thankful to God for sending his devoted servant to us; the prayers of hundreds in this town will follow him to his month's services at the Great Assembly Hall, London.

W. B. Collins,
Secretary Y.W.C.A., Yeovil.

CAGE-LANE MISSION, PLUMSTEAD.—During the year the Mission services have been regularly carried on. The attendance has been encouraging, and, says the report, some who seemed to be most unimpressionable have been brought to the Saviour. Many have become total abstainers; the meetings for mothers and for young men continue to prosper; about a thousand children belong to the Sunday-school, and a Sabbath morning service recently started has so increased as to necessitate a removal to the old hall. The brief report is signed by General and Mrs Anderson (née Russell), who added: "It is now, as ever, the one object of this Mission to preach Christ and to point to Him as the Lamb of God whose precious blood cleanseth from all sin; and as long as God spares us we hope to be found doing what we can in his strength to promote his glory and the good of souls among the careless multitude around us."

DR. PENTECOST'S MISSION in MADRAS.

Writing about three weeks ago, a correspondent says:—This remarkable Mission is continuing week after week with increasing interest, so that it is found impossible to close. The large tent is crowded in every part, every available corner is filled, and there is not standing room even for the numbers who come late from business. It is interesting to note the motley crowd that stand all round the tent, for in this hot climate the sides are not let down; dozens of men with turbaned heads and in Eastern dress press eagerly to hear, and what is most surprising is that thoughtful Hindoos and busy students come night after night and listen with unabated interest. Here, as at Lahore, there has been no difficulty in getting all classes of the community to attend together, so that the audience presents a varied aspect—English civilians, men of business of all grades, students, educated Hindoos, women of all classes, from the grey-headed to the native girls in the Christian schools.

It was at the earnest request of the missionaries and others that Dr. Pentecost changed his plans and came to Madras, and they have not been disappointed. From day to day he receives letters showing that a spirit of inquiry is abroad, and bringing out in sad contrast the rapidity with which scepticism is spreading among the educated community in India, and how eagerly sceptical literature is devoured among them. Dr. Pentecost's method of presenting the truth is specially calculated to show to them the reasonableness of Christianity, and its claim on them as thinking men. He does not shrink from discussing with them vexed questions in religion, while never losing sight of the one object of his mission, to bring them to the feet of Christ. It is not the crowd alone that testifies to the good being done in Madras, but night after night, as he asks those who come to step forward and choose the side of Christ, not a few accept the invitation. The hearts of the missionaries and workers in Madras are cheered by seeing those they work amongst yielding themselves to God. Such testimonies as these were heard yesterday: "I am glad that I did not miss the meeting last night; three of the girls of my boarding-school came forward, and I was glad to be there to tell them how glad I was." "Pray for our college; the students are attending your meetings; some have been converted; we want to be an earnest band and to have more added to our number."

Dr. Pentecost will not be able to continue the service much longer, as his voice has already failed several times, and he is in much need of rest.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE IN INDIA.

Mrs. J. S. Haig, of the Christian Vernacular Education Society, Ahmednaggar, Bombay, in a recent letter, says:—"We are very glad to get The Christian, as it brings us into touch with many kinds of Christian work that we should otherwise hear nothing about. Our own work here is chiefly amongst the young, especially the training of native Christian lads for mission-school teachers. These are engaged in all the Evangelical missions in the Presidency, wherever the Marathi language is spoken, especially in the country districts, and it is from amongst the children trained in these country mission-schools, and their parents and relatives, that the chief accessions to the Christian Church are gained.

"For years past we have had a school in a little village on the outskirts of the town, and now within the last two months twelve adults have been baptized in this village, many of them being old pupils. These are able to read the Word of God for themselves; after their baptism we presented each one able to read with a New Testament. What an advantage that gave them over the ordinary uneducated villager! This fruit after many days was a great encouragement.

"Our Society is also doing a great deal to provide suitable Christian literature for the masses of the people. As this work is being very much expanded to meet the growing needs of the country, the name of our Society has been changed to the Christian Literature Society, but our educational work is carried on as before."

POSTAL AND TELEGRAPH C.A.

A series of meetings was held on Tuesday and Wednesday last week, in the City Temple, Holborn-viaduct, by the International Postal and Telegraph Christian Association, which is year by year extending to new countries godly fellowship and influence among employés of these public services, while developing varied beneficent operations in its earlier centres of work.

It was the fourth occasion on which British annual gatherings have been held, including, this year, a workers' conference, and tidings of cheer from metropolitan and provincial delegates, and a mass meeting presided over by Sir Arthur Blackwood, and enlivened by the excellent singing of the Post Office Choir.

The Chairman's inspiriting address at the last-named well-attended meeting dealt with branches increased and work revived both at home and abroad; but he said that friends in Vienna asked prayer on account of the sudden and forcible stoppage of the work by those in authority. Sir Arthur proceeded to show that the Association is unassailable in its principles, unsectarian in its character, and unlimited in its field of operations; and he sought to stimulate effort for Christ by telling how, in connection with the "Mission Band" department, one watchful and earnest postman had been the means of starting a Sunday afternoon meeting among the spiritually-neglected servants of a large hotel.

Rev. Wm. Haslam delivered encouraging and strengthening testimony concerning God's grace in Christian despondency, conflict, and triumph; and the characteristic and, at times, homely manner in which he set forth the essentials of faith's victory, met with evident appreciation on the part of the many earnest souls who listened.

Among other speakers during the two days were Sir Robert Phayre, Colonel Elliott, Revs. C. G. Moore, E. W. Moore, Messrs. Albert Head and H. Maynard.

We are glad to learn that the present year promises to prove, in regard to sound work for God, the most useful that the Association has known. The office is at 11, Little Britain, E.C.

MISSION TO THE WESTERN MONGOLIANS.

With reference to the mention made in our issue for February 11 of the need for labourers among the Mongolians of Western China at Karrashar, Western Mongolia and Zungaria, Dr. Van Norden writes:—One acceptable worker is ready, his expenses being wholly provided for by the church sending him forth. Two more young men are needed—patient, gracious, enduring in the Lord, and content to labour in the glad tidings in all lowliness and meekness among this simple and poor people. By this mission the great Mohammedan population and the comparatively few Chinese will also be reached indirectly. For the former a minister who has laboured in the Gospel in North India, and is desirous that something should be done for their salvation, has offered assistance in the providing of Scripture tracts for distribution, and a liberal gift of money. A contribution has also come from Liverpool. So the Lord is helping little by little. Any desiring to be witnesses among the Mongols, or otherwise to have fellowship in this work, may obtain information either at the Missionary Bureau, No. 1, Gresham-street, E.C., or at the address below.

The object of this Mission is a simple testimony to Christ crucified and risen, in dependence on his guidance and power by his Holy Spirit. To this end, only "unlearned and ignorant men" are asked for, and only such maintenance is sought from the Lord as shall enable the workers to live very plainly, that the glad tidings of eternal life in Jesus may not be hindered by an apparent seeking after the things of this world.

It is also desirable that those who go forth from churches should, in their witness to Christ among the heathen, represent and receive maintenance from the same, that at the coming of our Lord, those who have abode by the stuff may share equally in the spoils of victory with those who have gone down to the battle. It may be that pastors and elders will make known in their churches this opportunity for service.

For the Young.

THE BOY WHO DID HIS BEST.

He is doing his best, that boy of sixteen, stretched out before a bright fire in the tanning shed. Reclining upon an old sheepskin with book in hand, he is acquiring knowledge as surely as any student at his desk in some favoured institution, with all the conveniences and facilities for learning. He is doing his best, too—this same boy Claude—as he helps his master to prepare the sheep and lambs' skins for dyeing, so that they can be made into leather. He is doing his best by obedience and by respectful conduct to his master, in endeavouring to do his work well, although he often makes mistakes, as his work is not so well suited to his tastes as the study of Greek and Latin.

"See there, young rapscallion!" calls out Gaspard Beaurais, the tanner; "how you're mixing up the wools." For Claude's wits were "wool gathering" sure enough; but he was not sorting the wool aright.

"Aye, aye, sir," replied the apprentice, "but I will fix them all right." And he quickly set to work to repair his mistake.

"He'll never make a tanner," said Gaspard to his good wife, "and much I fear he'll never be able to earn his bread.

"Sure enough," replied his wife; "and yet he's good and obedient, and never gives back a word to all your scolding." And in after years, when the aged couple received handsome presents from this distinguished man who had been their apprentice they thought of these words.

One evening there came a stormy, boisterous wind, and the little stream in which the tanner was wont to wash his wool upon the skins was swollen to a torrent. To attempt to cross it by ford at such a time would render one liable to be carried down the stream and dashed to pieces on the rocks.

"We must get all the skins under cover," said Gaspard to his apprentice; "a storm is at hand."

The task was finished, and the tanner was about to return to his cot and Claude to his shed, when the boy exclaimed, "Surely I heard a cry. Some one is trying to cross the ford."

In an instant he darted towards the river, followed by his master carrying the lantern. Some villagers were already there, and a strong rope was tied around the waist of the brave boy, who was about to plunge into the stream, for a man upon horseback was seen coming down the river, both rider and horse much exhausted. Claude succeeded in grasping the rein, and the strong hand of the master that held the rope drew him to the shore, and all were saved. Soon afterwards, the stranger sat by the tanner's cheerful fire, having quite won the hearts of the good man and his wife by his kind and courteous manner.

"What can I do for your brave boy?" he asked.

"He's none of ours, and not much credit will he be to any one, we fear. He wastes too much time over useless books," was the bluff reply of the honest tanner, who could not see what possible use Claude's studies would be to him.

"May I see the books?" asked the stranger.

Claude being called, brought the books of the Greek and Latin classics, and stood with downcast face expecting to be rebuked. But instead he received words of commendation from the gentleman, who, after some talk and questions, was astonished at the knowledge the boy had acquired.

A few months later, instead of the old tanning shed as a study, Claude might be seen with his books in a handsome mansion at Paris, in the house of M. de Vallis, whose life he had saved, and who had become his friend and benefactor. The boy felt that he had only done his duty, and that he was receiving much in return, and he determined to make every effort to meet the expectations of his patron.

He succeeded. Claude Copperonier, the boy who did his best, became the most distinguished Greek and Latin scholar of his time. At the age of twenty-five he filled the chair of Greek Professor in the Royal College of Paris. More than this, he became a man who feared God, and was much beloved for his goodness and amiable qualities. He never forgot his former master and wife. Their old age was cheered by many tokens of remembrance in the form of substantial gifts from the man who, when a boy, studied so diligently by the fire of their old shed, but who "would never make a tanner."—Selected.

"ONLY A GOLDEN CROCUS."

Only a golden crocus,
That bloomed in the early spring,
When the frosts were rude and ruthless,
And life was a hardy thing;
Only a golden crocus,
That the tempest bent and blew,
With only a snowdrop near it,
To prove that one love was true.

Only a golden crocus,
Only a short-lived flower,
That would have to go when the sunshine
Illumined the summer bower;
But that fragile golden crocus
Was blooming its little best,
And the country people loved it,
And I felt it was truly blest.

Only a golden crocus!
Many are blooming so,
Out in the chilling tempest,
Out in the driving snow.
Little they know of summer,
Little they see of flowers;
They are the lonely blossoms
Born in the wintry hours.

Only a golden crocus!
Short is the life they live;
But they bloom as the Master bids them,
With beauty that He doth give.
So the people prize and love them,
Though quickly they pass away;
And the Lord will have such blossoms
In His golden crown some day.

Destitute Children in Dublin.

Larger premises had long been greatly needed for the work of the Homes for Destitute Children, Dublin, and since the publication of the last report, have been found, much to the joy of the committee, at 64 (instead of 71), Eccles-street. Here every facility for increasing the numbers and adding to the comfort and advantages of the little inmates has been eagerly appropriated and wisely developed, so that already the growing family has gone up to 123; the requisite sum for purchase fund has been provided, the good seed is bearing its fruit in the young hearts and lives.

The Home is under the care of Miss L. H. Carr, who adds: "We close the year without any money in hand, but we feel that our Heavenly Father who has entrusted us with this work for Him will supply all our need, and, as hitherto, will give us day by day our daily bread."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Mar. 13, Matthew xvi. 1-12; Mon., Mar. 14, xvi. 13-18; Tues., Mar. 15, xvii. 1-13; Wed., Mar. 16, xvii. 14-27; Thurs., Mar. 17, xviii. 1-20; Fri., Mar. 18, xviii. 21-35; Sat., Mar. 19, xix. 13-30.

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH-ROAD.—The annual meeting was held on Monday week. Addresses were given by Messrs. Robert Paton, H. D. Brown, J. S. Harrison, H. J. Fry, and Dr. Howie. Reports were given of blessing in the Gospel both in the Tabernacle and in the open air, also of the prospering work in connection with the mothers' meeting and Sunday-school. Much help has been rendered to the sick and poor, specially during the winter.

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES AND FISHERMEN is the title of a little book written by Francis J. S. Hopwood, of the Board of Trade, in the interests of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C. Originally contributed to Toilers of the Deep, these pages suggest that the scope of its philanthropic work and aims of the Mission should be extended so as to reach British fishermen in the waters of Newfoundland, the oldest colony of the Crown. The annual migrations to the coast of Labrador are attended with many scandalous evils, and should no longer be tolerated. The pamphlet may be obtained at the offices of the Mission.

WORKING SOCIETY FOR POOR CHILDREN.

Some time ago the Baroness Burdett-Coutts became the President of the Ladies' Working Society for Poor Children, in connection with the Ragged School Union, and for long past her Ladyship has been desirous of an opportunity of meeting the chief representatives of the Association. Some disappointment was therefore felt when the Baroness was unable to be present at a largely-attended drawing-room meeting, held at Mrs. Knight's, Stanhope-gardens, South Kensington, on February 23. Lady Lumsden well filled the place of honour, however, and brought a letter from the President, expressing her sorrow at being unable to be present, and her deep interest in the charitable work undertaken.

Mr. John Kirk, Secretary of the Ragged School Union, stated that the work done by the ladies was distributed among two hundred schools in London. In the year there had been received 6321 garments, besides a quantity of material to make, and over two thousand garments which had been worn. These all represented a great variety, and would find ready acceptance among the 50,000 children who were in the schools. Other friends had sent toys, eggs, and such eatables. There were scrapbooks also, which were left at the homes of the crippled little ones. The plan was to replenish the clothes cupboard of each school according to its needs. The Union had been at work almost fifty years, and they still received sad accounts of the condition of some of the children.

Mrs. Lynn explained that she and others had undertaken this work because the Lord had touched their hearts. To work so as to get benefit they had to work for the glory of God. They need never get discouraged; they should rather place themselves in God's hands, and ask Him to direct them. It all went for little unless they did solid Christian work. While they cared for the little bodies of the children, it should be known that every stitch was done, because God had moved them to do it. God would always open a way for them if they sought his glory. They needed to have wise hearts, such as would prevent their being blinded by new fancies, and which would enable them to do all things as unto the Lord. It was a privilege to be co-workers with Christ. As Ragged School agents they touched the very lowest grade of humanity; and with a family of 50,000 to look after, they could do with all they could get.

Mrs. E. H. Watts, of Chiswick, showed how she and her helpers had provided 1300 garments, and about four hundred pairs of boots for the Holiday Homes. She also strongly disapproved of holiday children being placed in cottages, which, in a large number of cases, were quite unsuitable. Mr. C. Montague, of the King Edward Schools, Spitalfields, testified to the extreme value of the assistance given by the ladies to such schools as he represented. He could not describe how much sickness there had been. In holiday time many children would have to stay at home but for such help as that Association rendered, and he hardly knew what could have been done without such aid. Children were the hope of the future, and there were never such times for helping them as now.

Mr. J. R. Diggle, Chairman of the London School Board, said that the Ragged School Union touched the lowest depths, and only those acquainted with the children could realise the extent of the influence exercised. In doing good harm was occasionally done as well, but they could not make a mistake with the children. The work undertaken was a true outcome of Christian faith. Great care was taken in the distribution. There had been difficulties in days gone by, but now there were no difficulties. He asked them to enlarge their sympathies. How little did they realise how great the kindness of the poor was for the poor! Proportionately the poor did much more for the poor than the rich. He thought that more support should be accorded to the Ragged School Union, because they had now an extended area. All should help in such a work, which would be judged of in accordance with the spirit in which it was undertaken. It was a practical outcome of love. In proportion as they felt that God had been good to them would their lives be useful to others.

Addresses were also given by Mr. Hayward and Mrs. Poor. Ladies wishing to co-operate should communicate with the Secretary, Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

RATCLIFF BRIDGE OF HOPE.

The Bridge of Hope has again this winter thrown wide-open its sheltering doors to many hopeless and helpless waifs, who, standing at the foot of the precipice into which they have fallen, see no way by which to climb back again to life and hope. Those to whom the vision of Heaven is shut out, and for whom earth brings forth only thorns and thistles—friends gone, love lost, and home only a memory—till, in their despair, they scarcely believe in a God! Such come to our doors, and since last October, to nearly six hundred of these forlorn ones have we opened. To each one, to the best of our ability, according to her need, have we ministered, and a loving hand of help has been held out.

The work is as diverse as the numbers who come, for each is the centre of her own little world, and each has her own separate heart-ache. How we rejoice when in any way we can help any one again to get a foothold on the ladder of life, and begin again the weary climb up in this over-crowded city; but still more blessed to tell the weary one of Him who gives true rest, and to speak to the soul that is sick to death with the struggle for bare subsistence, of Him who came to bring life—the life more abundant.

Our family here, and in our country Homes, daily numbers over two hundred, and never anywhere is there a corner to spare. As one passes out, again to take her place in the world as an honest worker, the place is instantly filled by another who has been waiting for admittance; and this goes on all the year, winter and summer alike.

Every morning, before the bell rings at the Board School opposite our Home, some sixty little children—the most hungry and needy among the eight or nine hundred who daily assemble there—come into our dining-hall for a comfortable breakfast of hot cocoa and bread-and-butter. Scarcely a morning passes but some little garment is found for the most ragged and forlorn-looking child, and we often wish our stores could supply more clothes. Jackets, and knickers, and shirts for the boys are the most sorely needed.

We have lately opened a little Cottage Home, for young mothers and their poor little infants. But I scarcely dare to make mention of any such addition; it only means that applications come from so many quarters for admission—and, although our walls are elastic, still there is a point beyond which they will not stretch. The Mothers' Cottage Home was full the week after it was opened.

We have changed another of the children's country cottages into a home for little girls, who, more than any other class in the whole community, are to be pitied. Poor darlings! how one would like to give them back the memory of an unsullied childhood; but so often, so miserably often, the one toward whom the little one should look with a child's devoted love and reverence, and from whom, looking up, she should learn to love and reverence her Father in heaven, has been the cause of her misery and ruin. This is working in the depths indeed! and our hearts are often nearly broken as we strive to heal the little shattered lives. And did we not hear our Lord's voice, as we stand dumb before many a child who is brought to us, saying, "Bring her hither to Me!" I am sure the work would be impossible. Will our friends remember the very special grace we need for this difficult service, and see that our hands are well sustained in it by every means?

We could do much more among these children, strictly keeping to our own lines of work. It seems always we are saying, "No." Applicants for places in the Homes are so much more numerous than vacancies.

We are careful not to go beyond the means our friends send us; but we have helpers, we have experience, and we have a yearning love for the little children. Will not some motherly and fatherly hearts, whether wealthy or with only a little to give, go shares with us in still further stretching out helping hands of rescue to many more of these little girl waifs?

POLICE SEASIDE HOME.—The second annual meeting of this West Brighton Home was held on Wednesday, March 2, when details of the work were given. The Home accommodates sixteen men and has been well used during the past year. The committee have resolved to build a permanent Home, and a lady has already given two thousand pounds for the purpose.

"Admitted to Die."

BY THOS. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.E.

The fact has been emphasised that the work of the Homes under my care is "something more than a gigantic humanitarian scheme for feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. It is pre-eminently a Christian effort to bring the children to the Lord Jesus Christ." And as a result numbers of our lads and girls are, indeed, now practically missionaries in various parts of the world whither they have gone, and where they are exemplifying the power of the Gospel of Christ.

But many who came under my care came only to die. Such a one was Christopher Wren, whose record was remarkable in many respects. Unless my drag net had been not only wide in its sweep, but small in its mesh, he would never have seen the inside of our Homes. For he was wholly without relatives or friends: under the great vault of heaven there was not one human creature upon whom he had—so far as he could trace—any special claim of kindred. He was a genuine specimen of a street wanderer. He believed his father to be a certain hawker of canes, whose whereabouts, however, he did not know. Seldom had I seen in all my experience of rough lads from the street a less prepossessing youth. His coarse features, hollow cheeks and attenuated frame gave him a haggard appearance, which prevented him from appealing to personal sympathy on any mere sentimental grounds.

But he had unquestioned claims upon our Homes. There was no doubt whatever that he was destitute and friendless. Furthermore, alas! his constitution had been thoroughly undermined by the exposure to which he had been subjected, and which had developed the seeds of phthisis lying latent in his system. Christopher was admitted at once; but—he was admitted to die!

For some time Christopher had been the inmate of an Industrial School; then, three years before I first saw him, on the occasion of one of our Free Meals, to which he had been invited by one of my Slum-Searchers, he had left the school and gone to his father, who was at the time living in Flower-and-Dean-street. Those who know what Flower-and-Dean-street used to be will understand what kind of home it was he went to. But only for three weeks did the ill-assorted partnership continue. "Without natural affection" characterises very often the lowest depths of London life: his father would have nothing more to do with him, and from that time forward Christopher was thrown entirely on his own resources. What was he to do? Odd jobs, of course, claimed him. For ten days he had a temporary engagement as a scavenger; then he fell back on selling matches and newspapers, a trade that any one can start with a capital of sixpence. For a time, too, he associated with a street singer, and shared his gains; but this partnership soon dissolved, and Christopher had to fall back on his odd jobbing.

When our Free Supper first claimed Christopher as a guest, he was about as sad a specimen of physical misery and wretchedness as I had ever seen; and it was not difficult to perceive that exposure and privation had left deep traces on his worn frame. I remember the eagerness with which he made application for admission to the Homes at the close of the meal, and the gleam of a new hope in his face when he learned that misery and destitution were his best passports. He had never met with anything of the kind before, through all his wretched homeless wanderings. I had his story taken down, and tested by personal investigation afterwards, so far as was possible. At several points my agents picked up the clues he gave us; but in such a broken, discontinuous career as his there were no connecting threads, and it was only here and there that we could gain independent confirmation of his tale. But his appearance and present condition were his best advocates, and I felt no hesitation in opening my doors to this poor outcast.

Hardly, however, had he been added to my flock before his health utterly broke down. He was transferred straightway to Her Majesty's Hospital,—and there it soon became apparent that he would not be long for this world. All that could be done for him was done, but his case was one of hopeless consumption. Medical and nursing skill could only alleviate suffering, and smooth the passage of the poor storm-tossed street waif through the dark valley. It was a new experience to him to be surrounded with the earnest, spiritual atmosphere of our hospital. But it was beautiful to see the refinement that came into his face and transfigured his coarse features as with the light of a higher life. His mind opened with touching and child-like simplicity to receive the old, old story of Jesus and his love, which was yet new to one who had lived in heathenism under the very sound of the church bells. Thank God that we have a message from the Master for sin-stricken souls, as well as succour for wrecked and helpless bodies! If the spiritual side of our work were ever to fall into abeyance; if mere philanthropy were to swallow up Gospel teaching; if Christ's Name and the power of his word and grace were to fall into the background, I should feel that my strength was, indeed, gone, and that this could be my life-work no longer.

There is no hope for the lapsed masses, whether young or old, save in Christ's Gospel; but, oh, the infinite possibilities of Divine grace in a human soul!

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION Y.W.C.A.

It is not always that one has the privilege of spending such a happy time as was passed at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, on Monday evening, last week, on the occasion of the annual tea and public meeting of the Tower Hamlets Mission Y.W.C.A. Miss Turner, the hon. sec. of the Y.W.C.A. in that district, was so fortunate as to secure for her platform Rev. W. Haslam, Mr. E. C. Tritton (Chairman), and Mr. Dashwood. Mr. Tritton suggested two beautiful thoughts as connected with the Y.W.C.A. and its object. He said it had two fundamental principles, viz., "A living union with Christ, and a loving union for Christ." On each point he threw out most profitable reflections.

Mr. Dashwood gave a brilliant object-lesson, the keynote being our beloved Queen's initials, V.R. As he rang the changes upon the various phases of spiritual life they represented, "Very Religious," "Very Real," &c., the theme became instructive and interesting.

Lady Sebright gave a very touching recitation, with that power and pathos for which she is so well known; and Mrs. Braithwaite favoured the audience with two sacred songs. Then Mr. Haslam seemed to gather up all the salient points from the previous speakers, and wind them into a rare Gospel message, plain, practical, powerful, as is his wont.

Not of least interest was Miss Turner's Report, which set forth the main object and working of the Y.W.C.A. as a whole. She compared the Association to a network, that now spreads itself more or less all over the world for the protection of young women, and the safe guidance of the inexperienced, who are sure to find friendship and counsel at the various branches. A great need at the Tower Hamlets branch at present is a piano, as the present instrument is in the last stage of decline. Miss Turner's address is 85, St. Peter's-street, Mile-end, E.

THE LATE

For Thirty Years Bishop of Worcester.

THE late Dr. Philpott was known and loved far beyond the confines of his own church; for, apart from his personal characteristics, all honour and admire the men who, when called to a high position, fulfil its duties with devotion and zeal, and who, moreover, while loyal and true to their own convictions, are yet large-hearted enough and loving enough to recognise real work done for Christ by other churches and other labourers outside the pale of their own communion. There is, in truth, no reason why unfaltering devotion to personal duty should be inconsistent with a just appreciation of the service rendered by others to the same Lord and Master, though under a different name ecclesiastically. The fact that these two are perfectly consonant one with the other receives fresh illustration in the career of the subject of our present sketch, who devoted himself with remarkable singleness of aim to the work of the office laid upon him, while so bearing himself towards the Nonconforming churches as to win general love and esteem.

HENRY PHILPOTT was born in Chichester in November, 1807, and received his education in the Cathedral School of the same city. Going up to Cambridge in 1825 (Catherine Hall), he became, in 1829, Senior Wrangler. It is told by the late Dr. Kennedy, Regius Professor of Greek, how, in the long vacation of 1828, he and the great mathematical tutor, Mr. Hopkins, discussed the merits of their pupil, Lord Cavendish—the late Duke of Devonshire — each maintaining that if he would give less of his time to the other study, he might be Senior Classic or Senior Wrangler in the ensuing year, though Mr. Hopkins hinted he had a "dark horse" in hand, from a small college, likely to beat every one else. The reference was to Philpott, who realised his tutor's anticipations by coming out Senior Wrangler, while Lord Cavendish stood second.

(From a photograph by Messrs. Russell and Sons, Baker-street, London, W.)

For some thirty years after his election to a fellowship, Mr. Philpott devoted himself to tutorial work and University labours, being appointed in 1845 Master of Catherine, his own hall, and becoming Vice-Chancellor of the University in 1846, during which year the Queen and Prince Consort visited Cambridge, and dined with Dr. Philpott in the College Hall.

Curiously enough, his public service divides itself into two periods of thirty years; the first, as we have seen, devoted to University labours, and the second to the duties of a bishop. In 1860 he was nominated—shortly before the death of Prince Albert—to the Bishopric of Worcester, being consecrated in 1861. From that time he gave himself entirely to his diocesan duties with a whole-hearted ability and zeal which soon made themselves felt, and won for him the appellation of a "working bishop." He had no residence in London, rarely appeared in the House of Lords, only once (and that by special summons) attended Convocation, and never, we believe, the Church Congress; but gave himself wholly to "genuine hard work, the example of unstinted liberality, and the exhibition of the most cordial sympathy with all found in need." When men called him a "stay-at-home bishop," no one intended to imply that he stayed by his own fireside to the neglect of duty; but rather that he rarely left his diocese, devoting himself altogether to its spiritual and ecclesiastical needs and necessities.

Many have testified to the extreme simplicity of his household arrangements and personal habits, and it was believed he gave away nearly the whole of his income. His will, now published, shows he did accumulate some money, but he left it largely to the Lord's service, for on the death of his widow, £10,000 is to go to the Church Pastoral Aid Society, and £10,000 to the Church Missionary Society.

Speaking of his personal affairs, we should, ere passing on, mention that in 1846 he married Mary, daughter of the Marchese de Spineto, who, by her loving helpfulness, soon won, both in Cambridge and Worcester, affectionate esteem. Some fifteen or twenty years ago, however, she lost her eyesight, and the tender way in which her husband ministered to her infirmity, so as to prevent her feeling its full burden, was most touching.

While personally, as evidenced by his Charges, an earnest and faithful Evangelical, and remarkably practical in the application of the principles he held and taught, he was no controversialist. When need be he spoke with no uncertain sound, but, as a rule, he was content faithfully to discharge his own responsibility, and leave the rest. The following extract from his Charge delivered in 1886 shows how large was his heart, and how resolutely he resisted the exclusive claims advanced by extreme men within the Church of England:—

> The great divines, whom we regard with respect as the Fathers of the Church of England, asserted that the government of the Church by Bishops was "ancient and allowable"; but they never ventured to urge for it an exclusive claim to adoption, nor denied the name of Church to men who have it not; still less did they venture to connect the validity of the sacraments of grace with the continuance of an unbroken line of succession of Bishops from the days of the Apostles.

In a like tone and spirit we find him writing at another time as to the Gospel:—

> If there is one thing more than another which shows the true character of real faith, it is the power of the Gospel practically upon the hearts and lives of those who submit themselves to it. No one of unprejudiced judgment can withstand the argument of a consistent holy life. We say, without fear of contradiction, that in proportion as the main simple doctrines of the Gospel are put in active use by the believer (apart from the accretions which have been allowed to grow up around them), the world of living men would present the picture of heaven upon earth: righteousness and peace and joy would flourish and make us happy. What would not love to Christ and love to men for Christ's sake enable those who are urged by these principles to do and suffer? Can it be, we say, that the teaching is erroneous which produces such results?

At the close of a quarter of a century's episcopal charge, he wrote the following words of retrospect and resolve:—

> Cheerful as is the retrospect of the work of a quarter of a century in the light in which I like to view it, and grateful as I have reason to be to our Heavenly Father for the measure of health and strength which has made my work a pleasure, it is not possible to suppress a feeling of sadness of heart and disappointment also. Life, with its many opportunities, has slipped away; and I have been able to do so little for the cause to which I have wished my life to be devoted. Too many instances occur to me of leaving undone what I ought to have done; perhaps also of doing what I ought not to have done. Too many hopes and aspirations remain unfulfilled. Too many opportunities have been lost. Knowledge of Divine things, which has been my unceasing, earnest aim, and which, perhaps, more patient and devout inquiry might have put me in possession of, has been attained only in part, and communicated imperfectly to others. The things of heaven are still seen too much "through a glass darkly," though waiting, let me say, in humble trust for the fulness of joy in seeing "face to face" hereafter.
> Amidst all the imperfections and infirmities, however, of which I am deeply conscious, I take comfort in the thought that, in the service of a gracious Master, I am—
> But as the hind,
> To whom a space of land is given to plough,
> Who may not wander from the allotted field
> Before his work is done.

It will be within the memory of all that in August, 1890, Dr. Philpott resigned his bishopric, giving as his reason "the growing infirmities of old age"; and addressing to his clergy words of tender and touching farewell.

For a little over a year he devoted himself to his afflicted wife, passing away in January last, lamented by many who knew and loved him. Nor were his sincere mourners Churchmen only, for his energetic, faithful and large-hearted devotion had won for him, during his long career, the affections of many belonging to other Churches. It may be noted that Mrs. Philpott still survives, but there were no children.

To close in the words of one who knew him well, "No chief pastor ever gained more thoroughly the esteem and affection both of the clergy and laity in his diocese and of all with whom he came in contact."

WHY BELIEVE IN THE BIBLE?

Those who have drunk in good measure of the well of Holy Writ, will agree with the author of a leaflet, which has recently been brought under our notice, that without the solutions given in Biblical revelation life and death are impenetrable mysteries. Having found in its moral teachings, and historical and prophetical characteristics, reasons for believing in the Bible, the author proceeds:—

I believe in the Bible because I find in the Old Testament an oft-recurring special promise that a Divine Saviour should come into the world. He was to be also the "Son of Man," and, as such, to be of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David. Yet, notwithstanding this noble descent, He was to be born of a lowly virgin mother, and in the city of Bethlehem, which, save for its connection with the House of David, was accounted but "little among the thousands of Judah." He was to give proof of his being the Promised One by the perfection of his character, by the excellence and authority of his teaching, and by the benevolent and supernatural works which He did. Still He would be rejected by his people and ignominiously put to death. But He would rise triumphantly from the dead. In the New Testament I find a fourfold testimony (given through eye-witnesses) that every one of these prophetic promises was fulfilled in the birth, life, teaching, miracles, death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus Christ. Thus Jesus is fully proved to be the Saviour of fallen man.

But Jesus having been declared to be "the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead," the seal of his sanction must ever remain the final and supreme test of each subject of Christian faith. This seal has been indelibly impressed on the inspiration of the Old Testament Scripture by his own example. From this armoury Jesus Himself drew the weapons with which He foiled the temptations of the devil, and to this tribunal He brought every controversy. Even his own claims to the Messiahship He desired his hearers to test by the Scriptures, as an authority to which all must bow. With the inspiration of the New Testament Scriptures the Lord Jesus Christ is entirely identified. The writers of the New Testament shared in the all-sufficient promise made by their Divine Master on the eve of his passion, and repeated just before his ascension, that He would not leave them comfortless, but would come to them through the gift of the Holy Ghost. He would abide with them, leading them into all truth, and enduing them with power from on high. This promise had its special fulfilment from the day of Pentecost to the end of the Apostolic age, during which time the New Testament was written by men who were moved to commit to writing the facts of which they were personally cognisant, and to communicate to others the revelations which had been made to themselves as to the faith and practice of the members of the Christian Church until the Lord's second coming to restore all things. To the beloved Apostle John the Holy Spirit committed the closing book of the Bible, and the New Testament, ending "God's Word written," is the completion of and key to the Old.

Other important considerations, well expressed and cogent, we do not reproduce, as interested readers can have copies of the leaflet by writing to Mrs. Clunie, The Leys, Cambridge.

NOTES FROM CHICAGO.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Sunday Question is still before the people. Shall the World's Fair be opened on the Sabbath? is still an unanswered question. The powers of darkness are moving all their minions in favour of it, and the churches have from all quarters thundered the emphatic No! But the pressure from abroad, and even in America, is strongly in favour of all the gates being thrown open on the Lord's-day. License has been granted to sell liquors on the ground, and many a good heart will be pained at the sight of this Dagon in the palaces of industry.

Several new efforts have been inaugurated in mission work in our great city. Coffee waggons, with delicious fresh coffee, drive up before the gates of the large factories just as the whistle tells of the dinner hour, and as hundreds of men are rushing for the nearest saloon for beer. Scores of men prefer the hot coffee, with cream and sugar, and in many cases have been known to throw the beer into the gutter, and accept a quart of coffee. The usual price of the coffee is about three cents per quart. Many employers encourage the work, and come out and get some coffee for their own use.

Miss Catherine Gurney, of London, has been conducting a mission among policemen in Chicago. She appeared before the ministers of the Congregational Church, and explained the work in England. She is sure there is an extensive field here, and if the proper efforts are made missions can be established, and a great many officers brought to Christ. Rev. Dr. Gilbert, editor of the Advance, warmly commended her work, having studied it in London. Vigorous work was begun at once, on the lines suggested.

The intrigues of Romanism have stirred up great commotion in Minnesota. It seems that public money has been appropriated to certain schools, declared by the people to be parochial, and not legitimately under the direction of the School Boards of the State. Long years of careful manipulation have brought about these appropriations contrary to the constitutional laws of the State. Civil injunctions have been served, and test cases are before the Courts.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago is preparing plans and raising money for the erection of a beautiful twelve-storey building, which it is hoped will be ready for occupation before the opening of the Columbian Exposition. The building is to cost about 700,000 dollars, and the site is valued at about 800,000 dollars, making the total cost of 1,500,000 dollars. The association expects to secure 400,000 dollars in subscriptions, which amount, with the property now owned by the association, will insure the success of the enterprise. 270,000 dollars has already been pledged. The building will be of steel frame, stone, pressed brick and terra-cotta, and will be absolutely fireproof. The site is on La Salle-street in the very heart of the city. Fully one-half of the large structure will be devoted to the uses of the association, while the portion rented for office purposes will insure a permanent income to the association, to be employed in the extension of the work in different parts of the city. It is hoped that the building will be completed in time to receive the thousands of association men who will visit the city in 1893. The Chicago Association has a membership of 5000 young men, rooms in nine sections of the city, all open every day and freely used by the members.

A VIAL FULL OF ODOURS.

Rev. v. 8.

An old Spanish proverb says, "A good life is a good sermon." The truth of this received a beautiful exemplification in a life just passed from out a large circle of friends and loved ones—that of Mrs. Shrimpton (née Bruford). As the daughter of an old Somersetshire squire, she had opportunity and means, in her earlier life, of entering into the gaieties and pleasures of the society by which she was surrounded. Courted and admired, and known as "the beautiful Miss Bruford," she has related how often, after some excitement, she would go to her room, and a feeling of despondency would creep over her heart, to cure which, she would indulge in some fresh excitement. So it went on, until the call came—"The Lord hath need" of thee. Before this, she had been a devout Sunday Christian, had been the chief means in the restoration of her beloved church, and had in many ways shown that she was what the world calls "religious." But our Father wants the hearts of his children, He wanted Miss Bruford's, and she yielded it to Him.

Her life at once took a different colour; but, as yet, she was only half in the light. Through a long illness she patiently nursed her father, and, shortly after his death, married, and came to London. Here, in an influential circle of Christian friends, she found her vocation as a servant of the Lord. She became 'a succourer of many'—her sweet example of faith, her winsome Christianity, her personal charm, her desire to win souls for her Lord, made her "a burning and a shining light," and day by day one saw the beautiful life opening out into holier fruition, as flowers open their hearts to the sun. Young people flocked to her—she had a very large branch of the Children's Scripture Union; meetings, correspondence, private talks, prayers (and she believed in prayer as the breath of her life), were all used to win the young, the old, her friends, to Christ. One could not be in the house with her without feeling that her presence and her power made it as the gate of heaven.

A great trial came to her, but it became a means of the highest blessing. When it seemed to others that she was being strained on the rack, her beautiful smile and her wonderful faith would say, "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good." To the writer she once said: "You think this a great trouble, but oh! if you knew how much I have seen of my Lord in it, how tenderly He has led me out of myself into *Him*self, you would thank Him every day for me for this chastening." She never missed an opportunity of speaking for Him; a peculiarly sweet and winning manner gave her easy access to others, and there be many who rise up to call her blessed. Extreme weakness and bodily suffering did not diminish her zeal in the cause of the Master she loved so well. When her case was pronounced hopeless by the doctors she gave herself to prayer, trusted the Lord for healing, and was restored to her loved ones for some years—a miracle of grace and faith in God.

One beautiful trait of her character was her tender dealing with the faults of others; no breath of uncharitableness could find expression in her presence. "Hush!" she would say, "Cannot you find something better in him (or her) than that? The Lord loves him!" A few days before her passing away, after bidding adieu to a beloved niece who was going to India as a missionary, the omnibus in which she was came to a standstill for a few minutes; in that brief time she spoke to her fellow-passengers on the uncertainty of life, and the necessity for decision when two roads are before us. She was a golden vial, full of the odour of sanctity—a sweet savour unto the Lord, so that, even the Materialist and the Agnostic could say of her, "She was a veritable saint of God." Her reality put many a half-and-half Christian to the blush, and compelled them to seek out their sources of weakness, and to become "Strong in the Lord." She passed away very suddenly at the last, and for her, we who are left know, that sudden death would be sudden glory.

M. B. Geeds.

REV. THOMAS CONNELLAN continues his faithful testimony to the truth in Ireland, and his efforts are being blessed to many. Nearly eighty thousand copies of his and his brother's writings have been circulated within the last three years. The ex-priest's valuable pamphlet, "Hear the Other Side," is now stereotyped, and can be had in any numbers from Mr. George Herbert, Grafton-street, Dublin. The Catholic, Mr. Connellan's monthly, has met with much acceptance.

REV. H. C. G. MOULE AT ST. PAUL'S.

THE SOUL'S SILENCE, SPEECH, AND SHELTER.

At three of the Lenten services in St. Paul's Cathedral last week, the pulpit was most acceptably occupied by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge. The large audiences which assembled beneath the dome at 1.15 on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, must have been solemnised, profited, and cheered by the faithful words which they were privileged to hear. All the discourses were grounded upon Psalm xxxii.

The first brief afternoon meditation was a graphic pourtrayal, from v. 3, of the painful and spiritually-injurious effects of the silence and reserve which men often maintain before God, under conviction of sin. On Wednesday part of v. 5 furnished the basis of plain and gracious teaching concerning God's tender mercy towards the burdened one who at length breaks into the utterance of confession. When selfish excuses for sin collapse, and the once rebellious soul takes a definite and real resolve to submit, surrender, and confess to God, Divine grace takes effect through the human will. Even in the Christian heart a hopeless barrier may be raised between the penitent and peace, by the spirit of extenuation. Real confession is not only regret for, but rejection of sin; and the Divine forgiveness which succeeds such a state of soul, is no half measure given grudgingly, but includes acceptance of the penitent into the presence, the love, the home, and the embrace of a pardoning God. Nor is such forgiveness a long-delayed thing. The Psalmist was not excused discipline, but he was nevertheless forgiven immediately on confession. If we confess our sin, God is not only kind and merciful, tender and gracious, but He is also faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. His pledge of pardon is written in the blood of the cross; sealed, to the soul that cometh, by the Word; and confirmed by the indwelling Spirit. The Martyr—Bishop Hannington, was brought decisively and definitely to his Saviour's feet by its being pressed home upon him, in homeliest style, that since God has promised pardon, it is for man, upon his knees and with his face in the dust indeed, to claim fulfilment of that promise.

God, the soul's hiding-place (verse 7 of the Psalm already quoted) was the glorious theme by which the preacher, on Friday afternoon, closed his series of helpful expositions. How, he asked, should a forgiven soul hold on its way? Then he proceeded to show that the grace of God is not something separate or separable from the God of grace. The saved sinner is not withdrawn from the plane of active life; but, while such as he are called to be the light of the world and the salt of the earth, they find in God their hiding-place not only protection but life, power, victory, and triumph—in short, the secret of a steady-flowing spiritual strength equal to all their necessities. While watchfully looking out from our hiding-place, the foe may threaten but cannot prevail against us. Temptation will have no power against us there. Things which are mournful or mean in themselves, will take on beauty when seen through the atmosphere of our Lord's presence, and when met in the strength which comes of union and communion with Him. The saved soul is encompassed not only by the grey walls of safety, but also with songs of deliverance. The Christian's life and trust is meant to be a song of joy, not always in the same key nor of the same force, but music always, because ever flowing from living contact with Jesus Christ, the source of true happiness.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR SOCIETY.—The Golden Rule, the organ of the Christian Endeavour Societies, says: "Mr. A. M. Boolgoorjoo, of Marash, Turkey, sends us a very enthusiastic account of a gathering of over fifteen hundred, chiefly young people, who met to hear Mr. Wishard explain Y.M.C.A. work, and Mr. Grant explain the Y.P.S.C.E. These fifteen hundred were seated on the floor in Oriental style. They gave the best of attention, and before the foreigners left the city they held a genuine consecration meeting. We join heartily with Mr. Boolgoorjoo in the wish: Long live Y.M.C.A. and Y.P.S.C.E.; and may they travel round the world together!" The Society is making advances in the Maritime Provinces of Canada, especially in Nova Scotia, where the societies have more than doubled during the past year.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.

At the recent annual meeting of this Society Mr. W. T. Slowan (secretary) presented an encouraging report of work in the far North, where one of the agents has been visiting the Laplanders; also in Continental lands, in Syria, India, China, Japan, in Africa, America, and in the Home lands. One gratifying feature in the year's income is the contribution of £8000 by the 330 auxiliary societies. Another, the fact that the large expenditure of £30,000 has been more than met by current receipts; legacies, however, have been unusually large, or there would have been a deficiency. The expenses are running up, especially in China, the most important foreign field occupied by the Society. Three additional agents, the new version, and the erection of buildings at Hankow, point to larger outlay. The budget for 1892 contemplates an expenditure of £32,000. The Board are anxious to have the regular annual income placed on a broader basis. They would fain see the annual circulation a million.

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, said it was significant that even Roman Catholics, at least in this country, were putting Bibles in the hands of the people to prevent them reading the Protestant Bible. But if they wanted to see whether the Roman Catholic Church, as ruled from headquarters, had changed in its opinion, they had only to go and see what was happening to their colporteurs in Spain—within twenty-four or thirty hours' journey of London—where there was persecution nearly as bitter as that which had been impossible in this country for several hundred years. If they attempted Bible distribution they would likely find themselves in prison—not because it was contrary to the law, but because the administrators of the law were under Roman Catholic influence. One gratifying point in the report which he thought very encouraging was the increase of circulation that had taken place especially in Roman Catholic countries.

Rev. D. Clement Scott, of Blantyre, Central Africa, said that the work in Africa in connection with this Bible Society was one of great importance. Just as at home, there was the beginning of a very great and important work. Their scholars were learning to read the Scriptures in their own tongue, and the translation of the Bible put into their hands by the society helped them in their work. There were great fields still unoccupied to which missionaries must be sent, and they must send the Bible along with them to enable them to carry on their work.

Rev. John C. Gibson, of Swatow, testified to the frank and generous response given by the directors of Bible societies to appeals which came to them from the mission fields abroad, and gave an interesting address on the work being done in China for the circulation of the Bible. He urged upon them the importance of a greater circulation within the Christian Church in China, because he felt there was a great work to be done in making these native Christians more intelligent and better grounded in Christian truth.

Rev. T. T. Matthews, of Madagascar, said it was the Bible that had made Madagascar. They had now in Madagascar 1360 congregations—self-supporting Christian congregations—and that work had been mainly done by the Bible. The people of Madagascar had one book, and that book the Bible, and they regarded all other books as only useful so far as they threw light on the Bible and helped them to understand it. The Roman Catholics had been in Madagascar since 1616, but no trace of their work remains, because they did not give the Word of God to the people.

THE CLOUDESLEY INSTITUTE AND HOME, 34, Barnsbury-street, Islington, N., exists for the purpose of helping and benefiting working girls, and the little pamphlet "Our girls and what is done for them," shows that it has been greatly owned and blessed in leading many of them to the Saviour. "I look forward all day," said one, "to coming here in the evening." And another, "The Sunday Bible-class is to me the bright spot in the week." It is added that already the influence of the Christian members predominates over the careless and worldly, and thus gives a moral and spiritual tone to the place which is in the highest degree helpful. These are teaching in no fewer than twenty-six Sunday and Ragged schools, beside other Christian work. Aid may be sent to Mrs. Susannah Paton, Hon. Secretary, 22, Highbury-terrace, N.

WORK IN THE NAVY.

Some seventy thousand in number, the seamen and marines of the Royal Navy secure our commerce, protect our colonies, and guard our coasts. Are not the souls of these fine fellows as precious as any others? Viewed from even a selfish point, it is surely to our interest that they be sober, vigilant, and trustworthy. Though the Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society has existed for over thirty years, patiently pursuing its Christian efforts among these men, yet so unobtrusively has the work been carried on, that the Christian public seems scarcely to have heard of its existence. Since 1860, the number of Readers has been increased from one to sixteen; but "what are they among so many?"

There are about 270 ships afloat, and more than two-thirds of them without a chaplain; in the largest vessels, containing from three hundred to six hundred men the chaplains have found the services of the Readers invaluable. The Readers visit H.M. ships, hospitals, and barracks upon a regular system, for the purpose of reading and speaking to the men. They distribute tracts and books, and are almost invariably very well received.

It is with the greatest difficulty that the Society raises the modest income of £2,000 per annum; although with greater support it could easily increase its staff of workers, and do more to meet the pressing needs of the Navy. The chairman of the general committee is Admiral Sir F. L. McClintock, K.C.B., and the organising secretary, Mr. W. A. Mount, Sliema House, Hazlitt-road, Kensington, W.

A MISSION TO COALIES.

As the readers of The Christian are already aware, there is a Mission to Coalies and Carmen, in connection with the London City Mission, at work in the northern districts of London. Mr. Walter Prentice, the missionary, was himself a furniture mover, and displayed so much tact and zeal in a mission which he founded for his mates and others, that the City Mission made a place for him on their staff, and allied his mission with theirs. The figures for the past year are of a most encouraging character. It is computed that more than twelve thousand men have been conversed with at the coal depôts, while more than eight thousand have attended the 163 meetings held, over thirty anxious inquirers have been dealt with, and ninety temperance pledges taken.

In addition to meeting the men at the wharves, the missionary has read the Scriptures 1473 times in house-to-house visitation, and paid one hundred visits to the sick and dying. District committees have been formed at Stoke Newington, Holloway, Kentish-town, King's-cross, and in the East-end, and a quarterly tea meeting is held in each of these districts. The City Mission meets the cost of the missionary, but the working expenses must be provided from other sources. Sympathetic friends may write to Mr. Gawin Kirkham, the president, at 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society.

The new report says:—A few more months will bring this Society to the close of its seventieth year's work. Founded in 1822, the efforts then made to reach and influence the men of the sea for good have been steadily carried on and extended from time to time, until now the Society is in a more healthy and vigorous state than ever it has been before. The work of the past year presents no outstanding or special features, but has progressed, with continued indications of the Lord's presence and blessing, and many of the sailors are believed to have been led to the Saviour. Among the first-fruits is the case of a sailor who, for four years, was anxious about his soul, though resolving, every time his vessel came into port, that he would get the matter settled. Finally, he got rest and greatly rejoiced in the salvation he had so long sought.

An interesting testimony was also borne at one of the meetings by a young seaman as to how he was brought to Christ. One night, when he was "aloft," he became giddy and looked downwards. The Captain shouted to him "Look heavenwards, my boy." He did so, and at once regained his steadiness and got through his work. When he came down, the Captain talked with him about his soul, and gave him a New Testament, and from that day he said "I began to look heavenward." The work on the south side has been also followed by Divine blessing. The Hon. Sec. is Mr. Richard H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow.

University Notes.

OXFORD.

Mr. Gore's last special address was given on Sunday evening, March 6, when he spoke very tellingly and practically to a crowded church on "The Claim of Humanity."

The University Missionary Union was addressed on March 1 by Rev. A. B. D. Hutchinson, C.M.S. Missionary in Japan, who gave a most interesting account of his several years' labour there.

The Dean of Christ Church (Dr. Paget) preached one of his peculiarly-helpful sermons in the Cathedral on Ash Wednesday on the Temptation of Christ. Canon Knox-Little is preaching a course of sermons in St. Barnabas Church.

The advent of a High Church vicar at Headington Quarry has not affected the Sunday-school, now for some time undertaken during term by undergraduates, the school being still worked as a branch of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union.

The work of the Navvy Mission was brought before a number of Oxford men on March 3, at a meeting presided over by the Principal of Wycliffe Hall (Rev. F. J. Chavasse), when Mrs. Sleight gave a deeply interesting account of this excellent mission.

The Sunday evening evangelistic work in the Tramps' Lodging Houses, so well-known to several generations of Oxford men, is still prosecuted with great vigour, the attendance of undergraduate workers this term being even larger than usual.

The annual meeting of the Oxford Sunday School Union was held last week. Encouraging reports of the different branches of the work of the past year were read, special references being made to evangelistic services and systematic visiting in several neighbouring towns and villages. The Rev. H. B. Case, pastor of the Commercial-road Baptist Chapel, was elected President for the ensuing year.

Meetings were held on March 1 in aid of the Waldensian Church Missions in Italy, when Signor Rivoire delivered addresses on this very valuable work. Speaking of the Waldenses as forming the oldest Protestant Church in the world, he showed, by reference to the present work and the results, how full of life and vigour are the congregations. Canon Christopher also spoke at these meetings.

Most of the Oxford churches have issued lists of special services for Lent, and amid much that is far removed from New Testament light and liberty there can be no doubt that the emphasis on sin and sins must be useful in the direction of causing longings for deliverance, peace, and power.

On Sunday last the Bampton Lectures were commenced, the lecturer being Bishop Barry, formerly of Sydney. The lecturer's reputation as a preacher and thinker will assuredly secure for him a large and attentive audience, the church being well filled for the first lecture. The subject of the lectures is "Christianity and Science"—a topic eminently suited to the mind of so earnest a Christian and so acute a thinker.

The text of the first lecture was Gal. iii. 24, and was used to illustrate one position of science in relation to the Gospel, namely, "a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ." The lectures are to be with special reference to two present-day problems of science which concern Christian truth very directly—(1) the doctrine of heredity; (2) the doctrine of evolution.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University sermon was preached on Sunday, February 28, by Canon Body. It was most earnest and practical, but it is difficult to see how he could reconcile "the sacramental mysteries of the Catholic Church" and "the definite crisis of conversion." The influence of evangelical teaching is making itself felt amongst High Churchmen. The address to undergraduates at the Alexandra Hall was given, on the same day, by Canon Taylor Smith, of West Africa.

The annual meeting in aid of the London Missionary Society was held the same evening in the town; the chair was taken by Mr. A. W. W. Dale, M.A., of Trinity Hall, and addresses were given by Mr. S. L. Hart, D.Sc., and Rev. J. J. K. Hutchin, of Rarotonga.

The combination of the colleges in support of good work is earnestly needed. Rev. W. Bryant Salmon, district secretary of the Missions to Seamen, has during the past week been going the round of various colleges, holding meetings, and stirring up interest in the work. Rev. J. Norman, the new secretary of the Bible Society, is arranging a similar series of meetings.

The sixth sermon of Rev. Handley Moule on Psalm xxxii. was given on February 29. Verses 8 and 9 occupied the preacher's attention. "I will guide thee;" God is going to take the soul in hand. "With mine eye:" the counsellor and the counselled are in such touch with one another that a look does the work of a word. Don't be looking earthward or self-ward, but Christ-ward. "Be ye not as a horse," &c. Be a willing disciple. He has put you into the school chamber of his house. Oh, what a place of blessing is that! Do not be restive, do not be impatient; He has taken thee in hand to train thee. Do not let us forget we are in the Father's schoolroom at home. He does not send us away from home to be taught, but it is still school.

During the last few months there has been a decided advance all along the line of missionary interest at Cambridge. This has been shown in many ways, more especially by the increased attendance at the Church Missionary Union meetings, and by the growing efficiency of the missionary clubs. Also in general conversation there has been a marked improvement, missions coming in for a good share of time and discussion. But during the last few weeks the mass of smouldering embers has been fanned into a bright and burning flame by that servant of God, Mr. R. P. Wilder, M.A., of Princeton, U.S.A., who has made a halt in Europe on his way to India from America, where God has much used him in connection with the Student Volunteer Movement.

Some weeks ago he spoke at the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union meeting, and stirred up a deep interest, which only wanted some practical plan to enable it to become a real power. Accordingly, after some deliberation, it was decided to draw up a covenant, to be signed by those who intend to become foreign missionaries. This was warmly taken up at the church missionary meeting on the following evening, when Mr. Wilder also spoke, and many new recruits were enlisted by being brought face to face with a tangible reality in the shape of the covenant. So the movement grew day by day till it was seen to be essential to have some organisation to work it on a satisfactory basis. A meeting was, therefore, called for the evening of March 1, to consider what should be done. Most of the volunteers availed themselves of the opportunity of being present, and perfect unanimity prevailed all through the proceedings. Finally, after much prayer, an executive committee of three was elected to be in office for one year. Mr. Wilder, who had kindly returned to Cambridge so as to be present, spoke on various phases of the period of waiting, with kindly warnings of certain lurking dangers sure to come upon volunteers. The members, feeling that the Lord had wonderfully blessed and guided all the arrangements thus far, then separated, with a firm trust in his abiding Presence for the future.

This movement, like its prototype, "The Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions," in America, is entirely undenominational. The battle cry of this new enrolled army corps is "the Evangelisation of the World in the Present Generation." With this great object in view it is hoped that all party difference will be kept in the background, and that all will join hands together to hasten the return of our absent Lord and Master.. As soon as possible it is hoped that the work will be organised for the whole of great Britain, for which end is needed the practical support of all the churches.

Female Strangers in Manchester.

Founded in 1877, under the late Bishop Fraser, and designed for the convenience and protection of respectable women and girls who may be strangers in Manchester, the Female Strangers' Lodging House continues to do valuable work. In the new report we read that great care is needed in dealing with the lodgers, it having been found that there is a large class who wander about from home to home, living on the good nature of any who will help them. This discretion, however, is evidently possessed by the matron and housekeeper, as is seen by the testimonies received.

Young women are cautioned against being deceived by advertisements offering immediate situations with great advantages; and a typical case is given of a respectable person who failed to get the promised situation, and found her way, penniless, to the Lodging House, where she was cared for. The Hon. Supt. and Treasurer, Miss Wright, tells of a respectable woman who was saved from putting an end to her life through the kindness received while a casual lodger; and adds: "How are we to raise the tone of womanliness and sobriety among women? Must it not be by having a better race of both fathers and mothers!" The address is B105, Piccadilly, Manchester.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—The Christian Harbour Lights held their last muster in the old chapel, belonging to the Society in Ratcliff-highway, on Thursday evening last week. Mr. Maynard, Mrs. Maynard, Mrs. Hill, and Miss Messer gave soul-stirring addresses, encouraging those whose hearts were right with God, and urging the unconverted to make up their minds to become disciples of Christ. A number of bright testimonies were given by seamen, showing how the grace of God had kept them on shore and on sea, letting their light to shine that it was seen by their mates.

FACTORY LADS' CHRISTIAN HOME AND INSTITUTE, 1, Patshull-road, Kentish-town, N.W.—Many evidences, says the new report, have been given us that God's blessing has rested on our efforts during the past year. Thirty-three lads were received into the Home; many of them, as well as adults attend the meetings, and have been awakened to their need of Christ. The new premises have proved a great boon, and the further need is for dormitories, &c., at a cost of about £500. Mr. and Mrs. Markham are the superintendents. A brigade has been formed of the lads, who pledge to abstain from alcohol, tobacco, and profane language. Friends are invited to visit the Institute, which is open every evening from 7 to 10, and is well attended by the factory lads, of whom nearly 250 are on the books as members.

OBITUARY.

SIR JOHN COODE, K.C.M.G.

Many will have heard with regret of the death of Sir John Coode, which took place on Wednesday in last week, after a long illness. Sir John, who was 76, was well and widely known as a warm and hearty Protestant, taking the deepest interest in all spiritual work, and ever ready to aid evangelical effort, such as the Evangelical Alliance, the Church Association, and the Lord's Day Observance Society. He was, it may be remembered, one of the foremost civil engineers of the day.

MRS. SMEDLEY, OF RIBER CASTLE.

We deeply regret to hear of the death, on Thursday week, of Mrs. Smedley, who to many was well known, not only as the widow of the founder of the hydropathic establishment at Matlock, but also as a devoted Christian worker, an unwearying helper of the poor, a true hostess for Christ's sake, and a helper of many of the Lord's servants. A friend writes:—"Mrs. Smedley must be known to thousands for her practical Christian work, as well as her medical work. In this she was a true medical missionary. Her house was ever open as a resting-place to Christian workers, many of whom can testify to bodily and spiritual benefit under her care. What she was to this neighbourhood, and to us who were more constantly with her, words cannot tell. Our loss is indeed great. Many will remember with pleasure the Missionary Week which she held yearly in Riber Castle, when workers of all Evangelical sections of the church were welcomed."

MISS SUSAN R. GUINNESS, OF DUBLIN.

A devoted worker, unsparing in her devotion to the cause of Christ and his service among the poor, is being mourned by many in Dublin who long have known and loved her. Miss S. R. Guinness, who was the second daughter of Mr. R. R. Guinness, of Stillorgan, has been for many years one of the leaders in Christian service in Dublin. She had for some time been suffering from a painful malady, for the relief of which a dangerous operation was proposed to her; after waiting on God she resolved to undergo it, leaving the matter wholly with Him. Amongst her papers the following was found (after her death):—"Don't fret or regret, beloved ones. I have undertaken this operation after much consideration and prayer, and I see God's guidance that I should do so. My only hesitation was the possible shock to my beloved H——, when she is ill and so far away. But, thank God, she is better, and the doctors advise no longer delay. I feel I should be wrong to refuse to try this door of hope...and I know whatever happens is God's holy will and directing. My only regret will be that I have not trusted Him more and served Him better.

All anxious thought and care,
Lord, I resign;
Mine is to do and bear—
To choose is Thine."

The Archbishop of Dublin (Lord Plunket) delivered at the funeral an address recalling Miss Guinness's beautiful example and loving service, and showing well that such a life was truly worth living.

Progress at Budapest.

As our work here progresses we require more room. Our Mission Committee, at its meeting in Edinburgh about a fortnight ago, accepted plan and estimate for the reconstruction of a school-house and the building of a large hall behind, and granted for this object the sum of £750, being almost the entire balance of its Jubilee Fund. The whole sum required will be about £1600. For the £800 still wanted, I appeal to friends, and hope for a generous and quick response, as we have waited long, and wish now to build immediately.

Our second hall, which was opened in 1890, for evangelistic meetings, somewhat on the Paris McAll lines, is usually filled, frequently crowded. The hall now to be built will take the place of our first one, and be considerably larger, while through the reconstruction of our school-house we shall obtain room for our Children's Home, &c. House to house visitation is prosecuted diligently, and the people are called in from "the streets and lanes, highways and hedges." We have now a population of five hundred thousand, of whom one hundred and twenty thousand are Jews.

SANDWICH ISLES.—A Portuguese evangelical church has been formed in Hilo, Sandwich Islands. Ever since the visit of Rev. E. N. Peris, of Illinois, in 1890, there has been an increasing interest among the Portuguese with a constant attendance of more than a hundred on the services conducted by Rev. R. K. Baptist. A building has been erected with the assistance of the Hawaiian Board and the Portuguese Mission in Honolulu. Eighty-one were admitted to the church, and the outlook for the development of Christian life in the constantly-growing Portuguese community is of the brightest.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which, of course, are entirely different from these.

1 and 2 Epistles of PETER.

After the last references made to Peter in the Acts of the Apostles, he seems to have itinerated, preaching the Gospel (1 Cor. ix, 5). It was during his residence in Babylon that he wrote his first epistle, probably about the year 64. The Church was then beginning to suffer the first premonitary symptoms of its terrible sufferings and persecutions.

The second epistle was written probably about the same time, and from the same place, and deals specially with the evil teachers, who were desolating the Church from within.

SUNDAY, MARCH 13.—1 PETER I.

The Inscription (1 and 2).—"To the elect who are sojourners of the dispersion," R.V. These were Jews, scattered throughout the Roman Empire, and especially likely to be influenced by the Apostle Peter. "Asia" would stand for Proconsular Asia. 2. God foreknew those who would trust Christ, and chose them (Rom. viii. 29). Election and sanctification, obedience and sprinkling, grace and peace, are double links in one chain, reaching from the eternity of the past to that of the future. Note the presence of the Trinity in these verses.

The Inheritance (3-12).—What an outburst! May our hearts be so attuned, that our lips may be laden with such ejaculations. Our title depends on the new birth, and on the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Living Hope springs from his open grave, where angels sit emblems of its immortal vigour. 4. The inheritance is incorruptible in substance, undefiled in its purity, unfading in beauty, and it is safe because kept. There is a crown which will be placed on no other head; a mansion to be tenanted by no other saint, 5. The power that keeps it for us, keeps us for it. But faith must accept and appropriate that "guarding" power. 6. There is a "needs be" for grief, but at the longest, it is only for a little while. 7. "Temptations," i.e., trials for the proof of faith. Faith has so great a part to play in Christian experience, here and hereafter, that it cannot be allowed to pass untested. We just now heard that salvation was to be revealed (5), we now learn that Christ is to be revealed; and his glory is to be revealed (iv. 23). Ah, what spectacles lie behind the thin veil of sense! Then our faith also will be revealed, and we shall be compensated for all that we have passed through, if it shall bring praise and honour and glory to our blessed Lord, who is acting as the Divine Artificer before the crucible—the Goldsmith at the furnace. 8. Unseen, not unknown; unseen, but loved and trusted. Joy amid sorrow, as the singing of birds in a cloudy day, and all because of the gracious work of the Holy Spirit. The presence of Jesus makes the heart glad even when passing through the fire. When our joy is deepest we can say least about it. It is glory in the bud, bursting in blossoms of indescribable beauty. 10. What a glimpse into the method of inspiration, ministered by the Spirit in words which they who uttered them failed fully to comprehend! The testimony of the Divine Spirit was primarily to Christ's sufferings. Suffering and glory are indissolubly bound together. 11. The words of the prophets had often messages for their own times, but their full meaning awaited the times of the Gospel. There only is the key to be found which can unlock all the hidden stores. 12. Prophets, apostolic preachers, the Holy Ghost, and angels, are depicted as converging in their wistful gaze upon the work of redemption.

Be ye Holy (13-25).—We often lose our alert attitude and need to gird again the loins of our mind. Sober in respect to all indulgence. "Set your hope perfectly on the grace" (R.V.). Grace also is to be brought to us as well as salvation at that supreme revelation for which we look. 14. All are children, not all obedient. Ignorance and lust act and re-act, the one inducing the other. 16. "Ye shall be holy" (Lev. xix. 2). God never commands the impossible; there is always grace to effect what He bids. 17. "If ye call on Him as Father" (R.V.). God's impartiality enables Him to judge by what we do and are. The child's fear, born of love. 18. "The vain manner of life" (R.V.). From this we have been bought. Let us live worthily of the great price. 19. Precious because of its purity, the worth of his nature, and its efficiency for untold myriads. 21. Faith in Christ is really faith in God. 22. Souls become pure as they obey the truth, but they can only obey through the Spirit. Such obedience is the direct path to unfeigned love. 23. As the seed germ carries life, so does the Word of God carry his Life Let us "preach the Word" (James i. 18). Contrast the transience of that in which man glories with the permanence of the Gospel. 25. Xerxes wept because his hosts must pass away within a century So kings and generations vanish, while the imperishable Word of God remains unchanged and unchanging.

MONDAY, MARCH 14.—1 PETER II.

The Corner Stone (1-10).—The first three verses are a necessary conclusion from the foregoing chapter, "wherefore." "Long for the spiritual milk." (R.V.). Such longings only come when we put away sin in heart and speech. Only guileless souls appreciate the guileless word. And only as we feed on it can we "grow unto salvation" (R.V.). 3. To taste is to create insatiable thirst. 4. A remarkable succession of images. First the Lord Jesus is compared to a stone, which is living, and has the power of communicating life to all who come into contact with it. It is cast away amid the rank herbage, disregarded by the builders, but it is God's election, and it is priceless in its worth. How many structures are being erected in neglect of the one foundation that can give them permanence. But this stone, attracting living stones, becomes at length a house, unseen and spiritual, in which God Himself resides. 5. They who a moment ago were stones are now viewed under the image of priests, whose sacrifices of praise, almsgiving, and services, are accepted through the mediation of Christ. 7. "For you, therefore, which believe is the preciousness" (R.V.). Not only is Christ precious to us, but in Him we are as precious to God as He is. 8. Our spiritual condition determines what we obtain from Christ, of help or hurt. He would be a foundation, but He may become a stumbling-block. We stumble at the word, because our hearts disobey it. 9. Quoting Hosea ii., the Apostle shows that all who are one with Christ constitute as much a redeemed and elect people as the children of Israel, when, ransomed from Egypt, they stood under Sinai (Exodus xix. 6).

Strangers and Pilgrims (11, 12).—The tent life is only possible to those who have caught sight of the city which hath foundations. Evil desires devastate the spiritual nature. A holy life is our best reply to malicious scandal. Good works should point to their source—God. They are not the best when they attract attention to the doer.

Subjection (13-25).—"For the Lord's sake" makes all things easy. The Apostles strongly insisted on the submission of their converts to ordained authority, as representing that of God. And yet the spirit of Christianity has done more to subvert wrong and evil governments than all the revolts and insurrections of armed force. 15. "The will of God" is a favourite phrase in this epistle. 16. Though the servants of God are free from all slavish restraint, and, indeed, belong to another sphere than that ruled by earthly monarchs, yet their slaveship to God and the constraints of his love and will, bind them in the strongest of obligations. 18. Some of the tenderest words in N.T. are addressed to domestic slaves. The obedience of a slave was determined, not by the temperament of his master, but by the presence of Christ. 19. God says Thank you to all who, because they are conscious of his eye upon them, and his hand to vindicate them, suffer wrongs patiently. 21. The word "example" has the idea of a copy placed at the top of a child's copy-book. The snapt twig tells where Jesus has gone in front. 23. How absolutely has God indicated the character and glory of Jesus from the aspersions of his foes! Do not be ever vindicating yourself, but commit your cause to God. 24. If He bore our sins, they cannot be on us, they are for ever gone, and the one object of that death was to secure our death, that we might in Him pass over to resurrection ground, where sin might no longer master us. His stripes not only deliver us from penalty, but heal us. Sound as well as safe. 25. The Good Shepherd not only bought us, but sought us.

TUESDAY, MARCH 15.—1 PETER III.

Wives (1-7).—The subjection of which the Apostle spoke in the previous chapter towards governors and masters is here carried out further towards husbands. "Without the word" means that the lives of these Christian women should do for their husbands what preaching might otherwise have done in gaining them for Christ. 2. Behaviour which is governed by fear to God is pure and chaste towards men. 3. These methods of adornment are not absolutely forbidden, but are treated as if of no account in comparison with the "incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit." 6. Those that are right with God need not fear any other terror. Women must guard against fear, as men against anger. 7. The life of the home is a very important condition of mutual and individual prayer. Vessels may be weak, but they may hold the grace of life.

Good Days (8-17).—"Tender-hearted, humble-minded." The true life of love acts and speaks "on the contrariwise" to that which our own nature dictates. We pass on that which we inherit. 10. See Psalm xxxiv. 12. The use or abuse of the tongue has a great effect on the joy or sorrow of our days. Lips and tongue alike need to be put under the care of Him who sets a watch on each. 11. "Eschew," i.e., "turn away from;" "ensue," i.e., follow. 13. How good it is to live always under that eye, and to speak constantly into that ear! 13. No real harm can accrue, though many things may happen to intimidate and threaten. 14. Amid the suffering there is a consciousness of blessedness, which compensates the soul. 15. "Sanctify in your hearts Christ as Lord" (R.V.) This reminds us of Rom. x. 9. Each passage is an appeal for consecration. 16. A man whose conscience is good is never taken off his guard. He is meek towards men, and has a holy fear of grieving God. Truth will out, and the certain way to silence false accusation is to pursue a course of humble godliness. The life which is thus sketched is the only really blessed life, and conducts the soul into conformity to the life of Christ, the fellowship of his sufferings; whilst it secures for the soul a share in his future revelation and vindication.

Death and Resurrection (18-22).—The Apostle desires to encourage those to whom he wrote, and who were suffering keenly, by reminding them that Christ's spirit passed uninjured through his sufferings, and continued still to minister. Similarly their sufferings would not necessarily impede or impair, but perhaps augment their usefulness to the world. 20. It is not here taught that our Lord "descended into hell," as the Creed has it, but into Hades, the place of disembodied spirits, heralding his finished work. 21. The deluge through which the world passed is here compared to the waters of baptism, through which the believer passes in emblem from the old to the new. The virtue of the ordinance does not consist in the application of the water to the flesh, but in the aspect of the conscience looking fearlessly towards God. 22. The way of death is the way to supremacy, not only for Christ, but for us.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 16.—1 PETER IV.

Ceased from Sin (1-6).—Suffering for Christ must not only be borne with dogged endurance, but with the same willing mind as He had; so that we should take opportunity of breaking with sin, and passing with him into the life in which sin ceases to dominate the soul. 2. "The rest of your time on earth" must be spent in the flesh, but not according to the flesh. 3. "The desire of the Gentiles" is further worked out in all the terrible words which follow. 4. They think it strange because they see what you give up, but do not see the strength and blessing you receive. 5. The sight of the Great White Throne is sufficient to take all zest from worldly and sinful pleasure. 6. From the living the Apostle turns to the martyrs, who, through death as men, had passed into the light of heaven, and exhorts his readers that they should do likewise, living according to God in the spirit, whatever men might say or do as to their flesh.

Ministry (7-11).—8. Love should ever be at boiling point, because kept over the fire of the Holy Ghost and it covers the sins of others (James v. 20). 10. Each believer has a gift, at least one, though the grace of God is manifold in its operation. Our one object should be to glorify God, whether in showing hospitality, in speaking, or in ministering. Different as these appear in the eyes of men, the same great motive for the glory of God lifts them to an equally great level. God supplies the grace, the oracles, and the strength of which we are stewards.

The Fiery Trial (12-19).—It would be strange if we did not suffer when we consider how much we need proving. 13. As Christ suffered so all his own must, and we may be even glad to do so, because as we are with Him in his sufferings we shall be with Him in his glory. Joy is now unspeakable (i. 8). It shall then be exceeding. 14. Reproaches for the name of Christ indicate the possession of the Spirit of Christ. 16. The word "Christian" is not often used in the New Testament; this is one of the few passages. 17. Referring perhaps to the destruction of Jerusalem, or it may be to the sufferings which were being endured by these believers; and the inference is, that if God's own children suffered so much unrighteously, how would those fare whose sins deserved punishment. Note that it is a crime not to obey the Gospel, and that the ungodly are classed with sinners. "The righteous" seems to refer to Lot, who was scarcely saved out of Sodom. 19. The will of God dictates suffering because it is in collision with the course of this world, but amid all, we must go on doing well, believing that He who created is faithful to keep and to save to the uttermost.

THURSDAY, MARCH 17.—1 PETER V.

The Elders (1-4).—Peter does not boast his apostolate, but takes his stand on the level of those addressed. But to have been an eye-witness gave him authority. This expression suggests that he was present at the death-scene, though perhaps afar off. How careful he is always to speak of the glory in the same breath as the sufferings. 2. "Tend the flock," i.e., exercise a shepherd's care for the weak, erring, &c. Position in the Church in those days involved more persecution; hence the need for this exhortation. "Willingly, according unto God," i.e., as God would have it done. 3. The elders are not to lord it over God's heritage, i.e., God's clergy. The so-called laity are God's clergy. 4. The crown of empire belongs only to Christ, but crowns are given for faithful service, like those at the old Grecian games, only they will never wither.

Clothed with Humility (5-7).—The younger men may mean the deacons or subordinate ministers. "Gird on humility," as a slave does his towel (John xiii. 4), "to serve one another" (R.V.). Compare James iv. 6, 7, with Prov. iii. 34. Let us cultivate the spirit to which God is ever making pre sents of grace. The one thing is to be right with God, all anxiety being cast on Him. What a motto this is for a blessed life: "He careth," and "He careth for you"!

The Conflict (8-11).—Adversary, Zech. iii. 1. The insatiable hunger of a lion for food is an emblem of the desire of Satan for our souls. Well is it for us that our David can rescue us from the jaw of the lion! "Walketh about"; temptation never assails us long from the same quarter. 9. So long as we are within our faith, i.e., within Christ, we are invulnerable. 10. All grace is in God for every hour and kind of need. The call, the end, the path of suffering are all part of his eternal purpose. The suffering is only for "a little while" (R.V.). Perfect, there shall be nothing lacking; stablish, so as not to waver or be swept to and fro; strengthen, with inward might (Eph. iii. 16).

Salutation (12-14).—Silvanus, i.e., Silas, had been the former associate of Paul and Timothy. "Our faithful brother, as I account him" (R.V.). "This is the true grace of God: stand ye fast therein" (R.V.). "He began by grace, he finishes with grace, he has plentifully besprinkled the epistle with grace, that we might understand how entirely our salvation is due to grace." 13. A church had been founded at Babylon, where Peter was now staying, and he conveys its greetings with his own to the Christians whom he addressed. 14. To be in Christ is to be in peace indeed.

FRIDAY, MARCH 18.—2 PETER I.

These Things (1-11).—Servant—i.e., bondservant—and apostle are inseparable titles, and they come in that order. A precious Christ (1 Peter ii. 4), precious faith, precious promises (4). Christ is distinctly described as "our God and Saviour" (R.V.). 2. The more we know of God and our Saviour through the Spirit, the more are our grace and peace multiplied. 3. Everything needed for a godly life is already ours in Christ. We must avail ourselves of what we need, and we do so best as we know God. The fact of his call carries with it the assurance of his provision. 4. These words clearly prove the dignity of the believer. He has become a partaker of the Divine nature. The word "escape" is that used of the criminal emerging from a condemned cell; here made filthy through impure and inordinate desire. 5. The fact that we have escaped such pollution, and have been called to such honour, should lead us not to relax but redouble our energies: "Yea, and for this very cause" (R.V.). "Supply" conveys the conception of a choirmaster adding one part after another to his band of singers. Virtue, i.e., manly courage. 6. Temperance, i.e., self-control. 7. Love of the brethren must be followed by love to those outside that circle. 8. Again that word "knowledge." As the knowledge of Christ is wrought into the soil and texture of our nature, it bears blessed harvests of fruit. 9. To be without the qualities just mentioned indicates great blindness of heart to the true joys and interests of life. "Seeing only what is near" (R.V.). Near-sightedness is a failing with most of us. We are so much more concerned with what we can see and handle than with the harvests that are being prepared for by a present patient continuance in well-doing. Let us never forget our cleansing, it should be an incentive to holiness always, so that we may keep our robes as white as He originally made them. 10. Election is at the root of all, then calling, then the making sure. The latter is like proving the sum. It shows that God's choice was not a phantom of the imagination, but a fact which works mightily to produce a holy character. 11. The same word is used here as in verse 5. An abundant entrance is a choral triumphant one, like the return of a conqueror of old. What a contrast to 1 Cor. iii. 15.

Certainty in Religion (12-21).—This second epistle, so soon after the first, indicated this. 14. Tabernacle, 2 Cor. v. 1. Compare Rev. xii. 12. He never forgot those memorable words addressed to him on the shores of the lake. John xxi. 18, 19. "Decease," i.e., departure (R.V.), or exodus, the word used of Christ's death on the mount of Transfiguration, to which he is about to advert (Luke ix. 31, 33). 16. From the Transfiguration, of which he had been an eye-witness, he derives indubitable proofs of the majesty of the Redeemer. 19. A triple light illumines our path from the person of Christ, from the testimony of prophecy, and from the day-star which heralds the coming day. 20. Private interpretation, i.e., it did not originate in the prophet's own heart, and it has a wider application than to the circumstances that called it forth. 24. "Moved," or "borne along," as by a mighty rushing wind.

SATURDAY, MARCH 19.—2 PETER II.

False Teachers.—1. What a contrast to the prophets described at the close of the previous chapter. Christ is Master because He bought us. 2. "Pernicious," i.e., lascivious or licentious. False doctrine and evil living are closely united. 3. Their sentence has been passed, and their destruction is hasting towards them. 4. Hell is translation of Greek word Tartarus, used nowhere else in N.T. What a striking thought that darkness may be a chain. 5. "Noah with seven others." Here we have a glimpse of his occupation during the one hundred years of respite whilst the ark was being prepared. 6. Instance after instance is given of the inevitable doom which has overtaken the ungodly, and must, therefore, befall false and licentious teachers. 7. How delightful to discern God's discriminating grace. We should have hardly thought Lot, to judge from his proposals and conduct (Gen. xix.), worth saving. But he is here described as righteous, and we are told that he was "sore distressed by the lascivious life of the wicked" (R.V.). 9. Thus there is the double lesson. God will know and keep his own, but will inevitably punish the wicked. 10. Dignities here must mean the spirits which surround us, and which these teachers traduced. 12. "Creatures without reason, born mere animals to be taken and destroyed . . . shall in their destroying surely be destroyed, suffering wrong as the hire of wrong-doing" (R.V.). Those who lay traps for others fall into them themselves. 13. "Whilst partaking of the love-feast with you they are luxuriating in their own deceivings." How eagerly ought we to examine ourselves, lest any of these features appearing in us indicate that after all we are self-deceived. 16. Balaam is an awful example of the combination of spiritual vision with a love of money which at last ruined him. 18. "Those who are just escaping." We must never think ourselves to be safe until we have really got away; and let us all beware of licentiousness, which is the great foe to grace. 19. If we are constantly overcome by a certain sin, we are really enslaved to it. Why not cry out to the Victor Emmanuel, Emancipator! 20. The defilements of the world are like the meshes of a net. We are extricated when we know Christ, but we may be easily entangled again by impurity. 22. They were sows and dogs before; their nature was never really changed, though their manner of life was temporarily.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Charles Cook preached on the Pavilion Pier, St. Leonards, on Sunday afternoon. The meeting was the first of a series, and there was a crowded attendance.

Burnham.—A fruitful evangelistic mission has been concluded at Burnham Congregational Church by Mr. Chas. Lazenby, of the Evangelisation Society. The services have been appreciated, and spiritual good has been effected.

Sheffield.—A special mission has just been held in Nether Chapel, the largest Congregational Chapel in the town, by Mr. R. F. Horton, M.A. The afternoon Bible readings and evening Gospel addresses were full of interest, while a noteworthy feature was the midday address to business men, delivered in the Y.M.C.A. hall.

Hull.—Rev. Thomas Waugh has just been holding a stirring mission in Kingston, Hull, while Rev. Darlow Sarjeant has held a similar mission at Beverley-road. In other chapels in the town, others have been labouring. Much interest has been awakened and real blessing granted.

Ireland.—A successful series of evangelistic services has just been held in Armagh Methodist Church by Rev. Patrick E. Donovan, a recent convert from Romanism; and a similar series has been held in Clonakilty, co. Cork, by Rev. Jas. Kirkwood, Methodist Conference evangelist.

High Wycombe.—In consequence of the success which attended Mr. W. Sampson's mission at the Wesley Chapel, his visit was extended for a few days. On Sunday, 1200 persons attended a special service, when many converts were present, and were exhorted to continuance in the faith.

Wilts and Dorset.—Mr. W. Day has been holding meetings in the villages of Martin in Wilts and Pentridge in Dorset—about two miles apart from each other. We believe much good will arise from his addresses and labours. Why is it so little is done for the villages in our own land? Surely in most places some Christian could be found who would gladly accommodate a weary town worker, who could get back to health and strength while dispensing spiritual food to hungry souls!

Blaydon-hills, Dorset. M.

Norfolk.—Special evangelistic services have been held in Upwell during the past fortnight by Mr. J. Edmonds (Pastors' College) and Mr. Crowe (London Hospital). Previous to the services prayer-meetings were held nightly for a fortnight. The answers to prayer have been many, upwards of seventy having passed through the inquiry-room. Some who have professed faith in Jesus Christ were formerly known as bad characters. The whole village seems to have been stirred, and there is still a spirit of earnest inquiry.

MISSIONARY LEGACIES.—The American Bible Society, the Boards of Home and Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, and the Society for the Employment and Relief of Poor Women are made residuary legatees of the estate of Henry Ten Broek Gamage, who was found dead in his room in the University-buildings in Washington-square, New York City. The estate includes 30,000 dols. to 40,000 dols. in bonds and a large number of paintings, many of which are supposed to be of great value. The societies will get the greater part of the estate, as there are only a few personal bequests. It is reported that relatives will contest the Will.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, MAR. 20.

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT: 1 John iv. 14.

NOTHING more than the most general outline is possible in reviewing this quarter's series of lessons. The Golden Text in each case will suggest the main point of the lesson.

Lessons I. to III. remind us of the ultimate triumph of the Saviour; of the faith without which we cannot share any of the blessings of his kingdom; and of one of the greatest hindrances to the progress of the Gospel both in individuals and in nations. Repeat the Golden Texts in order to apply the lessons.

Lesson IV. is illustrative of the deliverance which the Gospel secures to every believer. Imitate Hezekiah in his confession of helplessness, in his appeal to God, in his expectation from God, and the Golden Text will be fulfilled to you.

Lessons V. and VI. give, first, the Atonement wrought out by the Suffering Saviour, which is the very foundation of the Gospel, and, secondly, the Gracious Call which is now made to all men. In order to save men God needed not only to provide men a Saviour, but to invite and even to entreat men to come and partake of the blessings provided. The Golden Texts again enforce the lessons. Emphasize the guilt of refusing to seek a Saviour who consented to bear the burden of men's iniquity.

Lesson VII. should remove all fear of beginning the new life. The New Covenant secures to us what it demands from us.

Lesson VIII. is a warning example of wickedness, resulting from the neglect of the Divine message, and leading to fearful consequences. Repeat the Golden Test. To refuse to hear God's voice is to repeat Jehoiakim's sin.

Lesson IX. prepares us for meeting difficulty and persecution for the name of Christ. If the Golden Text is fulfilled to us, why need we fear to suffer?

Lesson X. warns us that if we reject Christ in order to escape suffering here, there is a worse judgment to be feared. The destruction of Jerusalem, and the punishment of Zedekiah are proofs of God's faithfulness to his word of threatening.

Lesson XI. glistens with most precious promises, of which the Golden Text is one. On what condition can all be fulfilled to us? See verses 37, 38.

The Golden Text of this Review Lesson enforces the teaching of all. It traces back this great salvation through Jesus to the Father Himself. To reject Jesus is therefore to despise his suffering and death with all the blessings He has secured, and also to despise the Father's gift of love. All are either receiving or refusing this unspeakable gift. If you have never accepted Him before, will you not do so now?

Gospel Work Amongst Theatricals.

"MACREADY HOUSE" was visited on March 4 by Mr. Josiah Spiers, of the Children's Service Mission, who conducted the usual Friday Professional Reunion. In his impressive way he pleaded for an immediate acceptance of the "present salvation" of Christ, and the true and telling anecdotes, related from his long experience, were attentively listened to by a large gathering of young actresses and theatrical children. Upwards of eleven hundred copies of his "True Stories" have, through his influence, been presented to members of the profession. A letter received by Mr. Courthope Todd from a young lady at The Eden in Paris, speaks with much appreciation of this gift.

Assistance is just now sorely needed by the Committee, for "great doors and effectual" are open both in the provinces and abroad. Louisa Lady Ashburton has just given £100 towards meeting immediate and pressing liabilities. Christian friends are invited to visit Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, on Tuesday and Friday afternoons.

LEICESTER.—A convention for the deepening of spiritual life was held last week. At the opening meeting Mr. Robert Wilson presided, and read John xiii., showing the need of cleansing. Dr. White and Rev. C. Inwood followed. Amongst the speakers at subsequent meetings were Revs. W. S. Standen, W. Haslam, E. W. Moore, and F. B. Meyer. The interest deepened on each succeeding day. Many of the addresses were most searching, and led to large numbers seeking a fuller experience in the way of holiness.

STRANGERS' REST.—The monthly meeting of the workers and friends was held on Friday. Colonel Morton presided, and a most helpful and interesting address was delivered by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, the subject being "A Word to the Weary," or the "Gospel of Rest," from Isaiah l. 4-10. Mr. H. Maxwell Wright gave a short account of his mission-work in Brazil. Since the Republic perfect liberty for Gospel preaching had been given. The people, however, were fast sinking into materialism and infidelity, while but few labourers were telling out the Gospel.

Letters to the Editor.

GOD'S DEALINGS WITH ENGLAND.

Sir,—When our Lord was on earth He once and again reproached the people with not discerning the signs of the times. He said at one time, "Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" And again, "Say ye not there are yet four months and then cometh the harvest? Behold, I say unto you, lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest." They were so thoughtful about earthly things that when the corn was but just out of the ground they were sure both that there would be a harvest and when it would be; while in respect of the Kingdom of God they were so ignorant of Scripture and so stupid that they could not discern the fulfilment of the Word of God that was then going on before their eyes, in respect of Himself, his work, and the effects of it, in the men of Samaria flocking out to see and hear Him. If the Lord could speak of things in his day in this way, what ought we to discern if we lifted up our eyes and saw the things around us in Scripture light?

Of course, we may go on guessing for ever if we try to discern the things of the Kingdom by our own imaginations. The question is simply what are the signs of the time as shown by the light of Scripture? It was said in old time that a time should come when God would make a new covenant with his people. The allusion is to the old covenant, which began with an if and ended with a but; but this new covenant is simply "I will be to them a God and they shall be to me a people." When God engages for both sides, then the covenant will stand.

Now surely the question is, Is this realm of England now under this new covenant? Has God now taken the matter into his own hands, and is He dealing with this favoured people in the way of sovereign grace and mercy? Most certainly. If any man will lift up his eyes and look upon these fields, he cannot possibly fail to see that God has indeed taken us up and is dealing with us "as He has not dealt with any people."

Has He dealt with us after our sins, or rewarded us after our iniquities? I can here, of course, only call attention to one or two out of a thousand instances, but the same thing is shown throughout our whole history for hundreds of years. First, there is only one land in the whole earth that has not been deluged with blood again and again for many generations, and that is England.

Again, how did God deal with us in respect of our monstrous load of sin in the matter of slavery? He delivered us from this sin, without demanding one drop of blood, but only a nominal fine of twenty millions.

Again, how many victories has He granted to us by sea and land? Who can count them? And so with every temporal matter.

And in spiritual things He has caused these "isles to wait for his law." In what other land is the whole constitution based upon the blessed Word of God? And in what other has He been pleased in his unspeakable goodness to cause a pure Scriptural form of worship, with the reading of fifteen or twenty leading portions of the Word, without human comment, in every parish of the land every week, so that the whole land should be kept redolent with the blessed truths of the Bible in spite of anything that man can do. Every Pharisee, Sadducee and Herodian, who under the shelter of a false oath (perjured man) thrusts himself into the ministry of the Church of England, whatever blasphemy or foolishness he utters from the pulpit, is thus under a blessed compulsion to give out from the reading-desk nothing but the great things of God's law. Who can consider these things without exclaiming, What hath God wrought for this land alone out of all the earth!

Again, how has God been pleased to honour us in the world? First, in temporal things. He has prepared us physically, mentally and spiritually to take the charge of three hundred and eighty millions of people, one-fourth of the whole human race already, and scarcely a week passes without some new race coming under our rule, and hundreds of millions more are at this moment only desirous of one thing, and that is to come under our blessed rule, for though there are still abundance of evils amongst us, one thing is certain, there is not, and never was in the world before, a rule which was mainly based upon the principles of the Bible. Think of the anarchy, oppression, and misery that pervaded the three hundred millions of India within this century, and of the peace, justice, and mercy that now cover the land from Persia to China and to Borneo.

Think, again, of our wonderful navy. Does it carry war and bloodshed and terror wherever it goes, or is it the police of the ocean, putting things to rights on every coast?

And in respect of spiritual things, think of the thousands of both men and women, true, faithful, well instructed, taught of God, whom England sends forth into the very darkest places of the earth, into Asiatic Russia, Thibet, Africa, taking their lives in their hands, and with nothing but Scriptural weapons to contend with every hardship, danger, and difficulty that could be imagined.

And again. Even compare God's dealings with his favoured people of old, when a single copy of the Scriptures was discovered and carried by the High Priest to the King as a great curiosity, with the millions of copies of portions of the Word, unadulterated, in three hundred languages, which are now every year distributed through every corner of the earth, chiefly by the hands of this people.

When we look at these things, can we imagine that God will again "destroy the work of his own hands," as He did under the old covenant? Can we fear that a handful of poor priest-ridden Southern Irishmen shall be permitted to break up this empire and overthrow all these wonderful works of God? Or that the "Man of Sin," whom God has now for four hundred years been consuming before our eyes, will again be restored, instead of that consumption continuing till the time arrives for him to be "destroyed by the brightness of his coming"?

These few things thus referred to are not imaginations, they are simply facts. Ought we not to observe and consider them in the light of Scripture? And so with all the multitude of facts belonging to this glorious empire.

This is God's doing, and it is indeed marvellous in our eyes. It is indeed quite true that there is a flood of shameless Popery overflowing the ministry of the Church of England, and of infidelity in the Nonconformist and Presbyterian churches; but most certainly there is at the same time a far greater and deeper flood of truth advancing, both among the ministry of all these churches, and among the laity. Thus is most assuredly fulfilled before our eyes that word, "When the enemy comes in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." Compare the state of things even within my own lifetime with the present; the time when a great missionary society could not find in all England one missionary man or woman, with the thousands that are now offering themselves without any earthly security of even food and clothing, to go to any climate, among any race, any religionists, throughout the whole world.

Are we not to acknowledge the hand of God in all this, to praise Him, and to rest assured that his set time has now indeed come for the speedy fulfilment of all his gracious promises which fill his Word from the time of Abraham to that of John?

I trust you will kindly allow your readers to see his side of the question that has been started in our true paper.—Yours obediently,

An Old Man.

THE LORD'S DAY OBLIGATION.

Dear Sir,—I fail to see how this question admits of argument at all. "In it thou shalt do no manner of work." This is plain enough. Surely, if it is wrong for me to steal a pair of boots from the outside of a shop, it is equally wrong to get some one to do it for me; therefore, I hold that to make another break the Fourth Commandment is, at least, as bad as breaking it myself.

If there were no riders, there would be no cause for thousands of hard-working men to lose their Sabbath rest—to put it on no higher ground than that. I know of one engaged for many years in most interesting ragged school work, yet, after his removal to a distance, and although he had a season-ticket, that would have taken him almost from door to door, yet felt compelled to give all up, rather than have a hand in making others work on the Lord's Day. Surely all Christian workers could find something to do within a couple of miles of their own doors.

How can any Sunday-school teacher tell his children to obey God's law, while breaking it himself regularly? What must the children think of such inconsistency? What about St. Paul's words, which we may be allowed to paraphrase thus: "Let no man put a stumbling-block, or an occasion to fall, in his brother's way. It is good neither to take train, nor to travel at all on the Lord's Day, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth or is offended or is made weak" (Rom. xiv. 13-21). See also 1 Cor. viii. 9-13. I have myself done without Sunday travelling for over twenty-five years, though often at an inconvenience.—Yours faithfully, Kensington: A. B. Clementson.

"THE VEIL"—CHRIST'S HUMANITY.

Sir,—I see that your Cambridge correspondent represents me to have said, in a recent address to undergraduates, that the veil was the "symbol of sin." This is a mistake. The inspired exposition of the meaning of the veil, given in Heb. x. 20, declares that it typified the flesh (i.e., the humanity) of our Lord Jesus, and it was thus, and thus only, that I spoke of it. Kindly insert this correction, or I shall be overwhelmed with letters charging me, and not unreasonably, with heresy.—Yours faithfully,

March 7, 1892. S. Arthur Blackwood.

AT MISS MASON'S HOUSE OF REST, Finchley-road, N.W., on Friday afternoon last, Rev. F. B. Meyer gave a helpful address on the Blood of Christ. When we use the word "blood," he said, we mean three things: firstly, shed life; secondly, life shed violently; and thirdly, life offered as a sacrifice, willingly offered. Mr. Meyer directed attention to various passages in the writings of St. John regarding the great redemption. In the evening Colonel F. Cardew gave an interesting account of Mr. and Mrs. Osborn-Howe's South-East African Mission.

The Book World.

Life of Mr. Spurgeon.

From the Usher's Desk to the Tabernacle Pulpit: The Life and Labours of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon. By Rev. R. Shindler. 2s. 6d. Passmore and Alabaster. This very readable book makes us long for the monumental biography which is to be. There is no doubt about the reliable character of the story as here outlined, for the proof-sheets of the book were, we are informed, revised at Mentone, under Mr. Spurgeon's supervision, during his last illness; and an added chapter brings the history down to the date of his lamented death. Devoted to a great subject, the pages are bright with anecdote and incident, the many important enterprises of the preacher being clearly described. The story of the church worshipping in the Tabernacle is intensely interesting, bringing to notice the names of Keach, Gill, Rippon, and other worthies. There are over fifty portraits and engravings; and we wish for the work the large circulation it deserves.

"Stones Crying Out."

Records of the Past.—The fifth volume of the new series, edited by Professor Sayce, has peculiar value, containing translations of some ten important monuments recovered from the dust of ages in Egypt and Western Asia. Rev. H. G. Tomkins contributes a rendering, with notes, of the lists of places in Northern Syria and Palestine, conquered by Thothmes III., of the Eighteenth Egyptian Dynasty, and engraved on the walls of his Temple at Karnak. Another intensely interesting section is devoted to a version, by Dr. Sayce, of correspondence between Palestine and Egypt in the fifteenth century before Christ. These are from the famous cuneiform tablets found at Tel el-Amarna, and refer to a time when the cities of Canaan were subject to the King of Egypt, who appointed governors over them and received tribute. Jerusalem occupied an altogether unique position, for its ruler, Ebed-tob, claimed to rule by Divine appointment and not by human nomination or dynastic descent. Moreover, he combined priestly with princely functions. He was apparently a successor in office of Melchizedek, of whom we read in Genesis; in dignity he was a very long way behind him, for he declares himself the abject vassal of the Egyptian king, and is the occasional advocate of war instead of peace. This book is a useful addition to a series which careful students cannot but find of great service. We decidedly object, however, to some very positive judgments adverse to Scripture authority and inspiration, expressed on evidence of the most fragmentary character. (Bagster and Sons.)

How to Read the Prophets: being the prophecies arranged chronologically in their historical setting. By Rev. Buchanan Blake, B.D. Part I., containing Jonah, Amos, Hosea, Zechariah (ix.-xiv.), Micah, Nahum, Zephaniah, Habakkuk, Obadiah, and Joel. 4s. T. and T. Clark. The author has more respect than we have for the results of modern criticism. His main purpose is simple, and thoughtful readers will find the pages of great assistance in prosecuting a thorough study of the various prophetical books.

A Month's Walking Tour in Palestine. By Joseph Hannington. (4d. Morgan and Scott.) A brother of the late martyr-bishop of Central Africa describes in this booklet a tour at once delightful and instructive. The party, which numbered four, visited in a leisurely manner the principal places from Beyrout to Jerusalem, and the entire expense was well within the modest sum of twenty pounds. Though likely to be of special value to travellers, the pages have that independent interest which attaches to all records of sojourn and observation in the Holy Land.

The Countess of Huntingdon and Her Connexion: with notes of services at the centenary of her death. Edited by Rev. J. B. Figgis, M.A., Brighton, president of Conference for the year 1891. (2s. Partridge and Co.) A manual of information concerning Lady Huntingdon's Connexion and its Foundress has long been a desideratum; and it is here supplied, coupled with an account of the services held in celebration of the centenary. Controversy is kept out of sight, and the pages breathe a spirit befitting the deeply interesting subject, with its varied historical charms and true nobility of purpose.

Temperance Notes.

There are said to be 17,500 total-abstaining soldiers in India.

Professor Herkomer is to address the National Temperance League May Meeting.

A Women's Temperance Association has been formed in Cork under hopeful auspices.

An effort is being made in Liverpool to raise £3000, in memory of the late Mr. Clarke Aspinall, to employ five more police-court missionaries—a department of work greatly valued by the late coroner.

Gospel Temperance addresses were delivered at the Lecture Hall, Watlington, on Feb. 24 to 26, by Mr. W. Forbes. The meetings were held under the auspices of the Watlington Total Abstinence Society and proved very successful.

Very successful meetings have been held by the St. Helen's Branch of the B.W.T.A, which is little more than a year old. Mrs. Ward Poole was the speaker, and a number of pledges were taken, as well as new members added to the Association.

There is an enthusiastic lady in America who devotes her time and means to the production of unfermented wine, which she uses her influence to have substituted for alcoholic wine at the Communion. She owns a large vineyard, and employs many persons in preparing the wine.

Rev. W. G. Lawes, the veteran missionary to New Guinea, says drunkenness is a vice which has been introduced by the Europeans. An inventory of the cargoes of vessels bound for South and West Africa, stopping at Madeira in one week, showed that they contained spirits valued at over a million sterling.

The Lancet, commenting on the increase in the National Drink Bill, says this expenditure "means so much cirrhosis (a fatal disease of the liver), Bright's disease, gout, rheumatism, insanity, &c., disabling employment, taking the pleasures out of the life of families, and bread out of the mouths of children."

A vigorous Gospel Temperance Mission has recently been held in Deal. The meetings were well attended, and 312 pledges were taken. A branch of the B.W.T.A. was formed, and fifty members enrolled. A Young People's Society, called "The Deal Temperance Crusaders," is also in process of formation.

The practice of ether-drunkenness (says The Medical Press), to which attention has been called in Ireland, and which has required a change in the law to put a stop to, has extended to Russia; and it is rapidly becoming necessary to prohibit the sale of ether and of correlative substances, such as Hoffmann's anodyne, spreading there.

Miss Richardson, of Bessbrook, the favoured Irish manufacturing village that owns neither public-house, pawn-shop nor policeman, recently addressed a drawing-room meeting for the Stoke Newington Branch of the B.W.T.A. Miss Richardson is an admirable speaker, and gave a thrilling description of the evils of drinking in upper-class society.

A largely-attended Conference and Public Meeting, in connection with the B.W.T.A. was held last week in Bristol. Mrs. H. Bright Clark, of Street, presided over the Conference, and valuable papers were read by Miss Docwra and Miss Pewtress. Mrs. Bousfield, Mrs. Servanté, and Miss Cole addressed the evening meeting, when the chair was occupied by Mr. J. S. Fry.

The town of Cupar has a licence for every twenty-two families—taking a family as averaging five persons; Peebles has one licence for every twenty families; Stranraer, one licence for every seventeen families; Wick, one licence for every sixteen families; Burntisland, one licence for every thirteen families; while Irvine, with its population of 4508 people, has sixty-six licences, or one for every twelve families.

Mr. Foster, secretary of the United States Treasury, who arrived in England last week, is better known in his own country as the "Total Abstinence" Governor of Ohio, than as the Financial Secretary of the Republic. During the struggle over the temperance question in Ohio, Governor Foster took such extreme ground that his party lost the support of the heavy German vote in Cincinnati, and the State government passed into the hands of the Opposition.

The Temperance cause is making progress in the University of Dublin, in which there is now a flourishing temperance society, under whose auspices Mr. T. Pakenham Law, Q.C., delivered, a few days ago, a powerful address. He said he himself had for several years worn the blue ribbon with the view of helping others, and that recently there were in the South Dublin Union four paupers who held Trinity College degrees, and who had been brought to their position by drink.

The Presbytery of Londonderry has taken a step in advance in the matter of temperance. It has recommended that a lesson on temperance be given quarterly in all the Sabbath schools under its care, that instruction be given in all Band of Hope meetings from such works as Dr. Richardson's Temperance Lesson-Book, that all total abstainers be urged to use their best endeavours to get others to follow their example, and that all members of the church be urged to set an example of total abstinence and of entire separation from the drink traffic and the drinking customs of society. These resolutions are expected to do much good.

Personalia.

Rev. J. H. Rigg, D.D., is, we are glad to hear, recovering steadily.

Rev. Andrew Mearns has resigned his office as Secretary of the London Congregational Union.

Rev. W. J. Woods has written, accepting the appointment as Secretary of the Congregational Union.

Ven. Archdeacon Taylor is recruiting at Abergele, and hopes soon to be able to resume his duties.

Rev. Dr. Pierson has consented to continue his ministry at the Metropolitan Tabernacle until June next.

Rev. W. Skinner, of Forest Gate, has been ordered by Dr. Kidd to take a three months' complete rest.

The Bishop of Exeter having, the other day, had a narrow escape from serious injury when his horse fell, sent, by way of thankoffering, a cheque to the Devon and Exeter Hospital.

Lady Frederick Cavendish threw herself very fully into the Leeds General Union, speaking with earnestness and power to great gatherings of women and visiting many of the common lodging-houses of the town.

Mr. James Sharman, B.A., of Hackney College, has been appointed to Antananarivo, Madagascar, by the directors of the London Missionary Society, and hopes to sail with the Madagascar party on June 23.

R. C. Morgan returns very sincere thanks on behalf of himself and his family to the many friends who have written letters of kindness and sympathy in reply to the announcement last week of the death of his elder son.

Rev. P. Carmichael, of Highbury-park, is giving on Sunday evenings a series of addresses on "Biblical Difficulties," inviting his congregation to make known to him any points they would be glad to have dealt with.

Dr. McLean, the "pioneer Blackfoot missionary," has met with much acceptance in several parts of England. He describes with much force and interest his life among the cowboys of the far West of North America.

The Bishop of Derry, Dr. Alexander, accompanied by his daughter, sailed from Queenstown last Thursday for America, where he is to deliver a course of lectures on the evidences of Christianity. He expects to return about the end of April.

Miss Baldwin, formerly connected with the North Africa Mission at Tangier, is on her way to Lovedale Institution, Alice, Cape Colony, to be married to Mr. Matthew Lochhead, who is in charge of the Galla slave children, under the Free Church of Scotland Missionary Society.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, of the Boys' Home, Southwark, has, we regret to hear, been very ill for several weeks, and is still confined to his room. At the present busy season of the year, this causes special sorrow to Mr. Fegan, whose friends, we trust, will remember him in their prayers, and not forget the needs of his important work.

Mrs. Guinness is, we are glad to learn, making steady progress towards recovery. She is now able to lift her right arm, which was paralysed. Though she is still very weak and not wholly out of danger, yet the improvement in her condition seems almost like a resurrection. Dr. Guinness believes that it is answer to prayer, and regards it as a very great mercy.

Rev. C. A. Schönberger has, we learn, severed his connection with the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, under whose auspices he has worked for the last twenty years, first in Prague, and for the last eight years in Vienna. Mr. Schönberger, who is now recovering from his recent severe and prolonged illness, is looking forward to some new sphere of labour in the mission to Israel.

THE CONVALESCENT HOME AT WEST NORWOOD, S.E., is intended for the respectable poor of both sexes over twelve years of age, and is conducted on Protestant and total abstinence principles. The seventeenth annual report, just issued, contains all necessary instructions to applicants for admission, and may be obtained from Miss Ellis, hon. superintendent, at the Home, 56, Gipsy-road. During last year one hundred and fifty sick, weak, and weary women and children sojourned in the Home for a period of from one to eight weeks, and in almost every case with great benefit. The one desire to win the patients for Christ is being rewarded. Although the Home has been open for years it is not so well known and supported as it deserves. The labours of the Bible-woman nurse continues to be greatly appreciated by the people.

The present year being the jubilee of New Zealand Congregationalism, an international conference of the Congregational churches is to be held in Wellington, at which all the Australasian unions will be represented.

The report of the work for the past year at Sidcup is of an encouraging character, the membership of the church, as well as the attendance at the Sunday-school, having substantially increased.

The annual meeting at Wynne-road, Brixton, was held on Wednesday evening last week, the pastor, Rev. Z. T. Dowen, in the chair. The reports from the various societies indicated health and prosperity.

In connection with the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the formation of the Baptist Missionary Society by William Carey, it is suggested that all the London Baptist Sunday-schools should join together for a centenary celebration at the Crystal Palace.

METHODIST.

The annual meeting of the London Wesleyan Mission is to be held in Exeter Hall on March 14.

At Wesley Hall, Newcastle, a good deal of work has been done amongst the labouring people suffering through the strike.

Mr. M. Kennedy, Connexional Evangelist, concluded a successful fortnight's mission in Bolton on Thursday. The whole Church has been thoroughly roused up, an earnest, enthusiastic spirit evoked, and many sinners converted.

The Wesleyan London Mission has captured the historic theatre of Sadler's Wells, which will, as soon as the transfer to the Wesleyan Central Mission has been completed, become the scene of evangelistic services, and the centre of the missionary labours of Rev. J. E. Wakerley.

Street Arabs' Gratitude.

Our "Old Boys' New Year's Gift" (1892) amounts to £272. In four years these rescued Waifs and Strays have sent £732 from Canada to their Old Home—all out of their own pockets.

We hope to send out 120 boys during this Spring. Each boy's emigration (passage, outfit, &c.) costs £10.

In Memoriam. Many friends contribute the cost of one boy In Memory of some dear brother, son, &c.—bearing, if possible, the ever-dear name—Henry, James, &c. Photo and particulars are sent of the special boy thus benefited.

We need £700 before the end of this month. The time is very short. It would be very sad for any who are eagerly expecting this start in life to be disappointed at last.

Who will help? Even the smallest Gift will be welcomed.

PEPSONYMIN TONIC

THIS is a Genuine Remedy. It cures INDIGESTION. This is not mere assertion. It is a fact. Experience has proved it. Dr. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., says:—"The many martyrs to the ignorant use of unsuitable and crude drugs will benefit largely from its use." Mrs. HENRY KING-PARKES, F.R.S.A., says:—"I have had its efficacy tested in several severe cases of dyspepsia, and invariably with beneficial results." One patient says:—"I have derived more benefit from Pepsonymin Tonic than from any of the remedies so much advertised." Another writes:—"The headache, dizziness, and drowsiness have entirely, and, I hope, permanently left me." Try it. Ask your Chemist for it. If he does not keep it in stock, ask him to order it for you. If difficult to obtain, order direct from FRANCIS SPITE & Co., Ltd., St. ENOCH SQUARE, GLASGOW, who will send it post free for 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., or 4s. 6d. per bottle. The trade supplied with Pepsonymin Tonic by Lynch and Co., May, Roberts and Co., F. Newbery and Sons, London, E.C.; Goodhall, Backhouse and Co., Leeds, &c.

Southport. On the following day the annual meeting was held, with the Mayor of Wakefield in the chair.

The work in Yarmouth is still being pursued with vigour and success. The congregations have been well maintained, and week by week conversions have occurred. Recently Rev. Thomas Waugh conducted three services on the Sunday, and gave an address at a largely-attended meeting on the Monday. Great power accompanied the Word, particularly at the men's meeting and the evening service, and there were many inquirers.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John S. Cockburn, of Penrith, has accepted a call to Harrogate.

Rev. J. A. Watt, of Gateshead, read last week before the Newcastle Presbytery, a suggestive paper on Home Mission work.

The congregation at Brondesbury have just held their annual meeting, when the report showed progress in many directions.

Great and widespread regret is felt within the Presbyterian body at the resignation of Principal Cairns, which we announced last week.

The report of the Islington congregation shows not a little encouragement, notwithstanding the vacant pulpit for a good part of the past year.

In his sixth and concluding Cunningham lecture, Rev. Charles G. M'Crie dealt with recent developments in the public worship of the Scottish Presbyterian churches.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Six hundred and ten people came forward to seek salvation in Army meetings in France and Switzerland during the month of January last.

General Booth intends visiting Holland and Germany next month. He will conduct two days' meetings at Exeter Hall on April 5th and 6th.

A girl has just been imprisoned at Thisted, in Denmark, for nailing a collecting-box to the wall of the Hall in order to receive an offertory from the audience.

The first number of The Colonist will appear shortly. It will be conducted by Major Wright, the Governor of the Farm Colony, and will describe the doings of the Colonists.

A girl at a penitent form in Canada asked God to "forgive her guilty past," and to "keep her in the past which is to come." A profound prayer from simple lips. Her past would, she felt, recur. At least the old temptations and the old tempter would, she knew, come back again, and God must keep her. Would that all young converts were equally aware of their danger!

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Home Mission staff of workers has just been augmented by the addition of four names, and several of the oldest stationary workers are changing their spheres of labour, while others are doing active evangelistic work.

Robt. F. Crosland, of Cleckheaton, and Wm. Hobson, of Cardiff, are at present visiting the "Ayrshire Friends," and on Sunday last were at Ardrossan, where they had a cordial reception. They look to holding series of meetings in various centres in and around the county.

As the Friends rendered great service during the Irish famine, and subsequently during and following the Franco-German War, so now they are actively relieving the famishing Russians; and the public, having confidence in their wise administration of funds, are subscribing liberally through them. Last week, the amount had reached about £25,000, but £200,000 are wanted to carry out their purpose, and supply in part the dire need in Russia.

While the venerable Isaac Sharp and Dr. Dixon are actively and earnestly at work in India and Japan, representing and promoting spiritual truth there, and George Grubb, of Cork, has been authorised to visit Canada and parts of the United States, in order to carry out his religious concern, we are glad to know that Mary C. Woody, Laura A. Winston (if health permits), and Addison Coffin, all of North Carolina, were expecting to leave New York for Liverpool on the 13th inst., on a visit to this country, thus replacing those gone out in the same service.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Methodism in Londonderry is prospering, having six flourishing Sunday-schools and a Christian Endeavour Society.

By the death of Mr. Jas. Adams, of Belfast, the Presbyterian Church comes into the enjoyment of legacies amounting to £1000.

Eight conversions from the Church of Rome are said to have lately taken place in different parts of Ireland, and among these that of Rev. Dr. Joseph Anthony O'Shea.

Cork has just been visited by the anti-opium deputation, and Mr. C. Cheok Cheong preached in Wesley Chapel, while Miss Guinness preached in the Congregational chapel.

The Dublin Methodist Union, for enabling ministers and others to meet together and discuss in a devout spirit important religious questions, is getting on successfully, and has had a prosperous session.

On Sunday last there was an interchange of pulpits in Cork between the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Congregational ministers, and on the following day a united communion service was held in Wesley Chapel.

There are about 150 deaf mutes in Belfast, and for these an undenominational mission is being carried on, which includes two services on the Lord's Day, a weekly prayer meeting, a Bible-class, and a weekly lecture.

The Victoria Homes, Belfast, are doing a good work, and support now 73 destitute little girls. If the £1270 necessary to clear the Homes of debt be raised before June, Mr. Forster Green offers £250 in addition to £1,000 which he gave to the same object a year ago.

The Belfast Methodist City Mission, which is only two years in existence, is carrying on an excellent work, conducting a very large number of services, also open-air meetings in the slums, and has already reached many who never entered any church. It has the largest Sabbath evening congregation in the city, and has a day-school with 330 pupils on the roll.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Brighton, Mrs. Watts, well known for her generous aid of Christian effort; at Leeds, Mr. Thomas Heaps, a leading Methodist; at Gimingham, Norfolk, on March 1, Archdeacon Ralph Blakelock, aged eighty-eight, a faithful and beloved servant of Christ; at Shireshead, near Garstang, on Feb. 25, suddenly, Rev. J. Bickerdike, aged seventy-six, an earnest and evangelical clergyman; at Palaveram (India), on Feb. 25, Rev. W. T. Satthianadhan, B.D., well known as a devoted and successful native clergyman and missionary; on March 1, at Liverpool, Rev. James Kelly, of St. George's Church; at Boulogne, on Feb. 16, Mr. Benjamin Gregory, who settled, many years ago, in business in Boulogne, and has rendered great service to mission work; at Finnoe, co. Tipperary, Rev. Jas. Martin, for forty years rector of Finnoe, and previously for some time rector of Kilkee, co. Clare; Dr. Noah Porter, President of Yale College, eminent as a lexicographer and theologian.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-rd., London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become Mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions—

1. For the General Fund; the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund; a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For law expenses; in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

Be Up To Date.

It is a tradition with you that brimstone and treacle is a good Spring medicine, eh? And that Spring brings feverishness, eruptions, and a general disturbance of the system. Quite so. You accordingly proceed to dose yourself and dose your children with brimstone and treacle. But why? The mixture is messy and nauseous. It does good, but stomach colic is apt to ensue. But no matter. Those before you believed in it and so do you.

You might just as well stick to the farthing rushlight, and ignore paraffin, gas, and the electric light. But you don't do so because you know better.

Carry the principle farther, and give Frazer's Sulphur Tablets a trial as a Spring medicine. They are more efficacious, and far safer than brimstone and treacle, and much nicer to take.

Don't be bigoted nor sceptical. Live and learn. Think of Frazer's Sulphur Tablets as the best of all Spring medicines, and a valuable blood purifier. Why not test them free of charge? Samples will be sent gratis and post free on application. Name The Christian.

"Ye shall go over, and possess that Good Land."

7th March, 1892.

Dear Fellow-Helpers,

I am (D.V.) sending off to Canada, on the 17th March, the largest party of Young Emigrants ever sent out at one time from the Homes. It will consist of 300 Trained Lads, who will be commended to our Father's care at a Farewell Meeting in Exeter Hall, on Tuesday Evening, the 15th inst.

Will you help me to give these dear young fellows a start in life? £9 per lad for Ontario, £11 per lad for Manitoba, will pay the whole cost of journey and outfit, thus giving a fresh start in life to 300 boys rescued for the most part from the slums of Darkest England, and enabled through your kindness to turn their backs for ever upon the East End of London.

Say that the cost is on an average £10 per boy. That would amount for the whole party to £3,000. As yet I have only received about £310. Unless the hearts of God's people are moved to supply the necessary cost, I will be compelled to reduce the number of those to be sent out. Will you help me to avoid this? Last year one generous friend gave me £1,000, which paid the entire cost of 100 boys right away.

No truer, wiser method has ever been devised for effecting four desirable objects than this scheme of well-organised Christian Emigration of trained and tested Young People: for 1st.—It saves the boy, delivering him for ever from the perils of his former lot.

2nd.—It relieves our over-crowded cities, the labour-markets of which are hopelessly congested, and in which the struggle for existence is growing fiercer every day.

3rd.—It supplies Canada with her greatest need: additions to her population of the choicest materials—honest, industrious, and piously-trained Youths, who, by God's blessing, will grow into the successful Citizens of the near future.

4th.—It provides room for the immediate admission to the Homes of as many fresh cases, to be rescued from the streets and lanes of our great cities all over the land.

Every year an increasingly large sum is received as Thank-offerings from Old Boys who have been placed out in Canada, and who are now doing well. These gladly contribute of their comparatively small means to help out others who are as forlorn as they themselves once were.

Commending my dear lads to your sympathies and prayers,

Believe me to be,

Yours sincerely in Christ's service amongst the Waifs,

Thos. J. Barnardo.

THIRTY-NINTH SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THE WEEK.

DYSPEPTIC CONSUMPTION—PULMONARY DISEASE with CHRONIC DYSPEPSIA—CASE at WIMBLEDON.

It is nearly two years since the patient referred to (Miss SARAH JONES) consulted me at Coombe Lodge, after which she continued for twelve months under my treatment, and recovered her health.

She had been ailing for some months with cough, hæmoptysis, sore throat, indigestion, gastric tenderness, loss of flesh, and weakness. She came by the advice of many friends who had seen the great results arising from the use of my remedies.

The correspondence extended to twelve letters. Prescriptions were given for the dyspepsia, in addition to my ordinary remedies. A complication of disease such as this is always obstinate in resistance to the influence of medicine.

In July of last year the patient writes:—"I have been under your treatment over a year. I feel so much better in every respect. I am stronger and my digestion is good. I have left off medicine now. I thank you much for all that you have done for me." In January, in answer to my inquiry, she says:—"I am glad to say I am strong and well."

In my own case

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, Sept. 12, 1891.

For Liver Complaints.

There is no medicine that so speedily restores this organ (however gravely or chronically affected) as Guy's Tonic. Congestion and other biliary derangements are cured with unerring certainty. The complete and permanent restoration resulting from a short continuance of this valuable remedy causes universal wonderment, a cure invariably taking place although all other remedies have been used without benefit.

Albert-st., Wednesbury, Staffs., Sept. 18, 1891.
Dear Sirs,—Having suffered from severe liver complaint for the last three years, with pain in the back and mental depression, I have tried nearly everything without benefit; but after taking three doses of Guy's Tonic the pains in the back have entirely gone. I now feel as I have not done before for years. I shall recommend it wherever I go.
Yours truly, J. H. Kight.

AN ANALYST'S VERDICT.

1, Portman Mansions, London, W.
Dear Sir,—I have very much pleasure in spontaneously testifying to the efficacy of Guy's Tonic and Fruit Pills. I am a martyr to indigestion, and have found nothing so beneficial as your remedies. The Tonic was analysed by a friend of mine—a member of the medical profession in Dublin, and appears (from a letter I received a short time since) to be—not a quack's mixture, but made from quite an ideal prescription.—I am, yours faithfully, F. GARDNER.

TO ANY ONE DESIRING to test our remedies, we will send, securely packed in a special box, a bottle of Guy's Tonic, together with a free sample box of Guy's Fruit Pills and complete "Guide to Digestion," containing simple instructions as to the Guy's Tonic Treatment, post paid, for 2s. 9d. The Review of the Churches

"REUNION" CONFERENCE AT GRINDELWALD.

A TWELVE DAYS' HOLIDAY IN SWITZERLAND FOR TEN GUINEAS,

WITH THE OPTION OF PROLONGING THE HOLIDAY TO A MONTH.

PROGRAMME FOR JULY.

(With the exception of the day given up to the "Reunion" discussion in the middle of the month, the mornings and afternoons will be entirely devoted to mountain-climbing and other recreations. The first object of the gathering will be to secure for all who are present a genuine rest, and this would be prevented by meetings during the day. In our winter party we found discussions on alternate evenings to be sufficiently exciting, and I have adhered to this plan as a rule. It is possible that some of the party may even find the programme with this proviso appear too much like work. To reassure them I may say that there is no compulsion about attendance at these discussions. I have no doubt, as a matter of fact, that when we get to Grindelwald the discussions will prove too tempting to be neglected by any excepting those who have been doing very hard mountain-climbing on any particular day.)—Gen. Ed., Rev. Ch.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Mrs. Barbour, Bonskeid.

There will be an unusual interest this year aching to the open-air gatherings held in ly at Fenaghy, near Belfast; both Mr. ody and Mr. McNeill are expected to take t. Would it not be well for the Christians some of the populous communities in pro- cial England to arrange similar gatherings ile Mr. Moody is with us, and Mr. McNeill free to help him? Vast numbers of the sed masses might thus be reached with the ssage of the Gospel, in open-air meetings ing the day and in churches or other ldings at night.

From our own knowledge, and from intima- ns that reach us from time to time, we oice to believe that an increasing volume of ayer is ascending to God for the long-desired ritual revival. The gracious visitation is ded at home and abroad, and when the d is fully realised by the Lord's remem- ncers, it will surely be satisfied, for there be no doubt that the Divine Will accords h this holy aspiration. In proportion as we awake to the grave importance of our timony for Christ, we shall recognise the gency of work for God. If "the King's siness requireth haste," we who are engaged ein not only require to toil with devotion, t to live in constant communion with the ng.

In his new book, "The Divine Enterprise Missions," Dr. Pierson maintains that ction, the anointing by the Holy Spirit for vice, is the greatest lack of missions, both home and abroad. He speaks to workers lividually in words from the heart:—

Tarry before God till you get it. No waiting, for s is wasting time. Better one day, with power m on high, than a hundred or a thousand in its sence. God would not have us neglect the natural sis of studious and systematic preparation, for se sets no premium on sloth, and a mind and rt fitted by devout study of the Word of God is st likely to be endued.

The anointing implies previous cleansing, as the ites were washed with water before they were inted with oil. But, beside and beyond this, God uld have us feel our deep need of the promise of Father. May the Spirit of God be to us all a erates, to bring us from ignorance and impotence conscious to ignorance and impotence conscious, en let our need drive us to God. Let the securing his unction be our supreme aim and absorbing yer.

In more senses than one such a presence of Spirit of the Lord among us would bring erty—sinners would enjoy spiritual eman- ation, and servants a freedom enhancing eir usefulness in the cause of Christ.

The Book of Leviticus is of primary impor- ce as to atonement for sin and growth in liness. In a typical book there is much room divergence of view as to details; and this the case with regard to Leviticus; but with pect to the main teaching of the book, there general accord amongst all evangelical positors. The latest of these is Mrs. Synge, ghter of the late Rev. E. B. Elliott, author the Horæ Apocalypticæ, to whose memory book is dedicated, entitled, "The Five eat Offerings and their Law." It is faced by a commendatory letter from Prin- al H. C. G. Moule, the author's cousin; and preface by Dr. J. Elder Cumming. The ws taken are sufficiently original to give book a special interest. (Marshall thers. 3s. 6d.)

It is nothing new for the study of prophecy to be ridiculed because of the extravagant speculations of some who are wise above what is written. The last issue of The Christian World contained an article which by no means discriminated between sober attention to the prophecy and that treatment which finds special favour among those who seem to disregard the Lord's warning: "Ye know neither the day nor the hour." We only call attention to this criticism in order to show the lengths to which naturalism is disposed to go in the imposing name of "sound and scientific principles of Biblical criticism." The writer says:—

Elaborate calculations are founded on the supposition that the Book of Daniel was written by Daniel, to the quiet ignoring of the fact that the almost unanimous verdict of modern criticism places its date 150 years later, in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes.

All the worse for the "criticism," for on this point recent correspondence in The Record has shown on how very weak evidence the position is being held at the present moment. We would remind the critics, however, that bringing the date down by 150 years by no means helps them, for even then the book remains with its many prophecies which only the Spirit of God could have inspired. And is no weight to attach to our Lord's Mount Olivet admonition, when he referred to "the abomination of desolation" as "spoken of by Daniel the prophet," and added the significant words of caution, "Whoso readeth, let him understand"?

Prophecy is as offensive as miracle to the "higher critics"; and the Revelation must go as well as Daniel. Both must be discredited if possible, and by all means divested of any present predictive value. So we read in the article referred to:—

Sober criticism is now almost unanimously agreed that the writer of the Book of Revelation was writing for his suffering Christian contemporaries, and that his work deals, in the highly figurative and mystical language which was common at the time, and of which the "Shepherd of Hermas" is another remarkable illustration, with current affairs; that it is, in fact, a sacred drama, whose action pivots on the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple, that event of overwhelming interest to both the Jewish and the Christian world.

On this we remark that the plain reader will easily discern in the book an horizon far beyond the earthly limits of the "critical" gaze. To class the Apocalypse with the "Shepherd of Hermas" is like comparing Milton's "Paradise Lost" with the inane production of some obscure rhapsodist. Those who have not studied the Apocalypse may compare it with writings at once uninspired and uninspiring, but we thank God for it. It is a sorry sign of the times that it should be lightly esteemed; yet the benediction with which it opens holds good: "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand."

The Second Reading of the Bill brought in by Mr. Fowler "to Amend the Eastbourne Improvement Act" was carried in the House of Commons on Thursday night by 269 votes to 122. The Solicitor-General supported the Bill on the ground that "no locality ought to have power to do just what it pleased in regulating by a majority matters which might affect the property, liberties, and even lives of a minority." Presumably the advocates of this Bill are advocates also of Local Option and even of Prohibition. But we do not see with what consistency they can now advocate these principles, for by them the "property" of brewers, distillers, publicans, et hoc genus omne, would be affected, not to say depreciated or destroyed, and their liberty to demoralise and pauperise both majority and minority would be restricted or abolished.

The Home Secretary supported the Bill, not on behalf of the Government, but as a private member, "because he was opposed to a special law for particular localities which was contrary to the general law of the land." Another undermining operation as to Local Option and Prohibition

Mr. Matthews and the astute Romish Hierarchy doubtless see their opportunity, and bide their time. The principles laid down by the Solicitor-General and the Home Secretary only require a little extension to form a basis of appeal for the removal of the prohibition of Popish processions with their Pagan "Host." For, if "public meeting and public procession" constitute, without qualification, "two of the cardinal and invaluable rights of the people," how is the prohibition of Roman Catholic processions to be defended? Extremes meet, and the advocacy of unqualified liberty of procession opens the door for a kind of procession which may deny our liberty to keep our hats on at the passing of the bread-god, illustrations of which are continually taking place in Spain.

After writing thus far we met with the following in The Pall Mall Gazette:—

A curious, half-forgotten point was raised in the Eastbourne debate yesterday. Roman Catholics are still forbidden to conduct religious processions or to appear in canonical dress in the public streets. The reasons for the prohibition at the time it was made, and at the time it was continued, are obvious enough. The "No Popery" riots towards the end of last century showed sufficiently the spirit in which the English people approached the question of toleration to Roman Catholics; and probably the remembrance of these riots strongly influenced Parliament in 1829. But is there any reason to think that the same disturbances, or, indeed, any disturbance, would now attend a Roman Catholic procession? The majority of non-Catholic Englishmen would probably regard it as a picturesque break to the monotony of commercial life. Not the least of the contrasts that attract Englishmen to the Continent is the greater picturesqueness which free exercise of the Roman Catholic religion is able to throw into the ordinary life of the people. And this is probably why in the case of the Salvation Army so many people half enjoy the tuneless bands and the noisy drum.

Many things in Paganism were and are picturesque; but the "picturesque break to the monotony of commercial life" supplied by popish-pagan processions will be procured at a costly price. Truly the liberty of these latter days is "freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name."

The Pall Mall Gazette is mistaken. The prohibition of Popish processions is not a "half-forgotten point." Notice has already been given in the House of Commons of a motion to repeal this prohibition. It has been ruled out of order in the form in which it has now been brought forward, but we may expect very soon to hear of it again.

The view of this division, given by a London correspondent, is not a pleasant one.

The debate and division on the Eastbourne Bill was a remarkable example, not of fin-de-siècle, but of end-of-a-Parliament tactics. The Gladstonians forgot all their devotion to Local Option and Home Rule; the Conservatives forgot all their pious horror of Salvation Army methods; and both sides united in bidding as highly as they could for the Salvationist vote, which has now become sufficiently important to be greatly valued.

So that after all, if this be true, it was not a vote for liberty, but a vote for votes.

Portions of Mr. Lilly's address at Birmingham, to which we referred in our last issue, have given offence at Rome, and have been the subject of much discussion at the Vatican, where it is said there is an idea that the speaker "forgot important points of doctrine impossible for a Catholic to overlook." It is difficult to see what passages are referred to, unless, indeed, they are those in which Mr. Lilly said that he had no desire "for the restoration of the old Papal government by Cardinals and Monsignors in the old Papal States, or in any smallest portion of them," and that he did not wish to see foreign bayonets force the Pope's temporal kingdom upon "an unwilling people."

A leading Romanist contemporary, while admitting that "the necessity of temporal power for the Church is not an article of faith," insists upon it, however, that "this necessity is the natural effect of the revealed dogma, which declares that the spiritual authority of the Papacy should be thoroughly independent of all political powers," and it blames

Mr. Lilly for "injudiciously interfering in a question which directly concerns the Pope." Mr. Lilly asserted that spiritual freedom was the heritage of every man and woman, and we are inclined to think he will himself find how little spiritual and mental freedom there is within the boundaries of Rome, for the feeling at the Vatican certainly seems to be pointing to the exaction of a recantation.

Much prominence is being given to the proposed erection of a Roman Catholic "Thanksgiving Church" in London, a feature of which will be "constant masses and devotions for the conversion of England, the restoration of apostates, and the forgotten dead." It is announced that the Romish Bishop of Southwark has "blessed the scheme," and that Walworth has been selected as the site for the church, "in honour of the five wounds." The appeals which are being circulated for funds are peculiar in many respects; but perhaps the most noteworthy paragraph is one in which it is stated that "the Dedication to the Five Wounds is due not only to the fact of its being an old English devotion, but also of the Sacred Stigmata being the Price of Ransom."

The Apostolic Speeches.

In the Acts of the Apostles there are related several speeches. They were addressed to different sorts of persons, who also were in very diverse states of mind; but all needed salvation.

Whilst these discourses are full of most important instruction and exhortation for every one's personal good, do we not well to study them, and to follow them — not rigidly, indeed, which would destroy all the freshness of spiritual admonition—still, as models of addresses for all time?

A few main features—say, four—will be found to characterise all of them, more or less, namely—

1. The speaker spoke with authority as commissioned of God, proclaiming God's message, putting God in the foreground.

2. He gave information in touch with the hearer's existing state of mind—also in general, not as a teacher, but as a witness of the facts or of the power of them.

3. He cleared up difficulties, which may and often do exist in the minds of hearers. And

4. Whilst instructing the mind in what was Divinely true, he applied the truth to the hearts and consciences of those who heard; and called them to take the preliminary step, to repent.

I now proceed to study the Apostle Peter's first sermon, just guarding myself from being supposed to imply that there was any designed order. But the Apostle did so speak, and he was guided by the Holy Spirit. Therefore, here are footsteps for the servants of the Lord to tread in.

Acts ii. 22-42.

On the occasion here narrated the Apostle Peter laid the foundation for what he had finally to say, in facts. No doubt this discourse was specially applicable to the Jewish audience. But the substance itself is important to us as human beings—for all of us, and for all time.

(a) The facts are opened easily, as they bore upon the existing condition of things in Jerusalem. The hearers knew of Jesus of Nazareth, and He is placed in the foreground, and the action of God through Him is proclaimed. In contrast, and to arouse the conscience, the wicked action of man towards Jesus is stated with unsparing truthfulness.

(b) They also knew the Old Testament prophecies. The facts declared were the fulfilment of the chief prophecies about the Messiah. The fulfilment of prophecy is a most important fact, or argument, in preaching.

(c) Possible difficulties are cleared up. Many a doubtful, inquiring mind needs this consideration.

(d) Besides the historical facts, Peter declared by inspiration that this very Jesus of Nazareth was to the right hand of God exalted—that he had received the promise of the Holy Spirit, and was commencing the application thereof—the special wonders, the tongues of fire, and the sound from heaven, were the exterior tokens to the eye and ear. The preaching of the Gospel should include the promise of the Father, the Holy Spirit.

(e) Peter authoritatively, in God's name, declares the conclusion:—

1. They, indeed, had crucified Jesus of Nazareth; but
2. God has made Him both Lord (Ps. cx.) and Christ (Ps. ii.).

(f) Here the teaching closes. Next is related:—

1. The pricking of the heart;
2. The earnest cry—"What shall we do?"
3. The commanding answer—Repent and be baptized;
4. The object, the remission of sins;
5. The encouraging promise—"Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."
6. The urgent entreaty—"Save yourselves from this crooked generation."

(g) The narrative is resumed. Numbers repented, believed, were baptized, rejoiced, were added to the Church. Whereabouts are we?

(h) Then followed the true evidence of their sincerity and conversion:—

1. They continued steadfastly in the teaching of the Apostles;
2. and in fellowship with their teachers;
3. and in breaking of the bread;
4. and in the prayers.

(i) Are these things so with ourselves?

MISSION WORK IN NORWAY.

Mr. Louis Andersen, of the Free Mission community, Christiania, writes:—"In the autumn of 1889 I came here as a missionary from America. I commenced work in a mission-house that was placed at my disposal, and a most blessed revival was started immediately. The ecclesiastical party tried to impair my efforts, and I was refused admission to the mission-house any longer. I hired a larger place (a gymnasium), and preached about half a year; the awakening continued, and many were saved.

"I had hardly returned to America when a summons came from the faithful in Christiania for me to resume my work among them. I embarked again for Norway, and took up again the ministry amongst my many friends, who now are arranged as a free communion, and for which I hired our present place, which was formerly a Baptist chapel. God has, indeed, been with us; we are increasing in numbers, and the place is overcrowded on Sundays. Amongst those who have come over to the Lord's side I may mention the elder and deputy for our cause in England, Mr. T. Kristiansen and his wife. If will be a great gain for our cause if we can get our own chapel, the estimated cost of which is about £3000."

Communications to Mr. Kristiansen may be addressed to the care of Mrs. Hedenström-Welin, at the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Homes, West India Dock-road, E.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

Times of refreshing have recently been vouchsafed at several branches of this Mission. At Malden Hall Mr. W. Grove has been holding a Mission for three weeks with manifest blessing. The people have thronged to hear the word, the interest deepening night after night. The hall proved insufficient to accommodate the eager crowds. The interest manifested by the men, for whom special meetings were held, was very marked. Mr. Grove commences a month's mission on the first day of April at Bignold Hall, for which prayer is asked. At Swindon Mr. Herbert Hurditch has been holding special services. Similar services have been held in Banbury and Streatham by Messrs. David Newell and Routledge, the superintendent of the Cambridgeshire branch of the Mission. Here, also, much blessing has been witnessed, especially among the younger people.

Many friends have prayed for this work, and we ask them now to unite in thanksgiving for the grace bestowed, as well as for help sent towards the funds. A goodly sum is, however, yet required to enable us to close our financial year free of debt.

MR. SWAN IN GARENGANZE.

Much interest was manifested in the story of travel, detailed at great length in Malden Hall, Kentish-town, to the crowded audience gathered there on Friday evening last week, when Mr. Chas. A. Swan gave his novel experiences in the arduous task of journeying to Garenganze for the purpose of co-operation in Mr. Arnot's Gospel labours there. The address covered many strange incidents, and illustrated in a marked manner the care and interposition of God for those whom He sends forth into far-off lands with his messages of mercy. We can only sum up a few of the main points in the narrative, by saying that in 1886 Mr. Swan was strongly moved to visit the Dark Continent. Feuds between the Bihé and Bailund chiefs, and Mside of Garenganze, made it no easy thing to reach the interior, but the voyager joined Mr. Saunders, and pushed on amid the difficulties of double-dealing native chieftains and carriers, fatigue, lengthened sicknesses, and loss of goods by fire during absences. Twice did he return to the coast, once accompanying a sick missionary who had decided to return to England, and on the second occasion to obtain supplies reported in long-expected letters at length to hand from Mr. Arnot. One obstinate chief, who claimed to be a god, was removed out of the way by death in a very remarkable manner. When refused passage through any part of the country, Mr. Swan would tell the chief, "Very well, we will stay and preach the Gospel to your people;" and in course of time, finding that the traveller was to be trusted, the chief would yield, and the journey was resumed.

Mr. Swan spoke in warm appreciation of the kindness received from other missionaries, especially Americans, with whom he was brought into contact from time to time. He graphically described the joyful meeting with Mr. Arnot, and how they spent the whole night together in conversation. When the time came for an interview with Mside, Mr. Swan was received with much favour, and laid special stress on the fact that he was in the country on that chief's invitation.

Referring to Gospel progress made in Garenganze, the speaker declared that he had never met an African unwilling to listen to God's Word. Mr. Swan described the introduction of an alphabet for systematising translation into the native language, portions of the Scriptures having already undergone that process. Schools had been started, and there was much encouraging work among the children. One little fellow had come to England with Mr. Swan, having been relinquished to his care by the converted son of a slaveholder, who died in their village. Another lad died from cancer in the throat, and the night before his decease, when warned of his approaching end, and questioned, he declared that he was going to be with Jesus, and gave as a reason for his confidence, "You have told us that if we believe in Christ we shall be saved." The people know and assent to the Gospel, but prayer is needed that they may be brought to decision for Christ.

Mr. Swan had also seen something of work by various societies in the Congo Free State, of which work he gave encouraging particulars. He had derived much benefit to his health from the sea voyage to England, and was hoping for a speedy return to his loved occupation in Garenganze.

THE LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION held its annual meeting on Monday evening. We are compelled, by lack of space, to reserve our report to next issue.

DR. BARNARDO IN THE CITY.—The hall used for the daily noon prayer-meeting in Aldersgate-street was crowded last Monday on the occasion of a "farewell" to over three hundred youths who had drifted into London destitution from all parts of the country, and some from abroad, being the largest number ever gathered together for emigration to Canada in connection with Dr. Barnardo's rescue work. It must have been gladdening to the intending emigrants and to Christian friends present to know that, as the Doctor said, if the former prove industrious, honest, and sober, every one of them will leave poverty behind him for ever. Mr. Robert Paton commended to the memories of the lads some helpful Scriptures, and brought them a good report from his recent journey in Manitoba. The lads were very warmly commended to Divine care by one and another of the many Christian workers present.

TABERNACLE BUILDING.

Exodus xxv. 9, 40.

The heart of the Jewish people was the Tabernacle, around which their tents circled, and the movements of which determined the journeyings of the host. The Tabernacle also taught them some of the deepest thoughts about God, in a kind of picture language, which was best suited to their immature minds. These we can touch on but incidentally, as our main point is the part borne by Moses in its creation.

We must remember that the children of Israel did not possess a language like our own, with many words, and a rich vocabulary, capable of expressing all kinds of abstract ideas, such as love, wisdom, purity, spirituality, holiness. We hardly realise how great a hindrance to the communication of spiritual truth arises from the lack of suitable words to act as the counters of thought. How could you speak of love to savages if the only word in their language had coarse associations. So that before making his revelation God had to provide language for his thoughts. This He did largely in the construction of the Tabernacle.

I. The Conception of the Tabernacle. The pattern on the Mount! Then clearly there must have been some visible phenomenon, some bright apparition, some glorious picture cast on the clouds or built on the old rocks. There may have been stakes and curtains, cherubs and lamps, gold and silver, altar and candlestick, but they would not bear the touch, they existed as a beautiful dream, like some mystery of cloud that stands for a moment in the heavens at sunset, and then is gone, tumbled to ruin by the wind, like a vision.

But, at the same time, it is almost inconceivable that God did not at the same time explain to Moses those wonderful conceptions of his own nature, and his relations to men, which were designed to be set forth in this material structure. In those days of hallowed intercourse the Almighty Teacher must have impressed on the reverent and receptive mind of his pupil trains of holy thought which engrossed and delighted him. It may be that even to him they were first conveyed under those pictorial forms in which they were afterwards presented to the people, but in any case they were surely communicated by the Spirit which reveals the deep things of God, and makes them known to those who love Him.

The first of these was God's willingness to share man's life. If the people had only seen the wavering fire on the top of Sinai, the pavilion of God's presence, they would never have dared to think that there was any community of interest between Him and them. To their minds, He would always have seemed distant and unapproachable. So God said, "Let them make Me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them," and as promised concerning it, "I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God."

Thus it was ordained that this larger tent should be pitched among them, only differing from their own in its proportions and materials, but standing on the same level sand, struck and pitched at the same hour, and enduring the same vicissitudes of weather and travel. I do not this say, as plainly as words could, that the tabernacle of God was with men, and that He was willing to dwell with them and become their God? Did it not teach that Jehovah would become a pilgrim with the pilgrim host, no longer a God afar off, but a sharer in their national fortunes? And is not this the very reason of the Incarnation? May we not venture to suppose that the Church, that holy body which is being prepared for the Son of God, was even then revealed to the faithful servant? and that in his wonderful structure he repeated, in material forms, that mystic union of spirit, soul, and body in the man Christ Jesus, of which the Holy of Holies, the Holy Place, and the Outer Court were the transient but striking emblem.

It was thus that the mind of man was prepared to learn that God could become flesh and tabernacle amongst us. It was thus that the first syllables were coined which were to be built up into the name Emmanuel. It was thus that the Incarnation was prefigured. Yes, the body of Jesus is the true tabernacle, which the Lord hath pitched, and not man; that body which was born of the pure Virgin, in which he abode with men, and through which he achieved redemption.

The next of these great thoughts which probably passed through the mind of Moses during those days of marvellous fellowship was an enlarged conception of the greatness of God. To this too, a visible expression was to be given. The Tabernacle was the most superb building of its kind ever reared by man. It must have cost at least a quarter of a million sterling—an immense sum for that fugitive nation of slaves. The silver pedestals placed at intervals along the sand to hold the upright boards; the gorgeous tapestry which composed ceiling and walls; the golden furniture, of which the seven-branched candelabra alone weighed one cwt. of gold, equal to £5500 in value; the brass wrought into sixty brazen pillars, with their silver capitals and hooks, from which were suspended curtains of so slight a gauze that people could see all that was transpiring in the outer court. How costly were these!

On that new year's day, the anniversary of the Exodus, as it stood forth completed in the desert sunshine, it must have seemed to all who beheld it as fair as the New Jerusalem did to the eye of the seer as he beheld it descending out of heaven from God, and must have furnished new and enlarged conceptions of the Divine majesty, though to the eye of Moses there must have been almost a disappointment, because the actual fell so far short of the pattern he had seen.

Then, next, the thought of God's unity must have been presented to the mind and heart of his pupil for him to realise and transmit. All around, the nations were under the spell of idolatry. Lords many and gods many divided the kingdom of human wills between them. But the Tabernacle, with all its differing parts, and materials, and accessories, was one. One ark; one incense altar; one altar of burnt offering; one sacred purpose in every order and rite for the putting away of uncleanness. It stood, therefore, among men as a perpetual protest against idolatry, and as an emphatic witness to the Unity of God. "Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord." Such was the perpetual message that floated on the desert air from that unique structure.

But how sublime, how awe-inspiring must that message have been as it first broke on the heart of Moses! He knew it before, but he saw it as one who looks into the heart of truth; comparing small things with great, it was as when we look into the eye of our friend, and detect there depths of life and love which we could not put into words, and which had passed our thoughts.

Again, there was the conception of God's spirituality.—On the mountain the lawgiver saw the robes of the King, but not the King; his glory, but not his person; his back part, but not his face; and the conception that God was a Spirit was conveyed to the people in the most striking form.

Enter the Holy Place; your eye is arrested by the heavy but magnificent curtain, wrought with cherubim, that cuts off six feet of the length of the entire structure. Pull that aside, and you pass into a chamber which is a perfect cube, a miniature of the New Jerusalem, whose length, and breadth, and height are equal. In the Egyptian temple, this apartment would contain the crocodile or ibis; but here there was only a box, over which forms of exquisite beauty bent with outspread wings; and between them a light shone which was not borrowed from sun or stars. Could anything more significantly convey the idea that God was a Spirit?

This absence of any visible form in the inner shrine most astonished the rough soldier Pompey, who strode with eager curiosity across the floor, which had never before suffered aught but the unsandalled foot of the high priest once a year. He expected to find some visible embodiment of Jehovah, and turned contemptuously away deriding the empty void. But to Moses it must have been an unparalleled conception, overpowering his thoughts.

The last main thought must have been God's purity.—The impression of this was produced by a series of comparisons. First, the Tabernacle stood within a courtyard fenced from public approach, the outer part could be trodden only by those men who had passed through certain rites of purification; and as to the inner it could be only trodden once a year by the high priest, carefully cleansed by many rites, and clad in garments of special design, whilst the blood of slain animals, selected out of the herds for their freedom from any blemish or speck, was sprinkled around. All was done to impress upon the people the care with which they must approach God, and in this way impressions were wrought into the national mind, which succeeding centuries have not been able to efface, of his holiness.

And throughout these arrangements, and notably these repeated references to the blood of sacrifices that was to be shed and sprinkled, Moses became much familiarised with the philosophy of the Atonement. He must have seen across the centuries the cross of Jesus, with its mystery of love and sacrifice, and substitution for the sins of men, and there must have been a very clear prevision of those various aspects of that marvellous death, which were faintly shadowed forth in the offerings, and which touch God, and the believer, the offender in ignorance, and the sinner in presumption, the great world of men, and apparently the universe of God.

Such thoughts as these must have penetrated into the soul of Moses as he waited before God, oblivious to the flight of time, the waning love, idolatry of his people, the demands of the body for food. And as we behold the great spectacle of that rapt and spell-bound soul, we get some conception of one part at least of the engagements of eternity, and we are stirred to seek after a more intimate knowledge of God.

Oh, to know God! Not to know about Him, but to know Him; to follow on to know the Lord; to think his thoughts; to give Him time to convey his thoughts into our minds; to acquaint ourselves with Him, who, indeed, invites us to the knowledge, and sets open all the doors of his nature for us to enter. This were better than all beside; no rapturous experience, no deliverance from evil, no flight of emotion, could so repay our soul as this, which must carry in its embrace all of these. It were well, indeed, to suffer the loss of all things to know Him.

II. The Reproduction of the Pattern.—There is a special interest to us all in this. We are not called to build again the Tabernacle, after that old pattern which has served its purpose, and fallen into disuse because superseded by the clearer revelations of the Gospel, and yet there is an analogy in the life of every true believer which is full of instruction and inspiration, and deserves our attention for a moment.

As the Tabernacle dwelt in the mind of God before it was reproduced on the desert sands, so do the lives of us all exist, as conceptions in that same infinite intelligence, which comprehends in its sweep the flight of an angel with the everlasting Gospel, and the fall of a sparrow to the ground.

When a child is born into the world, with all its faculties shut up within it, as a flower in the bud, there is in the mind of God a perfect picture of what that life may become, an ideal to which it may be conformed. There is a clear anticipation of what it will be, but side by side there is a distinct prevision of what it might be. And if only that pattern could be seen and literally reproduced, if only that life could attain to the Divine ideal, there would be no room for regret or disappointment. It would fulfil its complete purpose as a thought of the Divine mind, and attain its perfect consummation and bliss.

So with the believer standing on the threshold of the Christian life, full of hope and purpose. For him also there is a perfect ideal stored in the Divine Nature, of a life full of the blessedness of the Beatitudes, and overflowing with the mighty works of the Gospels. If only it were realised from day to day of growing glory, from strength to strength, from grace to grace! Alas! that with so many of us, as the years have passed, we have wrought our own evil will and followed our own design. Oh, for one other chance! Oh, for the years to return devoured by the canker-worm and caterpillar! Oh, to be able to start again with an unblemished record! This may not be; the cherubim with drawn swords forbidding return on the past, the gate of that Eden is shut, but Christ calls us to the hope of a future which shall henceforth repeat on earth the Divine ideal, even as it is known in heaven.

The main inquiry for us all as we enter on any fresh enterprise, or even pass over the threshold of each new day, should be, not how would other men act, not what will make for my own advantage? not what would increase my reputation or add to my gains? but what is God's ideal God's thought, God's pattern? And our one, aim should be to understand it, sure that to fulfil it is to have lived well.

God's Pattern was Comprehensive. No tassel or socket or tiny detail was left to the fancy or ingenuity of the artificers; all was comprehended in the Divine plan. Of every detail God had a plan, because in each some purpose was hidden, and the symmetry of the whole depended on the perfection of each part. So in life God's thought covers all details. Nothing is too trivial to be made a matter of prayer and supplication. "In everything let your requests be made known." No great life is possible that does not comprehend in its scheme and scope attention to the commonplaces and trifles of character.

God's Plan was Unfolded Gradually. Probably the account of the revelation of the successive parts of the Tabernacle is an exact transcript of the method by which the Divine design was unfolded to Moses' thought. Line upon line, precept upon precept—such is ever the Divine method. If we may so put it, the plan of the life of Jesus was only unfolded to his human intelligence a step at a time. Remember how He said, "the Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do." "He will show him greater things than these." The eye of the perfect Servant was always fixed on the development of his Father's scheme for Him, and which was shown in the touch of a wasted hand, the cry of an agonised parent, the pressure of the hate of his foes, the demands of the crowds.

We shall not be able to see far in front, nor the whole completed plan of our life, but as we complete one thing, another will be revealed, and then the next and the next. It may be that we shall have to fulfil the different portions of the Tabernacle of our life, without apparent connection with each other, "by divers portions and in divers manners," and we shall not understand the Divine purpose, but at the end of life we shall see that it was one complete and exquisite structure, of which no part was wanting.

God's Plan was Commensurate with the People's Resources. As the pattern was there on the Mount, there were the materials for its realisation in the possession of the people below. The gold and silver and precious stones, the blue and purple and scarlet, the fine linen and goats' hair, the rams' skins and badgers' skins; the genius of the artificers, and the willingness of the people.

God never gives a man a pattern without making Himself responsible for the provision of all materials needed for its execution. Take God's plan, and then trust God utterly for the needful grace; it is there; it only awaits the claim of your faith. If the materials are not forthcoming you may seriously question whether you are not working on a plan of your own. God will not provide for a single tassel of your own addition to his scheme.

God's Plan Must be Resolutely Obeyed. Again and again in the last chapter of Exodus we are told that all was done, "as the Lord commanded Moses." This was his supreme joy and satisfaction, that he had not added to or diminished from the Divine command; and so the work was finished. And it would be well for us to cultivate the habit of immediate and entire subservence to the prompting of the Divine will, repeating it in the tiniest details as well as in the most difficult experiences.

Thus would the human life become harmonious with the Divine, the Tabernacles of our lives would become the Home of Him that inhabiteth eternity and whose name is Holy; and there would be the settling down upon us of the Divine Shekinah, "the cloud by day and fire by night," through all our journeys, till we reach our Father's Home.

SECRETARIES' PRAYER UNION.

One of the cheering signs of the times is the desire for union in prayer on the part of Christian workers. Five years ago this desire was embodied in a union of the secretaries of various religious and philanthropic institutions, who agreed to meet once a month for prayer. The first president chosen was Rev. W. A. Blake, who served two years, and was succeeded by Revs. W. E. Thomas, Robert Dawson, and Dr. John Gritton.

At present sixty-one societies are represented on the Union, and at the monthly meeting on Wednesday last week, in Exeter Hall, fifteen were represented (in three instances by two secretaries each), viz.:—Army Scripture Readers, British Jews, British and Foreign Sailors, Christian Community, Christian Literature for India, Evangelical Alliance, Home Teaching for the Blind, London City Mission, Lord's Day Observance, Midnight Meeting Movement, Open-Air Mission, Orphan Working School, Ragged School Union, South American Missionary, and Young Men's Christian Association.

As this meeting closed the fifth year of the Union's existence, the president and secretary were chosen for the ensuing year, Mr. Gawin Kirkham being selected for the former, and Mr. Frank Cockrem for the latter. Secretaries who may desire to join the Union should write to Mr. Cockrem, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C. The meetings are held at an hour which will not prevent secretaries from attending to evening engagements.

AMONG AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

Mr. G. C. Smith, late of Ealing, who left England about two years ago to work among Australian Aborigines, writes from Warangerda Mission, Darlington Point, Murrumbidgee, New South Wales:—After a brief stay at Maloga with Mr. D. Matthews, I joined myself to the Aborigines Protection Society of New South Wales, and gave my services for eight months at their station, Cummerozuja, on the Murray River. I was much pained to leave the natives of that part, many of whom came in tears to bid me farewell.

I came here in September last; there is not one Christian in the place. The work was started about eleven years back, and has been for some years under the Aborigines Protection Association. We have been the means of forming a branch of the Children's Scripture Union on two of our missions, one at Cummerozuja, which has fifteen members, and one here with twelve members, and, through the kindness of the New South Wales Committee of the Bible Society, we have supplied the children with Bibles, from which to read their portion. I believe this is the means the Lord will use in bringing many of these poor outcasts to Himself. Since I have been stationed here, my beloved co-worker has died from typhoid-fever. He suffered much, and was followed by three natives, who succumbed to consumption, which carries off very many. Since I have been obliged to take to medical work, it opens the door for the Gospel.

THE PUNJAB.—We learn from The Punjab Mission News that the recent Census in the district Sialkot shows a total increase of ten per cent. The Moslems have increased little more than two per cent.; Hindus and Sikhs about twenty-four per cent. each. The Christians have increased in the extraordinary ratio of 660 per cent.—to give the exact figures, from 1535 in 1881 to 11,668 in 1891. The number of native Christians returned in 1881 was 412; now it is 9711. The enormous growth of the Christian community is due to the great blessing which has rested upon the Church of Scotland Mission, and upon the work of the American missionaries who labour alongside.

IS A REVIVAL AT HAND?

BY REV. J. IDRISYN JONES.

The above question is momentous; it is tantamount to asking if blessed times are at hand for the people of God; if salvation is at hand to perishing myriads; if a new momentum is at hand to the forward march of Christ's kingdom; and if a signal rebuke is at hand for the kingdom of darkness? Taking a view of the matter all round, we venture to think that the glorious event is within measurable distance. In support of this opinion, we submit the following considerations:—

1. A great revival must come some day. The law of reaction is as certain in the spiritual world as in the physical; if the tide ebbe, it will flow again; if the pendulum swings to the right, it will swing back again to the left; if the light of day is quenched, the morning will again dawn. So, if Zion droops, she will regain her energy. If religion is in its neap-tide, its spring-tide will return; if God's people have backslidden, they shall draw near again. A revival must come, and it is not impossible that it may come quickly.

2. Many are praying earnestly for it. Amid the abounding worldliness of Christians, never were so many weeping between "the porch and the altar," and crying, "Save thy people, O Lord." The Christian life has entered upon a stage of intensity, never surpassed, if equalled. This is a natural sequence to the greater intensity of evil; the one reacts upon the other, and as iniquity grows more defiant, godliness becomes more pronounced. "And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto Him, though He bear long with them? I tell you that He will avenge them speedily" (Luke xviii.).

3. There are now many local revivals. The moral world of to-day is like an Arabian desert, with its dreary wastes of sand, with here and there and yonder the oasis green and fertile; amid dead churches one and another are rejoicing in new life and power. Surely these are the first drops of the coming shower.

> Lo! the promise of a shower
> Drops already from above,
> But the Lord will shortly pour
> All the spirit of his love.

4. There is an appointed time to favour Zion. So has it always been along the ages of the past, nor have the intervals been of long duration. A godly old saint once remarked that she "never knew the Lord to leave Wales more than twenty years without a revival." This time of the interregnum is certainly more prolonged, for the last one took place in 1859 but this is but an additional reason for thinking that it must now be near to us—and we venture to believe that it is more needed now than on the last occasion, for the worldliness of to-day is more worldly than thirty years ago—the forces of evil work with greater energy and ingenuity, and we may appeal to heaven with more hope of a speedy answer.

5. There are signs of impending judgments. A time of judgment is ever a time of revival, for then, the Bible tells us, the inhabitants of the world "learn righteousness." That such judgments are at the door we infer from the present condition of the moral world. In the Church vital truths are subordinated to secular themes; sin, atonement, futurity are less heard of; the pulpit is largely shorn of its converting power, however much it retains the level of its intellectuality and rhetoric. Unscriptural methods are adopted to attract the people. In the forefront it is not Christ but amusement as the alluring bait; our young people are not so much drilled in the Bible as in days gone by, because they are too busy with calisthenics and various indoor and outdoor games; one and a-half hour in seven days is the maximum time which the bulk of genteel Christians devote to God's house of prayer. And because iniquity abounds the love of many waxes cold. While in society there is a growing antagonism to Christianity; a greater laxity in the observance of the Sabbath; a more eager thirst for the cup of pleasure; a continued sensuality and dissipation on the part of myriads; a rapid development of anarchical principles, stimulated by a greed for gold. While on every hand there are the symptoms of a universal crisis, and therefore of a universal revival.

Let us then assume an attitude of expectation; let us work the harder; let us echo and re-echo the fervent supplication of Habakkuk, "O, Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years; in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy."

From Dr. Griffith John.

Dear Sir,—Little did we think this time last ear that so many trials were in store for us in is valley. The year began auspiciously with s, and we were looking forward to a time of uch prosperity,

BUT THE RIOTS CAME,

nd it looked at one time as if they would never ave an end. For some time the natives were in state of great excitement, and none of us could ell from one day to another what might happen ext. Our work in certain directions was greatly terfered with. The hospitals were almost serted; the attendance at the day-schools windled down to almost nothing; and applica- ons for baptism grew more and more rare as the ear went on. Fortunately, our daily congrega- ons at the chapels showed no falling off, and ur Sunday services kept up well to the end. he Christians, so far as I know, displayed no ck of courage. From first to last we had much ason to thank God on their behalf.

The riots interfered a good deal with the cir- ulation of Christian literature. At one time the ople seemed afraid to touch our books. They d evidently come to the conclusion that the ay for driving out the Christian missionary and urning the Christian books had arrived, and ought it safest not to have the dangerous ticle in their houses. This is not to be sur- ised at, for in the Hunan publications our oks are strongly denounced, and the possessors them threatened with direst punishment. overtheless, the quantity of Christian literature nt forth to all parts of China by the Central ina Religious Tract Society was very large. uring the year no less than 846,000 books and acts were issued by this Society alone. There is uch in the encourage us. Though foul and blasphemous yond all description, it testifies to the activity d power of our missionary operations in these rts. Hitherto our efforts have only created e opposition in Hunan; still, better opposi- n than utter listlessness. We have not been le to do much for Hunan as compared with at we have done for Hupeh; but what has en done has made a deep impression on the anan mind. Hunan men attend the daily eaching at the various chapels at this centre. ey carry with them to their native province me knowledge of the truth as the result of e preaching. They also buy our books, and rry them to their distant homes, where they e more or less read. Missionaries have been siting Hunan off and on during the past fifteen ars, and though they have not been able to do uch there in the way of preaching in its cities d towns, they have done a great deal in the ay of book distributing. The Hunan anti- ristian publications show clearly that our oks have not been issued in vain, but that they ve been read, and that the main drifts of their ristian teaching has not been altogether ssed.

In these publications some of our tracts are ntioned by name, and the points in the Chris- n creed most furiously attacked are the very ints which are most prominently brought rward in our books. Our books teach the rship of the one true God in opposition to the rship of nature, of ancestors, and of saints d heroes; and because of this the Christian ligion is denounced as reviling the powers nature, the ancestors of men, and all the great d the good of the nation. Our books teach e Divinity of Christ, and the duty of all men believe on Him and worship Him; and because this the Christian religion is denounced as olating the sacred rites, and breaking through e bounds of propriety. What they see clearly this, namely, that Christianity strikes at the ot of the present order of things, and that with incoming old things must pass away, and all ings become new; and for this vision of the future ey are mainly indebted to the books and tracts ich have been scattered over the face of Hunan the

CENTRAL CHINA RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

The present stage, however, is only a transi- n stage; ere long, many among the Hunanese ll ponder seriously over the truths which they d in our books, and receive them into their arts. Among the best Christians we have in se parts are Hunan men, and I am looking rward to the time when Hunan will give to the ristian Church in China some of her noblest angelists. The people of Hunan have more strength and force of character than those of Hupeh. They speak of the people of Hupeh as made of bean-curd, whilst they speak of them- selves as made of iron. The comparison is not altogether devoid of truth.

Among the anti-Christian writers in Hunan there is

ONE MAN WHO STANDS PRE-EMINENT.

His name is Chou Han, a man of high official rank, and a scholar of no mean order. This day last year Chou Han was busy at work concerting plans for the destruction of the foreigners re- siding in this valley. His name was unknown to us then. Eight months ago, his emissaries were in this valley actively engaged in carrying out his nefarious schemes. We were told at the time, that a high official was connected with the publication and dissemination of the anti-foreign books and placards. But we knew nothing certain as to his name, his whereabouts, or the actual part he was taking in the movement. In October a copy of a letter of his to the governor of Hupeh, fell in my hands, and ever since the whole man has been coming more and more into the light.

On the 1st inst. many of the converts called on me to pay their respects, and offer their con- gratulations. One of those who called is a Hunan man, and he brought with him five or six of his heathen friends. As soon as I found that one of them was from Chang Sha, the capital of Hunan, I asked him if he knew Chou Han. He knew him well, having been at one time his cook. This led, as you may imagine, to a very interesting conversation. Thus Chou Han is no more a myth to us. Even his quondam cook is known to us. This is a discovery I never ex- pected to make; but having made it, I am begin- ning to

WONDER WHAT WILL HAPPEN NEXT.

The thought has struck me that I may have the pleasure of seeing Chou Han himself walking into my study one of these days.

One of our Hunan converts, in his last letter to me, speaks of Chou Han as a man of great in- fluence in the province, and as living on terms of perfect intimacy with the Governor of Hunan, and others of the higher officials. He closes his letter with these words:—

"I am thinking of what the Lord said to Paul. 'It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.' It seems to me that the conversion of Chou Han is a most difficult matter. Let me beg of you, venerable pastor, to pray for him, that he may be made to turn to the Lord as Paul was made. I believe the will of the Lord in regard to Hunan is about to be accomplished."

It was very delightful to receive such a letter from a Christian brother in Chang Sha, writing, as he was doing at the time, from the very mouth of the lion; for his name had been already reported to Chou Han, and they were searching for him in every direction. I may say, however, that my friend's exhortation was not necessary in order to induce me to pray for Chou Han. I had been doing so for some time. Since October last this man has ever been in my thoughts. I find it almost impossible to kneel in prayer without offering up an earnest supplication on his behalf. During the week of prayer, many a fervent peti- tion was presented by the native converts on behalf of Chou Han. We have been praying for a long time for the appearence of

A PAUL AMONG OUR CONVERTS.

Should this man turn to the Lord, the prayer would, in all probability, be answered. It will interest you to know that I have written a long letter to this man, with the hope of leading him carefully to consider the claims of Christianity. The letter left me three days since, along with a copy of the New Testament and a selection of Christian books. Should I receive a reply, and should his reply be worth translating, I will send you a translation of it. I have also given him a very cordial invitation to come to Hankow and talk the matter over with me. I hardly expect he will do this, and yet I feel that nothing is impossible.

The following is a translation of one of Chou Han's sheet tracts. I send it as a specimen of the Hunan publications, and also as giving some insight into the character of our arch-enemy in Hunan, the inspirer and leader of the present anti-foreign movement. Your readers will be shocked at the language, but let me assure them that it is decency, modesty, and reverence itself, as compared with most of the Hunan publications. My aim in inserting it here is to awaken a prayer- ful interest in Chou Han on the part of your readers. It refers to the so-called sacred edict. And this requires a word of explanation. The Sacred Edict is a kind of paternal address from the Throne to the people. In 1670, the Emperor Kang Hi, published a hortatory edict in sixteen sections of seven words each. His son and suc- cessor, Young Cheng, published, in 1724, an amplifi- cation of each of the sections, being sixteen lec- tures on the sixteen texts of his father. These lec- tures, with the themes on which they were written, constitute what is called the Sacred Edict. The seventh chapter has for its theme, "suppress strange religions for the purpose of exalting orthodox doctrine," and in this chapter Christianity is classed among the strange religions which are not to be followed by the Chinese people. In the Hunan publications it is fre- quently referred to in justification of the anti- Christian movement. It seems to me that the time is come when the foreign powers should ask the Chinese Government to expunge from the Sacred Edict its very hostile reference to Christianity. Among all the writings published for the instruction and improvement of the people by their rulers, none have been so celebrated as the Sacred Edict. It is held in greatest rever- ence by the Chinese, and it is by law required that it be proclaimed throughout the Empire by the local officers on the first and fifteenth day of every month, in a public hall set apart for the purpose, when the people are requested and en- couraged to attend. This being the case, it is very important that it should be revised with reference to the point in question, and brought into harmony with the Imperial Edict issued this year. If Christianity is allowed to appear as a proscribed religion in the Sacred Edict, will soon become a dead letter, so far as the people are concerned. With this explanation your readers will have no difficulty in under- standing Chou Han's sheet tract. It is entitled "Heresy Exposed, in respectful obedience to the Sacred Edict." It reads as follows:—

THE RECENT IMPERIAL EDICT

My neighbour, T'suei Wu-tsze, when compiling the Death Blow to Corrupt Doctrines, concealed his real name, and called himself "The man most distressed in heart." This he did in order to avoid the point of the devils' spear. Not so Han! The Roman Catholic sect [literally the heaven-doomed depraved sect] have fabricated the name of the depraved devil Jesus, and, violating the sacred rites and breaking through the bounds of propriety, honour and worship him as the equal of Heaven. They have fabricated monstrous books, in which they vilify heaven, earth, and the three lights [sun, moon, and stars], saying that they are mere utensils and things created by the depraved devil Jesus. They vilify the deceased parents and ancestors of men, saying that when they leave the world they are nothing better than broken, discarded utensils. All the sages and gods of China are insulted and reviled by them. They have the impudence to disseminate these books in every direction, deluding the simple among the people, and committing lewdness with men's wives and daughters. Their sins have reached heaven. Both gods and men are incensed. If we do not beat the drum and attack them, how can this depraved sect and those mon- strous books be exterminated? Most hateful of all are those fellows [friendly officials], who follow the depraved devils [foreigners], and assist the devils in oppressing the people. As they seek to be at enmity with me, I swear that I will fight them to the death. I now write a distich for my funeral scroll, to be printed and handed down to all future generations. The distich reads thus: "I having suffered death in following the instructions of the gods, expounding the Sacred Edict, and exposing depraved re- ligions, come boldly into the presence of all the Emperors of the Great Pure Dynasty, and the Spirits of all the Sages, Immortals, and Buddhas, and, bowing my head to the ground, style myself Chen Tieh Han [A Genuine Man of Iron, and may be translated, 'Han the Ironside']. But should I allow myself to be cast down by reason of unex- pected calamity, or deluded by empty talk, or frightened by the bark of mad dogs [foreigners], and thus be led to abandon my principles, then shall I at my death bequeath to posterity the bad reputation of a disloyal subject, of an unfilial son, and of a foolish, cruel cowardly fellow, utterly unworthy of being counted among the men of the Great Pure Dynasty."

Issued for general circulation on the 1st day of the 16th year of Kuang Hsü (January 21st, 1890) by Chou Han, styled Tieh Chen, a native of Hunan, Ninghiang District.

There is much in the present aspect of things to encourage us. It will be found in due time that the trials of the past year were blessings in disguise. The atmosphere has been greatly cleared by the storm which raged in the valley for some months, and some formidable obstacles have been removed. We are indebted to the riots for some valuable provincial proclamations. Nothing could have been more satisfactory than the proclamation issued by H. E. Chang, the Viceroy of Hupeh and Hunan. Above all, we are indebted to the riots for the Imperial Edict issued in June last, one of the ever sent forth by the Central Government on the question of religious toleration. It matters not that the Edict was obtained with difficulty. There it is among the archives of the Empire, never to be dislodged. By it the people are made to know that the Christian religion has been received by express laws of the State into the class of lawful religions. As in the Roman world in the days of Tertullian, so in China, the common taunt of the heathen against the Christians has hitherto been non licet esse vos (you are not allowed by the laws). The promulgation and wide dissemination of this Edict must do much everywhere towards silencing that taunt. It has done a great deal of good already, but it will do more good in the days to come. Once more, Hunan is, doubtless, going to be opened, and when the long-hoped-for day arrives, it will be seen that the riots of the past year will have had much to do with that splendid consummation.

MOST IMPORTANT DOCUMENTS

The opening of Hunan to the Gospel will tell mightily on the whole Empire. Hunan will give us some of our best native helpers, riots in the Yang-tsze valley will die down, and the Gospel will have a comparatively free course throughout the whole of this region.

Finally, it is reported that the Emperor himself is studying the English language. Is it not possible that the riots of last year have had something to do with hastening on this most significant event? In any case, the fact is full of meaning. It may mean much to our work; it will in all probability mean a great deal to China. It will probably soon become among the officials high and low; the people will follow in the wake of their superiors, and the demand for English may become as great a rage in China as it is in Japan. Thus everything in China is pointing to great changes as about to take place in many directions. May God so move the hearts of his people everywhere that these changes shall not find them sleeping, but ever waiting in faith and prayer, and ready to move forward when the word of command comes.

I have called attention to the noble work which the Central China Religious Tract Society has been doing in these parts. Many of your readers have been assisting as most generously in this branch of the missionary work. One of your readers in Chicago sent me 128 dollars, and another in New Zealand sent me £25, quite recently. We held our annual meeting on Friday last, and our secretary was able to tell us that the Society was not only free from debt, but could boast of a small balance to the good. Everything looked bright, till the morning of the 12th, when in the vicinity of our dépôt, and consumed all our stock, valued at about £300. This is a heavy loss to us, and, what is still worse, we do not know how to make it good. The parent Society in London has helped us nobly in all the past, and we do not feel that we can ask for more money of them. But among your readers, who feel a deep interest in God's work in China, there are not a few who could, single-handed, put us on our feet again. I appeal to them; and ask them to read this letter right through, and see if I am not fully justified in making this appeal. Bis dat qui cito dat.—With kindest regards, I remain yours faithfully,

Griffith John.

THE STORY OF SENOR ALBERTO J. DIAZ, formerly Cuban Revolutionist, now a soldier of Jesus Christ, has been reprinted in tract form for general distribution. The wish of many who read it in The Christian is thus complied with, and the animated and purposeful story, accompanied by a portrait of Señor Diaz, will command the eager perusal of all classes. THE RIOTS IN CHINA.—"The Story of the Anti-Christian riots in China," covering the period between June 1891 and Feb. 29 of the present year, is told in a Blue-book of exceptional interest issued last week. It contains the whole of the official correspondence exchanged within those dates between the Foreign Office and our Minister, Sir John Walsham, and the British Consuls in the disturbed regions, besides some personal narratives of sufferers from the bloodthirsty excesses of the Chinese mobs and soldiery. Among the curiosities of the Blue-book is the text of some of the anti-Christian pamphlets and proclamations, in which the natives are incited to rise and kill the "Devil Doctriners."

JEWISH NOTES.

A GOOD LITERARY UNDERTAKING.

Among efforts to reach the Jews with the Gospel, we must include the Society for Distributing Scripture Truth, 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne, which has issued a striking book, entitled "The Promised Messiah: Good Tidings for the Children of Abraham." The volume contains eighty-two chapters of two pages each; the left-hand page gives extracts from the Old Testament, and the right hand is devoted to explanations from the New. Thus the types, ordinances and prophecies of the former are shown to have their elucidation and fulfilment in the latter. Those who are familiar with work among the Jews will at once realise the importance of such a manual being produced in languages more generally understood by the seed of Abraham. Mr. M. Bergmann, of the London City Mission, has translated it into Judeo-German, which is the familiar speech of the majority of the Jewish people, and Major Giberne, the compiler, is entering heartily into the proposal for a large edition in this useful form. A number of friends of Jewish Mission work have come forward to help the project by contributions of money. Communications to Major Giberne may be addressed 5, Hyde-gardens, Eastbourne.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.

The work under the care of Mr. C. T. Lipshytz has developed considerably since the opening of the present Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C. There are meetings for various purposes throughout the week, and the missionary is assisted by two permanent coworkers as well as voluntary helpers. The evangelistic meetings on Saturday afternoons are of prime importance, for then in the course of lectures and addresses the hearts and minds of the Jews are appealed to, and it is shown that the Christ of New Testament story is the Messiah of Old Testament promise. Friends who attend are continually astonished at the large assemblage of Jews, and the remarkable degree to which their interest is secured. The several Bible-classes during the week have attendances ranging from twenty to thirty, some of the men being earnest inquirers.

The Home for needy converts has proved of great value. During the past five months thirteen have been admitted, and three are still remaining. Persecuted for the sake of Christ, these poor men would otherwise have been at a very great disadvantage. As it is, they have in some cases lost their all, and in every case they require a helping hand to put them in a position to earn their livelihood independent of Jewish patronage. A typical case is of an inmate who had a thriving business, but no sooner was his religious anxiety known among his friends than they ceased to be his customers, and thus reduced him to poverty. Mr. Lipshytz helps these unfortunate men to a living in various ways, often by getting them suitable situations.

Another important agency is the reading-room in which there are English, Hebrew, Russian, Polish, and German daily papers, as well as other literature. This is frequented most numerously in the evenings, and the room often becomes the scene of friendly discussion on religious questions.

BARON HIRSCH'S SCHEME.

Lieutenant-Colonel Goldsmid, who has been appointed Director-General of the Jewish colonies now in process of organisation in the Argentine, occupied, until quite recently, the position of Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General at the War Office. These colonies are the outcome of the movement known as "the new exodus," which Baron Hirsch has initiated on behalf of Jews who are suffering persecution in the Russian Empire, and which he has endowed with the munificent capital of three millions sterling. Colonel Goldsmid is now in his forty-sixth year, and is described as a genial and energetic man. He takes his wife and family to Argentina, and enters upon his work with much heartiness. He comes of a family of soldiers, traditionally descendants of the Maccabees.

Colonel Goldsmid has for a good while been an earnest advocate of the colonisation of Palestine, and in an interview with the correspondent of The Daily Graphic he last week declared himself still deeply attached to this ideal. He said: "My colonists will, I hope, become faithful Argentine citizens, and in time will supply an important part of the agricultural population. But I look upon the Argentine as a nursery ground for Palestine. In a revival on a large scale of the agricultural life of their early history, the Jews will see a picture of their future.

"The creation of a land of milk and honey in South America will bring the question of the reclamation of the Holy Land within the bounds of practical politics. We shall train a Jewish yeomanry to whom the future of Israel will be no longer a dream. They will cultivate the national aspirations which of late years have made so much progress under the auspices of the Chovevei Zion (Lovers of Zion) Society. I am taking out with me a selection of songs calculated to foster this inspiration. One thing I shall do in order to promote it. The use of the Jewish jargons I shall resolutely discountenance, but side by side with the vernacular Spanish I shall give every encouragement to the use of pure Hebrew.

"The Jewish question will never be solved until a Jewish state guaranteed by the Powers is established in the Land of Israel. Such a State will not be physically, though it may be morally, powerful. Constituted as it will be of a nation gathered from among all nations, it will be admirably fitted to act as an international arbitrator. I hold that the more we Jews identify ourselves with the interests and welfare of the lands of our birth, the nearer we are bringing ourselves to this ideal, for in such an experience we are collecting precious material for building up our own State."

AMONG CHINESE LEPERS.

Extracts from a letter received by Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, secretary of the Missions to Lepers in India (17, Glengyle terrace, Edinburgh), from Rev. W. Banister, C.M.S., Foochow, China.

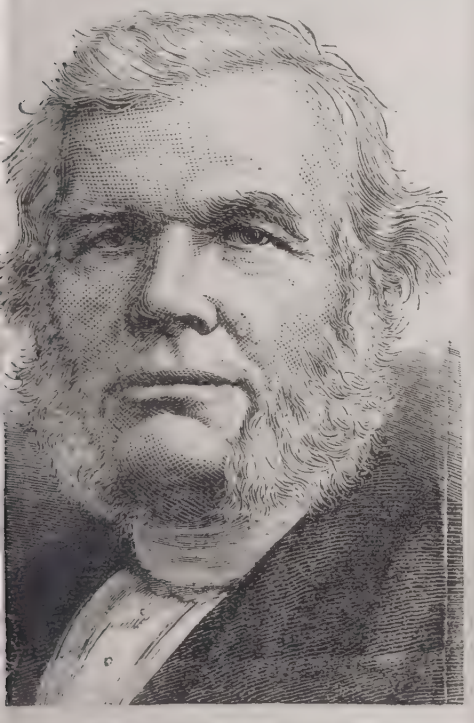
"I have heard with great thankfulness that your Society has determined to extend its operations to China, and I therefore venture to write to you for help and advice. Just outside the west gate of this city there is a colony of lepers, who live in two groups of small and dilapidated Chinese houses, and who receive a wretched pittance from the Government. This is, of course, supplemented by begging and help from benevolent persons.

"During my absence in England one of my oldest catechists was laid aside with illness, which eventually developed into a clear case of leprosy. This was a great trial to the old man's faith, for to be thus afflicted after nearly twenty years of service in God's vineyard was indeed a mysterious dispensation of Providence. After being under the foreign medical men in Foochow, he was pronounced hopeless, though he still refuses to believe he is incurable. He was finally received into the leper colony, and he has been a veritable apostle amongst them.

"During the present year I have frequently taken the service there, and it has often been a real blessing to myself to see how these poor hopeless creatures took in the Word of Life. One old blind leper I shall never forget; his face would change as he heard the truth, and word by word, and sentence by sentence, he would follow, and also repeat the prayer that was made. Others have shown very evident interest in the Gospel of blessing, and the number of real believers has steadily increased.

"It was with very deep feelings of thankfulness to God that I was enabled a few Sundays ago to baptize eighteen inmates of this leper colony and hospital.

"I trust your means will be largely increased, that they may be in some degree commensurate with the vast responsibility you have incurred in including China in the field of your operations."



DURHAM UNIVERSITY CHURCH MISSIONARY UNION.—The last meeting for the session 1891-2 was held on Tuesday evening, March 8. Rev. C. H. Boutflower, M.A., addressed the meeting on the "Punjab," his heads being:—(1) This Punjab Mission is a campaign on which rests a great deal of the future of Asia; (2) The national condition of the people; (3) What will Christianity become in a land of shifting belief? (4) The history of the people is of singular interest.

HANTS VILLAGE COLPORTAGE MISSION.—Mr. J. H. Charlton says in his new report: "More than two hundred places have been visited by our Bible carriage; several thousands of Gospel books, Bibles, and Testaments have been sold." In an accompanying letter he writes that Ritualism is growing much faster than is conceived by Christians generally. To carry on the aggressive part of the work, which seems to be opening up on every hand, £50 is asked for to build another Bible van; also any quantity of Gospel books for free circulation. The headquarters of the Mission are at Gosport.

The Late Principal Cairns.

The death of this much-beloved Scottish theologian in Edinburgh on Saturday morning last was tragic in its suddenness, and the news of his decease has awakened universal sorrow. He recently recovered, in a measure, from severe illness, and it was only a fortnight ago that we recorded his resignation of the office of Principal of the United Presbyterian Theological College. On Friday he was seized with illness, and before the dawn of Saturday, his spirit had gone into the Silent Land. Many and earnest were the tributes of respect and affection uttered from the pulpits of Edinburgh and elsewhere last Sabbath. Rev. John Smith, of Broughton-place United Presbyterian Church (of which the late Principal was a member) said, in the course of his remarks, on Sabbath morning :—

"Of even the outstanding facts of his great career, of his personal character, in which strength and tenderness, elevation of soul and simplicity of life, the prophet's ardour and the scholar's patient industry, were so beautifully combined; of that antique Roman greatness, made up of stern self-repression, concentration on the loftiest aims, and martyr-like devotion to study, united to Christian qualities, which this generation at least has seldom seen equalled, unfeigned humility, a charity that never failed, and a magnanimity which could not brook anything that was crafty, or ungenerous, or small; of all that made him the glory of his own church, and won to him universal affection and esteem, the time is wanting to speak. As a Professor he exhibited such fulness of resource, width of intellectual view, catholicity of judgment, along with spiritual insight and devotion, as fairly carried us students away. Following him in Berwick, I had reason to know that while he had been maintaining a high intellectual life fitting himself for the onerous tasks of future years, and while as a preacher and a speaker on public questions he was making his influence felt far and wide, yet he was, in an extraordinary degree, faithful to every pastoral duty. In visitation he was laborious to a proverb. He made his people's interests his own. As a consequence he was loved as few pastors are loved. When the great revival, coincident with and consequent on Mr. Moody's first visit, reached Berwick, it caught Dr. Cairns into its strong current. He wrought in the meanest tasks with the lowliest fellow-labourers, preaching in lane and street. Yet never for a moment did he decline from his lofty self-imposed course of intellectual toil. What he has been throughout Scotland, and in the wide Presbyterian world, it were difficult fully to show. For nearly a quarter of a century in the Professoriate he has done a magnificent work, which will tell on the Church for generations."

Rev. Dr. Macgregor, of the Established Church, paid a most touching tribute to the departed, all the more impressive as coming from the minister of another section of the Church. "A man of splendid intellect, of wide experience, and of vast ability and culture, had he chosen he would have ranked among the foremost scholars and philosophers of his time. But the strong bent of his nature, by the grace of God, led him to consecrate his life to the ministry. Rarely has a whiter or purer spirit passed into the presence of his Maker than the spirit of Principal Cairns. His last words were —'None but they that openly confess Christ will be openly confessed by Him and be triumphantly glorious in his kingdom.' All over the Church, all over the Presbyterian world, there will be a solemn sadness that one has been taken away of whom we may say he was the foremost minister and preacher of the whole Presbyterian Church of Scotland, and it might be said of the whole Presbyterian Church of the world."

With childlike nature and with stalwart mind,
And a big heart,
And pure spirit, and great love for human kind,
He played a part
That few have played, and fewer still surpassed,
And won himself a name that long will last.

Philosophy he prized, and ably wrote
Of its great themes.
But, fired with quenchless zeal, for Christ he fought,
The King of kings;
And with a rushing, rugged eloquence,
Claimed loud for Him the heart's allegiance.

The rest he sought, as evening shades drew on,
Was of brief stay.
The evening calm he had so nobly won
Sped fast away.
His latest words were worthy of the man,
They told of his belief in Heaven's great plan—
A shout of victory throughout them ran.

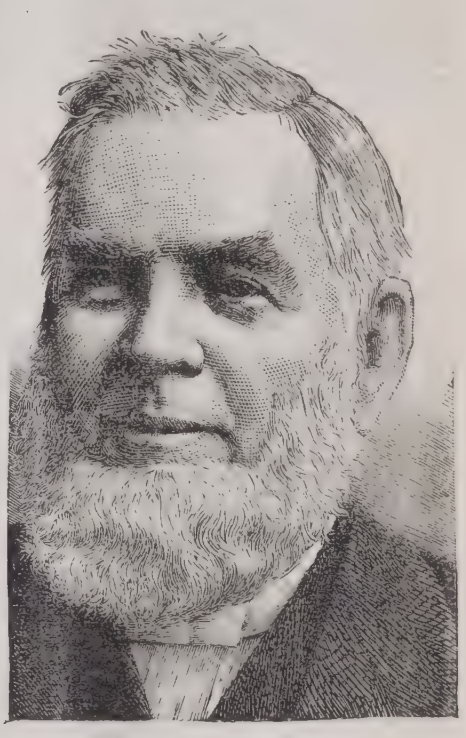
Ventnor-terrace, Edinburgh. Robert Henderson

TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS A SLAVE.

Rev. Thomas L. Johnson, returned missionary from Africa, tells a story of thrilling interest in Twenty-eight Years a Slave. (Is. Alexander and Shepheard). Born in 1836 in Virginia State, he was early removed from his parents. From his mother he learned the Lord's Prayer, and when quite young had an earnest desire to know more of the peace and joy of the religion of Christ. At the age of twenty-one, during a period of revival, he was among the many in the city of Richmond who sought the Lord. To use his own words, "Jesus found him."

Not long after the emancipation of the slaves in America, he determined to go north in the hope of gaining a livelihood and qualifying as a Christian teacher among his own race. After a time he made for the West, and settled in Chicago as pastor of the Providence Baptist Church. His special desire was to go to Africa, and the opening of his way brought him to England, where he was privileged to enter Mr. Spurgeon's College. He tells us that there he commenced his first regular course of studies at forty years of age.

After two years devoted to preparation Mr. Johnson, accompanied by his wife and Rev. C. H. Richardson and his wife, left for Africa under the auspices of the Baptist Missionary Society. Arrived at the Cameroons, they were heartily received by workers who knew the ground well. The conditions of life imposed many hardships, and involved painful experiences, one of the first of these latter being the death of Mrs. Johnson, from the African fever, after less than three months' residence in the country. Mrs. Richardson also died, and Mr. Johnson kept his bed with continued attacks of the fatal malady. From February to November, 1879, he did not enjoy good health for so long as two successive weeks. He came back to England in the hope of regaining strength, and after medical examination was advised not to return to Africa. It was deemed wise that he should resume his labours in the United States, and in going again among the coloured people there, he told of the needs of dark Africa, and awakened increased enthusiasm in the evangelisation of that Continent.



His watchword is still "Africa for Christ." He has not only advocated the cause in America, but attended meetings throughout the British Isles, delivering Gospel addresses, and endeavouring to be instrumental in raising up friends for Africa. He maintains that Africa must be evangelised by native labourers, and that the Republic of Liberia is the door to the West and East Central regions. As general financial secretary of the African Mission of the Western States and Territories for sending coloured missionaries to Africa, he is at present delivering lectures in this country, and may be addressed, care of Mrs. E. E. Stroud Smith, 134, Upper Parliament-street, Liverpool. He hopes soon to accompany two fresh workers to Africa. The extended circulation of his book will help him to effect this purpose.

The Late Rev. James Calvert.

"When he came there were no Christians, when he left there were no heathen," was written of another noble missionary, but it might not inaptly have been applied to Mr. Calvert on leaving Fiji after well-nigh thirty years' faithful labour. It is true that late in life, and with a rare devotion, he went to South Africa, and did for about ten years good service; but still the work of his life, the work nearest his heart, the work with which his name will ever be closely associated, was that at Fiji; and even as late as 1886, being then in his seventy-third year, Mr. Calvert revisited the Fijian islands, when he reported that some ninety per cent. of the native population were regular worshippers in the Wesleyan chapels.

This honoured missionary fell asleep on Tuesday, 8th inst., at Hastings, aged seventy-nine. Only a few weeks before his death he said to a friend, "I keep uncommonly well, and hope to be equal to the heavy work asked of me—to supervise the reprinting of the Bible in Fijian, the third edition."

In 1888 we gave in these pages a detailed account of his life and labours, but here we may briefly epitomise the facts.

THE LATE REV. J. CALVERT.

(From photograph by Messrs. T. C. Turner and Co., 10, Barnsbury-park, N.)

James Calvert, born in 1813, in Pickering, Yorkshire, began life as a printer. He was converted at the age of eighteen, during a serious illness, which brought him face to face with his eternal interests. Some few years after he entered the Theological Institution with a view to the ministry, and there formed a friendship with John Hunt, afterwards his co-worker in Fiji. The cry from cannibal Fiji reached the hearts of these young men, who offered and were accepted for the service. Before going forth Mr. Calvert married Mary Fowler, who went with him, stood by his side in many an hour of peril, shared his privations and hardships, rendered noble and good service, and lived to labour with him also in South Africa.

Settling at Lakemba, amongst heathen of the most savage and forbidding type, they laboured ten years. Then came the death of Mr. Hunt, whose last breath was, "Lord, for Christ's sake, bless Fiji! save Fiji!" Some years afterwards came the conversion of King Thakombau, the beginning of a whole series of Gospel triumphs.

After seventeen years of heroic labour in the islands, Mr. and Mrs. Calvert sailed for England. The chief object of their visit was that Mr. Calvert might revise the translation of the Bible, and see it through the press. Before the work was complete, it became necessary for Mr. and Mrs. Calvert to return to Fiji. A missionary on the field had died, and five young men were about to set sail for the work. What made the sacrifice all the greater was the necessity for leaving their children behind. Yet the sacrifice was unhesitatingly made. This time they settled at Levuka. Here they devoted themselves to work among the mixed population, until their return to England in 1865. For six years they lived at Bromley, Mr. Calvert devoting himself to the advocacy of the cause of Missions and the Bible Society. In 1872 Mr. Calvert was called upon to take charge of the new work in the South African Diamond Fields, and laboured there and on other South African stations until 1881. In January, 1882, Mrs. Calvert passed triumphantly away at Torquay.

Seven years ago, at the age of seventy-two, Mr. Calvert, on the occasion of the celebration of the jubilee of missions, paid his last visit to Fiji. He was greatly delighted with the progress which had been made during the twenty-one years of his absence, and in Conference, and elsewhere, bore remarkable testimony to the genuineness of the work accomplished. None who heard his simple statement of the results of Christianity could help being profoundly impressed thereby. The last few years of his life have been spent in comparative retirement at Hastings.

One who knew him well mentions an interesting fact as to his later years.

Almost the last time we saw him he was on his way to a meeting of a learned society to which he had been specially invited, "I shall give them my religious experience," said he. We smiled a little incredulously. "I always do so," said the old man, "and they like to hear it." Instinctively, whenever there was to be a great lovefeast, especially a missionary lovefeast, the people expected James Calvert to lead it. All his life amongst us since he retired from the mission-field has proclaimed, "Come, all ye that fear God, and I will tell you what He hath done for my soul."

THE HELP-ONE-ANOTHER SOCIETY.

About fourteen years ago a series of women's meetings were started in connection with the Blue Ribbon Army. Three meetings were held each week, and resulted in the formation of what is know as the Help-One-Another Society, which consists of 245 full members. There is in connection with the work a Rainy Day Club, a Maternity Society, and a Nursing Society. Many of the women are to be found giving their loving and helpful service in the homes of those whose circumstances will not allow of paid nurses.

On Monday, March 7, the annual meeting was held at Hoxton Hall when over 300 members and friends sat down to tea, after which the public meeting, presided over by Mr. W. I. Palmer, was addressed by Mrs. S. Buss, of Shoreditch, Rev. Owen Thomas, and Mr. William Noble. The report was read by Mrs. Howell, the Bible-woman and secretary of the society. The earnest spirit pervading the whole proceedings was a proof that the work of the Gospel and Temperance was making progress in this special branch of the work of the Gospel Temperance Movement.

The McAll Mission in Algiers.

Under the superintendence of Mons. Borel, the McAll Mission has four halls, in which an encouraging work is being done among the French. A number of those frequenting the meetings give evidence that they have been truly converted. A hall has also been opened for French soldiers to use as a reading-room, &c., and here it is sought to bring them under the influence of the Gospel.

A tent, capable of seating from 130 to 150 persons, has now been secured for the purpose of evangelising in the French towns and villages of Algeria, which are very dark spiritually. M. Borel hopes, accompanied by Mr. Pope, of the North Africa Mission, to begin this work when the weather is settled. They would like to take with them a portable organ and some Gospel lantern slides if someone would supply them. There is great need of French-speaking evangelists among the many thousands of French colonists.

THE NEED OF PRISON REFORM.

By CHAS. COOK.

Will there, or can there, be anything done to make our English prison system a greater success than it is? Our prisoners are, indeed, well fed and clothed, and our gaols are models, as regards sanitary rules; but on carefully comparing my notes and experience, I am just finding out some things which need ventilating. Having recently been to Scotland, and talked with some of our friends there, I find they are moving in the right direction, and will soon be asking that substantially accredited, and duly qualified Christian men and women—as honorary workers—may visit prisoners at times when their work will not be interfered with, and thus, in the mind and spirit of our Lord Jesus, bring to bear on the criminal his message of love and mercy, which I am convinced will be specially productive of good, as coming from persons who are not officially attached to the prison.

Love is the great lever which will have to be used if we are to move the rocky hearts of habitual criminals, but at present there is far less liberty accorded to qualified prison visitors and philanthropists in England, than was given me in Russia and Morocco. At the close of my lecture in the Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, the other day, an ex-warder of Chatham Convict Prison said: "You are quite right, sir, about the need of reform. Why, I once spoke in kindly tones to a convict, and he burst into tears, exclaiming: 'Oh, sir, those are the first kind words I have heard for years!'" If they could only hear of the love of Christ simply and freely told out, many a "first time" convict would be converted, and even "old lags" would be softened. Discipline only hardens, whereas kindness often softens when men are thirsting for sympathy.

Unfortunately the only person who has any right whatever to deal with prisoners spiritually is "an officer"—I mean the Chaplain, whose keys often dangle ostentatiously from his hands. I say advisedly, and I think truly, that our English prison system is constructed on the principle of punishment only. Should it not be restorative as well? There is nothing in our system calculated to reform, to restore, much less regenerate. A deputy governor of a convict establishment held a Bible-class among the men, but it had to be dropped. Souls might perish, but red tape must be upheld. "It was not the right thing," and he "was not the right person." Oh! the wretchedness of this miserable policy. There are men inside and outside of the gaols who would willingly give their services in this unsavoury and apparently unfruitful field, but law and authority — dog-in-the-manger like — step in, and says, "You are not the proper person to do this."

Scotland is certainly more ripe for this "forward movement" than England, but it would be well for thoughtful Christian men here to think over this matter. In America there are many things to deplore in prison life, but in other respects they are far ahead of us. For instance, the officers and warders in some of the States are selected for their competency and Christian character. When will England do the like? Again, there is no "cropping" of the hair, for it is considered "degrading," and everything is done to foster self-respect rather than to degrade. This is another move in the right direction. Canada is advancing with the times, apparently, for I am informed that in Kingston, Ontario, some of these very needed reforms are in actual operation.

In some of the prisons of the United States a governor, if convinced that the convict is a reformed man, and honestly wishes to do right in the future, has a right to order his discharge, though he may only have served half his sentence. England will need, first, to introduce a "Christian system," in order to bring to bear the gospel of mercy and love upon her gaol-birds, before we can give our governors the right to open their doors and let them "fly away and be at peace."

Some of us are pained at the severity of some of our judges. Recently a person guilty of robbery to a large extent and perjury, got nine months; whilst a man who stole twenty shillings was sentenced to "ten years' penal servitude." It is true he had been previously convicted, and it is equally true he had served out his sentence for his previous crime. Why should he be punished twice for one offence?

I leave shortly (D.V.) to run through two Roman Catholic countries in the hope of again scattering the Word of God among the prisoners who would not otherwise see it. If any friends wish to help they can address me at 6, Frithville-gardens, Shepherd's-bush, London, W.

REVIVAL IN THE SOUTH HAMS, DEVON.

It is always cheering and encouraging to hear of a real moving among souls, when the Holy Spirit of God awakes the dead in trespasses and sins, and breathes life. Ten years ago the large parish of Stokenham, near Kingsbridge, was the scene of a gracious work of conversion, when we took our Gospel tent into the hamlets of Ford and Kellaton. As one result, at the latter place a mission-hall was soon afterwards built, where a simple, earnest Gospel has been preached ever since.

Some of the converts also found their way among the Congregationalists at Ford, and Methodists at Hall Sands, there witnessing for Christ. The Lord of the harvest also has sent an earnest, soul-winning vicar into the parish, who, with his curates, preaches a faithful Gospel. Those who were mere boys ten years ago have now grown into young men. The evil spirit possessed them, and they attended the usual services only to create disturbance and amuse themselves in rough "horseplay." They would also insult the quieter members of the congregation with coarse and offensive observations, in going and coming.

They were made the subject of fervent prayer, and during these ten years faith was tried. Now behold the answer. A few weeks ago an earnest evangelist, Mr. Wooldridge, held a mission in the chapel at Hall Sands, and many were converted, among them some of the ringleaders in this gang of young men. Then followed the services at Bee Sands and Kellaton during the past ten days, for which prayer was asked in this paper a fortnight ago. And God has wondrously blessed. Each day there have been gracious conversions—principally among these young men—who sat in row after row, not, as formerly, "just inside the door," but now up against the platform, their serious, eager attention brightening into joy as the glad message of forgiveness and deliverance was received.

The hearts of God's people are bounding upward with thanksgiving, that they who in times past persecuted the Church are now obedient to the Word. The change in countenance, manner, and life is marked, and remarked. Prayer is desired that wisdom and grace may be given to take care of the lambs.

Scepticism in Ceylon.

Rev. J. A. Spaar, Wesleyan Methodist, Colombo, desires anti-infidel pamphlets and tracts for circulation among the ignorant and deceived among whom he labours. He writes: "Never were Buddhists and Theosophists so active as now. Free Thought and Theosophical literature is industriously scattered. I have commenced a Reading Society, and am trying with a little press to reproduce sound teaching, and circulate it among the poorer classes." Mr. Spaar adds that his Reading Society would be glad of copies of evangelical newspapers posted regularly.

LIBERAL GIVING.—Some of the Nonconformist congregations in London and the suburbs have done lately well in the matter of raising money. At Lyndhurst-road Chapel, Hampstead, of which Mr. R. F. Horton, M.A., is pastor, the contributions of the congregation amounted in 1891 to £7933. Next to this comes the Presbyterian Church at St. John's-wood (Dr. Monro Gibson's) with over £6000. Several others have reached £4000. It is announced that the stipend of the Presbyterian Church at Marylebone, now vacant by the death of Dr. Donald Fraser, will in future be about £1300 per annum.

For the Young.

LITTLE CHRISTIANS IN AMERICA.

Young readers will be interested to hear something about children's meetings in Washington, during which many were led, I believe by the Holy Spirit, to feel that they were sinners, and that Christ loved them and died for them on the cross that they might be saved.

At the first children's meeting I explained to them that our sins helped to nail Jesus to the cross, and at the close of the meeting one of the teachers found a boy six years old weeping bitterly. She asked him what was the matter? He did not seem inclined to tell at first, but finally bursting into tears, he said: "I am not going to steal any more bananas!" The teacher told me that great loads of bananas were carried often through the street near where this boy lived, and that he and other boys were in the habit of stealing them.

While I was speaking of how Christ had to bear the punishment of "our sins in his own body on the tree," the boy was so deeply affected that tears rolled down his cheeks. The teacher told him that though our sins had in one sense helped to drive the nails through the Saviour's hands, and to press the crown of thorns upon his brow, yet because He had so willingly loved us and given Himself for us, God would forgive all our sins for his sake, and change our hearts. Then she prayed with him, and the little boy prayed, and gave his heart to Christ.

The Sunday after I found this little boy as happy as a lark, and ready to tell to others what a dear Saviour he had found. Have you, my dear young friend, had your sins forgiven? Have you ever thought that it was our sins that made it necessary for Jesus to die on the cross? And have you asked God, for Jesus' sake, to forgive your sins? If not, I ask you to do it at once. In some of the services in Washington as many as thirty or forty in one meeting gave themselves to Jesus. They don't go out and steal bananas after that. Their parents testify that they show by their lives that they belong to Jesus, and are trying to please Him.

Sixteen years ago I held meetings in the same city every day for twelve weeks, and many boys and girls gave themselves to Jesus and joined the churches. During my present visit every day and night I am finding some of them at work in the inquiry meetings, trying to lead the children and men and women to Jesus. Those who become Christians when they are young are more likely to live consistent lives than such as are converted after habits of sin have become fastened upon them. So the sooner you make up your mind to become a Christian the better.

One Sunday evening a little boy was going by the church where I was preaching, with his mother, and he said: "Let us go into these meetings, for I have heard that many children in them have become Christians." He and his mother entered, and in the second meeting I noticed the little boy in tears, and yet his face was wreathed in smiles. I asked, "Have you given your heart to Jesus?" "Yes, sir!" "When did you do it?" "Just a little while ago." "Are you sure of it?" "Yes, I am sure of it. I know He loves me—He died on the cross for me—and now I love Him."

That little boy has done all he could to get his young friends to come to Jesus. His mother told me, with tears of joy, that he was now a changed boy, and she believed he had become a true Christian. A young minister, who kindly writes this at my dictation, is one of those who became a Christian in my children's meetings when he was six years old. He loves to work among the little ones, and lead them to Christ.

A son of Mr. Baker, a member of Congress, with his mother, was at one of my recent meetings. She had attended my meetings in Rochester when a girl, many years ago, and was very anxious that her dear boy should love the Saviour whom she began to love in her youth. Before the meeting closed I found him weeping for his sins; but he found how Christ atoned for all our sins on the cross, and the next day he came back with a radiant face, telling us that he believed he had been led to trust in Christ alone for salvation. CHILDREN'S MISSION AT FOREST-HILL.

Mr. T. Lewis Sayer, of the Children's Service Mission, has just concluded a series of special services for young people in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Forest-hill. The services had been originally arranged to last for twelve days, but so great was the interest aroused in the district, and so manifest were the tokens of good being done, that they were prolonged for an additional period of four days. Careful preparation had been made beforehand, and a large committee representing all Christian denominations had been formed.

The opening meeting on Sunday, February 21, was very largely attended, several of the Sunday schools of the district being present. Meetings were held during the two following weeks in the lecture hall, which was filled almost every night. Prior to the meetings each evening, a meeting for prayer was held, or special addresses to boys only and girls only were given, and these were special seasons of blessing and of refreshing. Mr. Sayer has the rare gift of drawing out the personal affection of young people to himself, and many of those who heard him, though they did not speak with him, have come to regard him as a personal friend. Requests for special prayer were abundant from the beginning of the mission, and towards its close there were mingled with these many other requests for praise because of blessings received.

WORKING-GIRLS OF LONDON.

The working-girls of London are a class demanding the warmest interest, and the most affectionate support of Christian men and women. Thousands of them know the bitterness of unsatisfied hunger, and suffer torments of mind-worry and wretchedness.

The gladness of heart of those who carry on the Homes for Working Girls in London, has been very great for the hearty interest and continued ready help afforded by so many kind friends since the first establishing of the Homes. Many a story might be told of the brightness and happiness which have lightened many a weary life since the Homes were founded, but the real results which have been attained, in consequence of the wholesome spirit of self-help which has been engendered, in the place of a dreary and dogged perseverance, can never be adequately measured.

Little need be said for the necessity of the Homes, but it is not perhaps generally realised that they have the strongest claims upon provincial support. On one occasion it was found that out of sixty-six girls who were living in one of the Homes, only nine were London born, and as a general rule, it seems that country lasses predominate. A large proportion of the population is continually gravitating towards the towns, and this is very much increased in "bad times."

The Homes, which accommodate 502 inmates, are situated in various parts of London, and are intended for girls and young women employed in the factories and workrooms of the metropolis, and who are earnestly striving to gain an honest living, but who are "homeless." Full board (i.e., breakfast, dinner, and tea) is provided at 4s. 6d. per week; the rent of bedroom accommodation (including the use of dining and sitting-rooms, supplied with a library, magazines, and newspapers) is 2s. 6d. and 4s. per week. Any respectable working-girl or young woman, who can satisfactorily substantiate her character, is eligible for admission.

In bringing a Home with bright and happy Christian influences within the reach of these toilers, this organization is doing much to make up for the grievous sins of omission and commission perpetrated against them by the giddy crowd, and is pointing out opportunities of usefulness which cannot be lightly passed by. All communications should be addressed to Mr. John Shrimpton, Honorary Director, Westminster Chambers, 3, Victoria-street, London, S.W.

GIRLS' LETTER GUILD.

The Girls' Letter Guild was begun in Birmingham about two years ago by Miss Kenward. It aims at giving factory girls instruction, sympathy, and kindly counsel for their daily life, by a system of regular and individual correspondence between cultured Christian women and themselves. Each lady in the Guild takes one girl as her charge, and writes to her regularly once a month at least, on various subjects which may interest and help her. About two thousand girls are, at present, members of the Guild, and a number are waiting to join.

Miss Kenward, writing from 280, Hagley-road, Birmingham, says: "The majority of the girls ask for a 'chapel' lady to write to them. While we have a fair supply of Church of England lady-helpers for the 'Church' girls, we have very few Nonconformist helpers. Consequently, girls have had in some cases to wait months before they can join. Will not some of your Nonconformist readers come to our aid? The monthly letter will not involve much time; and surely there are hundreds of Christian ladies who would do this much if they knew how much the help was needed."

A similar appeal comes from Leeds, where a centre of the Guild was established in August last. There are 250 girls on the books, a number of whom (principally "chapel" girls), have not yet been assigned to any lady correspondent. Full particulars may be had from the Hon. Sec. of the branch, Miss A. M. May, High Brooms, Tunbridge Wells.

The Mount Hermon Orphanage.

The annual prize-giving of the above Orphanage took place lately at 55, Cambridge-avenue, Kilburn. Over a hundred orphans and many friends of the work were present.

Mrs. Parry gave a short account of the history, progress, and methods of the Orphanage, which was founded in 1864 by her cousin, the late Miss M. A. Cole, who passed away in 1887, leaving her large family in Mrs. Parry's charge. Five hundred and ninety-four girls had passed through the homes, in which at the present time there were over a hundred orphans of all ages between three and fifteen.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, who presided, addressing the children, said he was glad to hear that nearly all of them had given their hearts to God. Those who were about to leave he asked never to forget to spend a few moments alone with Jesus every day. He also wanted them to think every morning that they must take Christ's yoke upon them; and thirdly, they must be very careful to keep their hearts clean. Every sin made a stain on their white garments, which they should at once ask the Lord Jesus to cleanse away. He also urged them to do all their work for the Master thoroughly and well, and never to let a day pass without doing a kind act for somebody.

Another hymn was then sung, and a number of prizes distributed, consisting, at the children's own request, principally of Bibles. The proceedings then closed with prayer.

NEWPORT, MON.—Our esteemed friend, Mr. J. H. Hall, reports the sixth anniversary of the Police Bible-class. Nearly one-third of the members of the force have professed Christ since the class was started. Mr. Hall says: "We have a Christian mayor (80 years of age, serving his second mayoralty) in the chair, and eight Christian members of the Town Council present. The head constable also attended, and allowed forty of his sixty-eight men off to be present; and eight of them, members of the Bible-class, testified of the grace of God."

THE SLAVE TRADE.—The news has been received at Brussels that Captain Hinck and his lieutenant, M. Ectors, who are in charge of an important expedition directed against the slave trade in Central Africa, have reached the west shore of Lake Tanganyika by following the course of the Congo. Captain Hinck will co-operate with Captain Jacques, who has reached the Lake by the eastern route. On Captain Hinck's arrival on the Tanganyika, the Arab chiefs there disbanded their native levies, which were preparing at the time to make slave raids.

PROTESTANT PARIS.—Though I regret the oversight, I am glad to find that the Y.W.C.A. has an independent branch in Paris, in addition to the one mentioned in my second paper on that city. This is situated in the centre of employment for English girls, at No. 10, Rue de la Paix, where there is accommodation for a dozen boarders, and a reading-room open every evening; on Sundays from two o'clock, when a Bible-class is held. The existence of such an institution cannot be made too widely known, and Miss Temple, the hon. sec. in charge, welcomes every young lady visiting Paris. I find that the Paris City Mission prefers to be considered an outside agency, and does not aspire to rank as a native work. Budgett Meakin.

Launching Out.

ADDRESS TO STUDENTS AND MINISTERS.

By REV. JOHN McNEILL.

"Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught."—Luke v. 4.

Our subject is "Launching out; letting down; leaving all." While these men were fishing for fish our Lord was fishing for the fishermen, and splendidly they tumbled into his net. I am face to face to-day with a company of fishermen, or intending fishermen. And, after all, Christ's great difficulty is not with the fish—the great sea of humanity; his difficulty is to get the fishermen into his hands—to teach us his ways, and get us to walk according to his instructions.

Notice how all this came about. These men had toiled all night and caught nothing. At the close of his sermon Jesus Christ asked Simon to launch out and let down the nets for a draught. His word of command is pregnant with meaning. When the Lord steps on board a man's boat, there is no more ownership or mastership with him. Christ takes command. We need to remember that when the Lord is away—and in a time of weak faith, or doubt, or formalism, He is virtually away—on board the boat. See, for instance, how we divide it up into sections and compartments. There are the rough, honest fellows in the forecastle; there are others in the waist of the ship; while the superior officers are away back on the poop-deck. But when the Master's presence is realised, the best of us is only a deck-hand; the thing for us to do is to bend our back and fish. Then there is no standing apart and looking at these rough fellows, who do not know the original documents, and to whom Jehovah and Elohim are the same thing. Honest, hard work is sublimed, by the Master's presence, into something for which the angels might well leave their blissful seats.

WE PLAY NICE GAMES

"Launch out into the deep." Alas! to a far too great extent we are timid; we are but poor shrimpers ofttimes among the shallows. There are deeps. What deeps there are in God's Word! What rocking deeps in his promises! What depths in his

ETERNAL FATHOMLESS PURPOSES!

What profound deeps in the Christ of God! The pity of it is that we think we know. We have been so long in the ministry, so long engaged in the work of fishing among souls, that we think we are journeymen now. Like Simon, we are experienced fishermen, born and bred and trained to the business. Yet the Lord Jesus Christ dared to show that He knew more about fishing than these fishermen.

It was not that there were not plenty of fish; yet the most experienced of the fishers had toiled all night and taken nothing. There is only one thing more uncertain than success in catching fish, and that is success in catching men. Here is a vivid parable for us all. Let us be like little children in the Master's hand—hearing his voice as He steps on board and the boat yields to his weight. Have we lost faith, enterprise, inventiveness, or ingenuity? He comes into our congregation, our ministry, or our church, and He bids us forget the things that are behind. "Behold, I make all things new. You will see and you will do new things. Discovery and well-directed enterprise will break out on the right hand and the left, for I have come." It is when we reach the low point of utter failure and exhaustion that we

TAP THE STRENGTH OF GOD.

The miracle of the barrel of meal comes when the meal is exhausted, and we are like to tumble in, scraping our nails along the bottom of the barrel.

"Into the deep." God has taken me away on a mighty deep. For years I hesitated and hung back, afraid to venture. I knew the inshore fishing better, and had good success; there was no need to leave it. But God can step in and cut away all fastenings, and He has launched me out into the deep. He has the same blessing for you as for me. Well may the Breton fishermen's prayer come into our mind as we launch out with Jesus, and the caller air of eternity begins to fan our faces, and the mighty swell of the ocean tide lifts the billows: "Have mercy upon me; my boat is so little and thy sea is so great."

"We have toiled all night and caught nothing." What a suggestive combination—night and nothing. And how beautiful is the combination in the next verse,

MORNING AND THE MASTER.

A splendid combination when the Master comes. "Weeping may endure for a night; but joy cometh in the morning."

Oh, for some "new business!" as the commercial traveller would say. I rejoice in this evangelistic work—"peripatetic" they call it—because there is new business in it. It is true one does not always get a cordial welcome. Some "houses" will not do business with us. Some clergymen will not look near us. In one place a brother minister (and he was not an Established Church man—one of the "Government Trawlers") intimated our meetings, but said he did not take much stock in these

"EVANGELISTIC CARPET BAGGERS."

I am not a carpet bagger. I carry the same kind of bag as my brother does himself—one in which the shirt and the sermon can both lie full-length without any damage to the starch in either!

Dear brethren, let us face the worst. Do not manufacture evidences. If souls are being saved, you will not need to be in any doubt about it, but you cannot manufacture the thing.

"Nevertheless, at thy word, I will let down the net." Simon wanted to let the Lord know that he was an authority in fishing matters, and that if this new venture was not a success he would have something to say about it later on. Just as in our Presbytery meetings there are those who reserve their right to enter a caveat when any new scheme is on hand, and to say, should it happen to miscarry: "I told you so." If brother Simon must use his breath, it would have been quite as easy for him to say "Hallelujah" as "Nevertheless." Really there would have been in Simon's doing what Christ told him, instanter, and without a single word. Christ might have said to him: "At my word 'the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water'; at my word light came, and the heavens were studded thick with stars, and the hills forsook their fixed seats." So there is not a shade of merit in implicitly, at Christ's word, doing what we never did before, or never dreamt of doing.

But suppose the fish had not come, how wise, how unbearable Simon Peter would have been. And I tell you, my brothers, we may keep the fish from coming. If the Lord sees that we are more anxious to safeguard our own reputation than to run risks for Him in a day of rebuke and blasphemy, He may leave us to our little concern for our reputation. We are desperately far astray; there is something wrong with us. This Glasgow of ours is a mighty sea, and

IT SWARMS WITH FISH.

There is no fear of the Lord doing his part. Are we ready to do ours? Of all kinds of evangelical alliances that I care for is the alliance of all the denominations flocking together for some big take of sinners. I have no objection to our Keswicks and our Retreats, and so forth; but commend to me the bringing together of the fishermen for a big haul. I sometimes wonder a little if the Lord is present in such power as we are told at some of our conferences when there is no great "take." Pentecost was a great revival of spiritual life, but it was a magnificent ingathering of souls. I must confess that, in my own spiritual life, if I ever take a step forward it is when the Lord condescends to save souls at my hand. Nothing should deepen the spiritual life more quickly, or produce greater humility, brokenness of heart, and conviction of sin, than when the Lord deigns to give some success. God grant the time may come in all our congregations when the brethren shall beckon to their partners in all the churches to come and help them in a big take. We never lose sight of our poor denominational divisions so much as when we are busy saving souls. God give us all such blessing that we shall be compelled to say: "Withhold; I can take no more." It is in the Master to do it. Oh that we could trust Him for it!

University Notes.

OXFORD.

The Principal of Wycliffe Hall (Rev. F. J. Chavasse) is preaching a course of sermons on the Sunday evenings of this term in St. Peter-le-Bailey Church. His subject is Lazarus (John xi.), and, as usual, there are large congregations.

The veteran missionary of the S.P.G., Dr. G. M. Pope, reader in Telugu and Tamil in the University, has just concluded a short course of sermons on Isaiah lv., at Holy Trinity Church, Oxford, where Rev. G. C. Bowring is fighting bravely with the sin and misery of one of Oxford's very poor parishes.

The annual meeting of the Toynbee Hall Settlement was held at Balliol on March 6, when Professor Jowett, Rev. S. A. Barnett, Lord Herschell, and Mr. Asquith, M.P., spoke. Toynbee Hall, now six years old, is the precursor of several more or less similar settlements of University men among the poor of London.

The University Missionary Union was addressed on March 8 by Rev. L. G. P. Liesching, C.M.S. missionary from Ceylon. The visit of Mr. Wilder, whose work among students in the United States is so well known, is being keenly anticipated, and prayer is asked that Oxford may respond loudly to the missionary call.

A convention of Wesleyan local preachers and class leaders was recently held in Oxford, when Rev P. Thompson, of the East London Mission, preached and addressed a public meeting. Rev. S. Chadwick, of Leeds, and other ministers also spoke. Mr. Thompson made special reference to the importance of the work in villages in relation to young people leaving home for London.

The anniversary of the Baptist Missionary Society was held on Sunday and Monday last. Sermons were preached at New-road Chapel by Rev. H. J. Thomas, of Delhi; and the meeting was addressed by Mr. R. Souttar, Rev. T. D. Landels (son of Dr. Landels), and Rev. H. J. Thomas, of Delhi. The centenary year will doubtless stir up still greater interest in this valuable Society.

The second Bampton Lecture was delivered by Bishop Barry, on Sunday last, to a large gathering of men. The text was I Cor. xv. 22, "As in Adam all die," and the subject was "Heredity." The lectures are evidently going to be "strong meat" for the listeners, and by no means addressed merely to the average undergraduate hearer. This may affect the attendance, but not the interest and value of the subsequent printed form of the lectures.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University sermon on Sunday, March 6, was preached by Rev. Dr. J. W. Hicks, Bishop-elect of Bloemfontein. He took for his text Matt. viii. 9, and spoke on the Life of Discipline.

On Friday, March 4, in the Council Chamber of the Guildhall, Rev. S. Thelwall, vicar of West Leigh, Devon, spoke for the University Protestant Union, enlarging upon great examples of Protestantism in the Bible.

The Principal of Ridley Hall concluded the course of Bible readings in the Martyn Hall on Sunday, the 6th, taking for his final subject "The Master's Use." It is because we were unready, and therefore useless vessels, that He is so often unwilling to use us. He only uses for honour the one that is clean and pure for his service.

Bishop Barry addressed a meeting of members of the University on Monday evening last week on "Some Phases of Unbelief." The Henry Martyn Hall was crowded. Sir Gabriel Stokes, M.P., who presided, distinguished disbelief, the denial of faith, and misbelief, the corruption of faith. Charles Darwin, in his later years, confessed that he had lost all reverence and adoration—a statement which, though nobly candid, was very significant.

On Sunday evening Mr. Moule concluded his series of sermons on Ps. xxxii., taking verses 10 and 11. "Many sorrows...to the wicked," not necessarily the open sinner, but the one who has pulled away the shoulder when He touched them. What a thin partition keeps the inroad, in God's mercy, of many sorrows from invading the soul. "He that trusteth." How much the Bible has to say about "trusting." The Christian's life is all shut up in "I trust." "I cannot, but I come to Him who can." Shall we take our place among the trusting ones? People so trusting are not made languid by it. "Mercy shall compass him." Mercy behind—the past under the blood. Mercy before—the future in his hands. Mercy on either side—the present all cared for. V. 11. A call for joy. "I will be glad in the Lord." Why should it not sometimes be that a Christian speak his joy? 1. In the Lord, not in what we are or in our experience, but in Him who never changes is the reason for joy. 2. The power of Christian joy. You cannot manufacture it—it must come of knowing Him.

THEATRICAL EMPLOYEES.—Since the opening of the Olympia in December last Mr. Wm. Forbes has from time to time, as funds permitted, entertained at tea the women and girls employed in the ballet in the Iron Room, St. Mary's, West Kensington. About one hundred generally accept the invitation, and from the earnest manner in which they sing the hymns and listen to the Gospel invitation one feels that this work is being blessed to many lives.

THE LATE MR. WILLIAM TAYLOR,

THE "NAVVY EVANGELIST."

AS Harlan Page from the carpenter's bench, and William Carey from the cobbler's stool, were, a century ago, called to be mighty winners of souls, so in later days have we seen John McNeill brought from the railway platform, and William Taylor from the navvy's hut to be used of God in the same glorious service. The earnest Christian lady, who, when Hampstead Junction Railway was being constructed, sacrificed personal comfort in order to reach the poor neglected navvies with the Gospel, little dreamed that one of these reckless men was a chosen vessel of God, whom she was to be the honoured means of calling. Thus the potentialities of Christian service, on which we have so often heard Mr. Moody insist, find in our present sketch fresh and stirring illustration.

WILLIAM TAYLOR was born in 1834 at Middleton Cheney, a Northamptonshire village; his father being a sober, industrious farm-labourer, who worked for over forty years on one farm. Young William early showed a wild and restless disposition, becoming the leader in michief among the village lads. His educational advantages were but meagre, as he was sent to a small school in the village for a few weeks only, and most of that time played truant. To keep him employed, his father sent him, when but seven years old, to scare crows; but finding this life irksome, the boy soon left it.

His cherished desire was to seek his fortune in London; so at about the age of fourteen he packed up a little bundle, and trudged off on foot for the great city. En route he worked awhile in the brickfields at Aylesbury, and then resumed his tramp to the metropolis, where he found employment as a navvy on the new railways under construction. Getting on fairly well, he returned in a few years to his village home to be married, bringing his young wife with him to the humble railway hut.

A little later on, a mêlée over a raffle brought him into the hands of the police, when he and others were fined. Afterwards, he was wont to say that this incident first led him to think seriously of his course of life, fearing what might befall his wife and child if he got into prison.

Neither Navvy nor Railway Missions had been thought of in those days; but ever there have been faithful servants of Christ seeking to do good as they had opportunity. So it came to pass that a devoted lady began visiting the navvy huts on the Hampstead Junction Railway, distributing tracts and speaking earnestly to the men and their wives. Taylor noticed particularly that she came whether the weather was fine or foul, and this led him to consider that there must be something in religion to induce a lady to tramp through mud and snow to visit a lot of drunken, swearing navvies. Thus stirred to think, he ventured to go to a little Gospel meeting, where, to his surprise, he found that one of the speakers was the very policeman who, a little while before, had arrested him. Moreover, with the instinct of the "Force," the constable recognised his man, and as Taylor, at the close, rose to go he found his former captor by his side, begging him to wait a minute and talk matters over. After prayer and conversation as to the Way of Life, they parted, and for some days a great struggle went on in the navvy's mind. He felt himself a lost, helpless sinner, but could not understand how God could save him. One day, while working on the line (just where Finchley-road Station now stands) light broke into his soul, and, dropping his tools, he ran to his hut, shouting to his astonished wife, "Thank God, I've got it! The Lord has saved me!" Falling on his knees he offered his first prayer—one of thanksgiving. Mr. Taylor at once began to witness for God, amidst the persecution and ridicule of his ungodly mates. Soon he became a colporteur, and set himself resolutely to learn to read and write, sitting up late after his day's work was over. It was a hard task, but he felt amply rewarded when, by-and-by, he found himself able to read the wonderful words of life. It soon became apparent that the converted navvy had a remarkable gift for preaching the Gospel, and his services were sought far and wide. Hence, though successful as a colporteur, he felt called to give himself entirely to preaching the Gospel. Nor was he ashamed to learn. Many must recall how in these days, when reading the Scriptures on the platform, he would, on coming to a hard word, spell it out, and turn to some one, saying: "What does that word spell?"

(From a photograph by Mr. J. D. Cooper, Montague House, Kingston-on-Thames.)

A good deal of his early work was done connection with Mr. Henry Varley's tabe nacle, and he often confessed he owed muc to this servant of God.

By-and-by the fame of this humble preach attracted the attention of Captain W. Smith, then stationed with his regiment Hythe, and the navvy was invited by him preach at this place. When, afterwards, Ca tain Smith became Honorary Secretary of th Evangelisation Society (then in its infancy William Taylor was accepted as one of its fir working-men evangelists, and his connectio with this Society (so greatly owned an blessed by God) continued for upwards twenty-five years, being only severed by th hand of death.

From his first missio the navvy became famous a an evangelist. His preach ing was with power, an many signs of God's bless ing rested on his labour As a result, Taylor's se vices were greatly in de mand, and whether in villag or town, souls were save and the Lord's people en couraged. Possessed of determined will, and un shaken confidence in hi Father's promises, he tri umphed where many woul have failed. Some of hi greatest successes were ac complished where disaste had been prophesied. Hi best missions were gene rally those in which al denominations united wit the object of bringin the masses to hear the Gos pel. Such seasons were indeed times of refreshin from the presence of th Lord, and resulted in a rich harvest of precious souls.

Mr. Taylor has preache in every county of England and in many parts of Scot land, Ireland, and Wales His missions at Oxford Southampton, Plymouth Manchester, Liverpool, Bir mingham, Gloucester, Bur ton-on-Trent, York, and Cambridge, will never be forgotten by those who took part in them. In rural parts the country people would walk many miles to and from the services.

On one occasion Mr. Tay lor was on his way to preach when he was accosted by a man going in the same direction. "I hear a navvy is going to preach to-night." "Yes," replied Mr. Taylor, "I have heard the same, and am going. Where are you bound for?" "Well," said the stranger, "you see, I'm a bit of a discussionist, and I am going to ask this navvy a few knotty questions that he cannot answer. I'm going the same way as you." At length they arrived at the hall, which was filling rapidly. Taylor suggested that his friend should take a front seat so that he might hear the navvy better, and then calmly mounted the platform and conducted the service. At the close he told the audience that there was a friend present who had some questions to ask him. He would now give him the opportunity. It is needless to state that the "friend" was dumb with astonishment and had no question to ask that night.

Infidels and other enemies of the Gospel found very little success in disturbing Mr. Taylor's meetings, as his ready wit was always more than a match for the infidel's arguments, for he was never at a loss for a reply. The navvy usually secured the goodwill and sympathy of his audiences by his own homely style, in such a manner that the people resented any interference with his preaching.

A very gracious work of grace took place at the Public Hall, Croydon, in 1877. Night after night the inquiry-rooms were crowded with anxious souls, and scores decided for Christ. Many years after a gentleman met the navvy in another part of England, and told him with joy how he was brought to God through his message at Croydon.

At a mission Mr. Taylor held in a tent on Glasgow-green his heart was gladdened by the salvation of a poor, wretched woman, who had determined to take her own life by means of poison. She was led to enter the tent one evening, and God blessed the simple testimony to her salvation. She left that tent rejoicing in the finished work of Christ. Many similarly striking incidents might be given of remarkable conversions which took place at his numerous missions.

At a place in Kent where the navvy evangelist had concluded a very successful mission, crowds lined the streets to bid him farewell. The late Duchess of Kent, who happened to be driving through the streets, stopped her carriage, shook hands with Mr. Taylor, and spoke kindly to him, giving him also a bunch of flowers and a present for his wife.

Mr. Taylor was, without doubt, one of the most successful working-men preachers of his day. He knew his Bible thoroughly, and used the sword of the Spirit well. The secret of his success under God lay in the simplicity and clearness with which he preached the saving truths of the Gospel. He was endowed with native eloquence and homeliness of delivery, which carried his message to the hearts of his audiences. He appeared to be able to make them weep or laugh at pleasure.

As time rolled on, his great platform efforts began to tell upon his robust constitution. Acting under strict medical orders, he gave up prolonged missions, and preached only on Sundays, or when his health permitted. This retirement from active service was to him a sore trial. Realising that his life was drawing to a close, he began to set his house in order, and consider the welfare of the dear ones he was soon to leave. Living as he did, prepared to hear his Master's call at any moment, the shadow of death had no terrors to him, and his happy presence and cheery words continued to gladden all around him.

It may be truly said of William Taylor that "he died in harness," as he preached at the Mission Hall, Fulwell, for the last time on Sunday afternoon, January 10, 1892, from 1 Peter ii. 6 and 7, Christ, the chief cornerstone, and his preciousness to believers, being the topic upon which he dwelt with great sweetness and delight. His son, Noah Taylor, preached in the evening, when his father read and expounded the 91st Psalm, which was his last public act of service. On the following Tuesday, whilst engaged in writing a letter, he was suddenly struck with apoplexy, and, after being unconscious for ten hours, passed peacefully into the presence of his Lord and Master.

It may be well to mention that Mr. Taylor leaves a widow, one daughter, and four sons. Two of the latter—Messrs W. J. Taylor and Noah Taylor—are preachers of the Evangelisation Society. The daughter is the wife of Mr. W. Dixon, of Gordon School, Kingston-on-Thames, and formerly a Baptist missionary at the Cameroons, West Africa.

This review of one taken from humble life and used greatly to the glory of God may well be concluded with a stanza of which he was very fond, and which in the memory of many lingers as his parting message:—

Hark! hark! my Lord and Master calls me,
All is well.
I soon shall see his face in glory,
All is well.
Farewell! dear friends. Adieu! Adieu!
I can no longer stay with you,
My glittering crown appears in view.
All is well. All is well.

THE NAVVY MISSION.

Perhaps no mission is so little known to the Christian public as the Navvy Mission Society, founded in 1878. Navvies are employed in every part of our land constructing railways, canals, docks, reservoirs, &c. Formerly they were utterly neglected, and were a heathen class in our midst. They had no mission-room, school, or hospital, but nearly always a drinking shanty. They were, and still are, by the wandering condition of their lives, outside the reach of Christian ministrations.

Now, in every public works there is, where needed, a mission room and missionary; day, night, and Sunday schools; divine services; prayer and temperance meetings; reading rooms, &c. Every year, 128,000 copies of the Navvies' Letter, and an immense number of tracts, besides forty-two good libraries, are circulated. The Gospel has been taken to the men, and tens of thousands are under its influence. The number of attendances at services, meetings, &c., during 1891 was 526,934. As a result of the efforts put forth the whole navvy class has been raised. Wherever they wander the Mission goes with them, and they look for it everywhere. The once miserable huts are now comfortable, the children taught, and all the conditions of life are improved. Thousands of lives have become reformed, and besides those influenced for God outside it, we number six hundred members in the Christian Excavators' Union—men who confess Christ, and are willing to suffer persecution for his sake.

All this, under God, has been done by our missionaries, themselves working-men. The Society employs two secretaries, who organise the missions and superintend and visit the forty missionaries, whose work takes them out "in all weathers," walking great distances. Any Christian worker will sympathise with the labour of such a life. But the Society is so poor that even a holiday cannot be afforded these men, and under all the strain of their anxious life there is nothing to look forward to. Two of our best men, who have refused offers of far higher pay if they would leave the Mission, which had been the means, by God's blessing, of leading them to the Saviour, came, a short time ago, to us with the inquiry, "When we break down or get too old to work, can the Mission, after all these years, allow us 10s. a week to keep us from the workhouse?" And what could we reply? Only, "We have no pension fund; every penny we receive we need to carry on the constantly-growing work. We have insured your lives for £100 in case of death, for your families." Most earnestly the committee appeals to all those who love the Lord Jesus Christ and heed his commandments, to "go out into the highways and hedges," to assist us in this strait. If the sum of £5000 could be now invested, we should be able to promise small pensions, when they were worn out, to these devoted men. The missionaries preach the pure Gospel which, from personal experience, they know brings salvation. The Hon. and Rev. R. Grimston, Latchford, Warrington, and Mrs. C. Garnett, Princess-road, Ripon, are the honorary secretaries.—Faithfully yours,

Elizabeth Garnett.

BIBLE SCENES.—Rev. W. E. White writing of life in Santalia says:—It is interesting to see many things which recall Bible scenes and explain graphically Scripture statements. The women draw water from the wells and carry away the pitcher on their heads; the men, with a stick upon their shoulders, bear a divided load—such is the custom. They are to be seen winnowing, and the chaff is carried away on the wind. Women are seen grinding at the mill. You understand how easily a man can take up his bed and walk. You realise the significance of the promise: The sun shall not smite thee by day; and you learn to know what is meant by a thirsty land where no water is.

MISS ROBINSON'S WORK.

The annual report of Miss Robinson's work among soldiers and sailors is very interesting. The history of the Soldiers' Institute at Portsmouth, from its commencement in 1874, is declared to be one of continuous blessing amid much opposition and difficulty. The additional branches include a private temperance hotel, the Sailors' Welcome, mission buildings, restaurant, Gospel Hall, and the Alexandria Institute in Egypt. At the present time over four hundred women are in the mothers' meetings, while nearly one thousand children and young people are in the Bands of Hope. Forty meetings of various kinds are held every week; the young soldiers are taught trades and athletics, and provided with all the advantages of a club and home. Book-packets and letters are sent by post to all regiments, both at home and abroad; and large numbers, including wives and families of the soldiers who do not stay in the town, are helped and cheered and influenced for good through the systematic visitation of the vessels in port.

During last year the work of the Institute was vigorously maintained. Two ladies have devoted their evenings to the recreation-room, to teach music, chess, knitting, and the like; registering pledges, receiving savings, lending library books, &c. Then comes the Bible-class or Gospel service; then family prayers, making the Institute to be "Home, sweet home"; and, best of all, it is added, "God is with us." "Many hundreds of the soldiers have learned here to know the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and not a week passes without some new recruits being won for Him." Two Scripture readers constantly visit the barracks room by room, also the hospitals, cells, and distant forts, besides assisting the ladies in the troopship work.

The report further declares that it is of the utmost importance to the country at large that every effort to benefit our soldiers in every way should be well sustained, inasmuch as thirty thousand of them are sent back into civil life every year, and will be "sure to leave the Army either better or worse." The deep and real impression which Miss Robinson's love and efforts for the soldiers' welfare, both soul and body, have made is seen in the following extract:—"I am interested often in seeing soldiers from India who come here 'just to see Miss Robinson'; strangers, who have heard of the Institute from others (I often wish I were better worth seeing); they are solemnly ushered into my presence, sunburnt, shy, grave men, who stand in a perfectly stiff attitude, and gaze intently; my efforts to put them at their ease are totally unavailing, but I trust they go away gratified by a warm shake of the hand; they certainly put their feelings into that." Deeply interesting also is the chapter on "Reminiscences," showing that what is now a reaping in joy was formerly a sowing in tears, and a hard struggle. The report concludes with a note of praise "from all our workers to our gracious God." Communications may be addressed to Miss Robinson, The Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

A RETROSPECT.

Is it a vision, or is it a dream?
I know not, for "things are not what they seem."

'Tis a cold grey morn, and I think I stand
Alone, in the midst of a desert land.

I can see no tree—no flower will grow:
Ah, me! I remember I would not sow.

2 Cor. ix. 6.

Others were busy, their gardens are bright;
Alas! for me, only mildew and blight.

Gal. vi. 7.

The Master had called, but I would not go;
Oh! how can I reap? I refused to sow!

He bade me some precious seeds to set;
I answered, "I go," but not yet! not yet!

Many were patiently kneeling around,
Putting dull brown seeds into dull brown ground.

Their ground now is full, the harvest they wait,

John iv. 36.

While I stand and mournfully cry, "Too late!"

ALL-DAY CONFERENCE IN GLASGOW.
